Democrat Frank R. Licht, a former state judge, streaked to a total of 178,024 votes with 94 per cent counted, in an upset over three term Republican Gov. John H. Chafee who had 165,291.

DeSimone, the lone Republican statewide leader, had 148,187 votes to Brosco's 138,430 with 83 per cent of the vote counted.

Demonstrations Mark Election Day In 1968

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Antiwar pickets and Election Day demonstrators marched in a number of American cities Tuesday, and Sen. Edmund Muskie went to the polls in Maine to the protest chant of "free elections now."

There was a brief battle in Newark, N.J., between demonstrators and counterprotesters. Across from the White House in Washington, police arrested about 100 paraders. In New York, after a Union Square rally, groups invaded midtown, including Rockefeller Center, and there were more than 70 arrests.

While there were scattered incidents elsewhere in the country, at nightfall they had fallen far short of the large-scale massive protests mapped in advance of the election.

At Ohio State University in Columbus, student extremists paraded with an empty plywood coffin, which they said symbolized the death of American politics in Tuesday's election. They later burned campaign posters and nominated a black and white spotted pig as their choice for president.

The incidents were intended to emphasize the protesters' claim that the choice among presidential candidates made the 1968 election "a fraud."

Militant antiwar groups and student radicals, in advance of election day, had called for demonstrations "in city streets all over the country." However, their leaders had said they did not intend to disrupt the voting.

In Waterville, Maine, Muskie and his wife, Jane, voted the straight Democratic ticket, on which he is the vice-presidential candidate.

About 175 college students from the area shouted and waved signs reading "Choice". Muskie said the demonstration did not disturb him.

Dem. Retain Senate Control But Lose Four Seats To GOP

WASHINGTON (AP) - Democrats easily retained control of the Senate in Tuesday's voting but lost four of their seats to the Republicans and were trailing in others.

Prospects were that the Senate majority party would lose a net of about six seats. Such an outcome would mean a 57-43 Democratic majority in the Senate of the 91st Congress.

Re-election victories for Sens. Warren G. Magnuson of Washington and Alan Bible of Nevada gave the Democrats their 50th and 51st seats.

The first overturn in the 32 seats at stake came in Maryland where Charles McC. Mathias, a four-term GOP Congressman, ousted Democratic Sen. Daniel B. Brewster, bidding for a second term. Independent George P. Mahoney trailed badly.

Rep. Edward Gurney, a Republican defeated former Florida Gov. Leroy Collins handily to give the GOP a second overturn. Gurney won the post being vacated by Sen. George A. Smathers, D-Fla.

Sen. Abraham A. Ribicoff of Connecticut gave a lift to the Democrats by winning handily in his fight for a second term. He defeated former Rep. Edwin H. May, Jr.

In Kentucky, Jefferson County Judge Marlow W. Cook held the Senate seat for the Republicans by narrowly defeating Katherine Peden. Cook will succeed Republican Sen. Thruston B. Morton, who retired.

Later a familiar GOP figure, Barry Goldwater, gave his party another overturn by reclaiming the Arizona seat he left to run for president four years ago.

Republicans also were bidding to take over Democratic seats in Pennsylvania and Ohio.

Long Lists Of Local Issues Complicated Many Bℓ Ballots

WASHINGTON (AP) - Measures ranging from liquor to taxes to voting ages were decided in at least 33 states Tuesday.

Long lists of local issues complicated many ballots, delaying some results until late Wednesday.

Georgia, for instance, had a voluminous ballot containing 23 constitutional amendments, including a change in the method of electing the governor. It was designed to prevent two-governor deadlocks.

Alabama and Florida voted on amendments to let their governors serve two consecutive terms.

New Hampshire voters had the most novel local question-whether or not to retain in their state constitution a clause permitting the governor the right to declare war without the sanction of the U.S. Congress.

Pennsylvania voted on a proposal to provide bonus payments for Vietnam war veterans.

Illinois' proposal to float $1 billion in bonds to pay for water and air pollution, and water recreation programs, was the biggest money measure.

But New Jersey decided a $99 million bond issue, the biggest in that state's history.

Semidry Utah voted on liquor-by-the-drink, while Nevada, the neighbor gambling state, had to decide on a provate lottery which proposed giving 3 per cent of the profits to the state.

Also out West, Oregonians were called on to affirm state owaership of ocean beaches and buy back property now in private hands.

Among 14 local measures on Washington's ballot was that seeking authority for police to give blood and breath tests to drinking drivers.

Hawaii, along with Nebraska, voted on proposals to lower the voting age, Hawaii to 18, Nebraska to 19.

Whether the state should exempt itself from the federal requirement of daylight saving time was a question in Michigan.

UMass SDS Casts Votes With Their Feet Amherst College Fails To Give Support

By ROSE MILLER
Staff Reporter

"Voting with their Feet," about 150 people, the majority of whom were from Students for a Democratic Society (SDS), marched to Amherst College where additional protestors failed to join the UMass organized group.

The UMass group assembled at noon yesterday on the front steps of the Student Union, and tried to recruit marchers. A jug band created some spirit at the Student Union and on the walk through the Southwest Complex, although the general reaction of the onlookers was hostile.

On arriving at Converse Memorial Library of Amherst College, the marchers circled the grounds and returned to sit down on the front steps of the library.

The major speakers on the library front steps were Tom Bell, a member of the regional staff of SDS and Vernon Giuzzard, a organizer of SDS in New England.

Bell said, "the basic theme of the march is to point out the contradiction of our way of living, and the potential way to live." To this statement why the group was "Voting with their Feet" Giuzzard added, "the problem is economic conditions, we must change the capitalistic system which produces these economic conditions."

The UMass SDS group had hoped to be supported by groups coming from Amherst College, Williams College along with other Western Massachusetts colleges, but the other SDS chapters did not arrive and only a few individuals from Amherst College decided to join the gathering.

In the middle of the speeches, the audience began to split up and 15 people walked over to one of voting polls located on Kellogg Avenue. Two gentlemen handing out literature on the death penalty issue advised the protestors that they had to remain 150 feet from the building containing the voting polls.

The group abided by the rule and did not attract much attention from the people in the area. Most of the people approaching the polling area either ignored them or found another way to the building.

Singer Daniels Stabbed in Back In Latin Quarter

NEW YORK (AP) - Singer Billy Daniels, famed for his rendition of "That Old Black Magic," was stabbed in the back Tuesday night while performing on stage at the famed Latin Quarter.

Police said they captured the alleged assailant minutes after the stabbing and reported he told them Daniels "is a friend of mine and owes me money."

Daniels, 54, a Negro, was taken to Roosevelt Hospital, where a spokesman said he was in satisfactory condition.

Police identified the suspect as Theodore Harman, 43, of Manhattan, also a Negro.

Police said the assailant jumped up on stage while Daniels was singing, forced him to the side, and, as 75 patrons looked on, stabbed twice with a switchblade knife.

U.S. Delays Opening of Talks As V.C. Urge Start Without Saigon Talks

PARIS (AP) - The United States was forced Tuesday to put off the opening session of enlarged Vietnam peace talks because of South Vietnam's refusal to attend and a lack of agreement on procedures.

The rebel Viet Cong challenged the Americans to proceed without the South Vietnamese representatives, but U.S. delegation sources made it clear Washington would not agree.

"The U.S. delegation can represent both the U.S. government and the Saigon administration," the National Liberation front negotiator, Mrs. Nguyen Thi Binh, told a news conference.

"Therefore," she added, "we are ready to meet with only three delegations present"-the United States, North Vietnam and the NLF.

The first enlarged four-sided meeting was to have been held Wednesday, a date advanced by President Johnson when he called a bomb halt last Thursday.

The refusal of South Vietnamese President Nguyen Van Thieu to delegate an envoy to the conference prompted the U.S. delegation to announce the postponement.

"We continue to consult with the Republic of South Vietnam on this matter, and are hopeful that its delegation to these forthcoming talks will arrive in the near future," U.S. spokesman William J. Jorden said.

"As soon as a date for the first meeting is decided, it will be announced promptly."

U.S. sources said the meeting was called off on American initiative. They said the North Vietnamese had shown no interest in holding a two-party session. The Americans said they had no intention of attending three-cornered talks with Hanoi and the NLF.

The enlargement of the talks to include the four main fighting parties in Vietnam was part of the American peace package that included the halt of U.S. attacks on North Vietnam and Hanoi's tacit acceptance of mutual deescalation.

This meant the presence of the NLF, and thus Thieu's boycott.

"We came here as an independent and equal participant in a four-party conference," Mrs. Binh said.

The next step is agreement between the U.S. and North Vietnamese-the two delegations which opened the peace talks May 13 on matters of procedure and agenda. Jorden said the Americans already had begun talking about this in secret with Hanoi's envoys.

This was Jorden's first acknowledgement that confidential talks with the North Vietname e were under way.

Mrs. Binh, who arrived here from Moscow Monday, seemed to be staking out an independent NLF view, however, when she told newsmen the front will not discuss a cease-fire until South Vietnam's political future has been settled.

Lack Of Educ. Enrichment Major Problem Of N.Y. Negroes

One of the most serious problems in the education of New York City's Negro schoolchildren is "a lack of educational enrichment in their homes," a conference of local Baptist ministers was told yesterday.

"In the homes of some of our children," Mrs. Claudia H. Ward, an administrative assistant at Public School 154 said, "there are four television sets but not a single dictionary.

"I get the feeling that poverty has nothing really to do with this problem," she added. "There is just too much emphasis in the home on things that are not educational, and that hurts us as much as Albert Shanker or the Board of Education."

Mrs. Ward was enthusiastically applauded by the 50 or so ministers present at the Second Canaan Baptist Church, at 111th Street and Lenox Avenue, and her remarks were "concurred with" by the Rev. C. Herbert Oliver, the president of the embattled Ocean Hill-Brownsville governing board, who also spoke to the conference participants.

Mrs. Ward, who used parts of a speech she has previously given to educational groups, said that Negro parents sometimes place "too much emphasis" on such things as school clothing and not enough on seeing to it that their children learn in the schoolroom.

"Parents seem to make sure that a child is wearing red socks to match a red dress or red shirt, but they do not put enough of their money into things that are educationally sound," she said.

As Mr. Oliver listened, and nodded what appeared to be assent, Mrs. Ward said that Negro parents were not sufficiently involved in their schools - and not simply in the sense of demanding community control as part of decentralization.

"Real involvement," she said, "also means talking to your children and showing them right from wrong in school and out. A lot of times children will say nastily to a teacher, 'My mommy said you can't touch me'."

She said she was also shocked at the ability of even preschool children to curse violently and defy a teacher's instructions.

"And when the parents come to school," Mrs. Ward said, "they often take it out on the teacher, be she black or white, and the child thinks it can do no wrong. Instead, the parents should take the children into the kitchen and give them a workover."

Mrs. Ward asked the ministers to call upon parents in their churches to "assume their responsibilities for their children."

"Mothers ought to get up in the morning with their children," she said, "and give them a kiss and tell them to go to school to make Mommy and Daddy proud - not turn over when their child comes in and tell them to get out so Mommy and Daddy can sleep."

Mr. Oliver, after a brief discussion of his board's problems over the past weeks, attacked the teachers' union for "treating our children like machines" and for "trying to destroy the (Negroes) male image."

He said that teachers on strike are "turning their backs" on the city's children as if they were not children but stamp presses or drills.

"And you know," he said, "what happens when you turn your back on a child. Things are different when you turn back to him again."

Mr. Oliver said that the union demand that seven principals in the district be removed from their jobs was a manifestation of the white man's attempt to "destroy our male image." He said that Negro and Puerto Rican children need to see a man of their own race in a position of authority.

MIT Committee Recommends Awol Soldier Give Lectures

The Committee on Educational Policy at MIT recommended Monday that an AWOL sanctuary soldier be allowed to attend classes and give lectures.

John M. O'Conner, 19, who has been in sanctuary for a week, will be confined to the sanctuary site in the Student Union.

MIT Provost Jerome Wiesner said O'Conner's presence in other campus classrooms could "raise security problems."

Despite opposition from Resistance members who contend that O'Conner should attend classes or lectures in any campus building, Wiesner said, "We're trying to avoid a confrontation. There are those who disapprove of sanctuary who might object if he appears in classes."

Weisner described the CEP decision as "fuzzy, but representing a consensus of the faculty." Under the plan, O'Connor could be invited to lecture by a faculty member.

O'Connor is expected to be arrested by Federal authorities. He went AWOL from his Army post Sept. 14.

The 15 faculty members of the CEP are sharply split over the sanctuary. According to several faculty members, many professors are strongly opposed to O'Connor's presence.

Resistance leaders voted Monday to move the sanctuary from the second floor lecture room to the fourth floor.

Some Resistance members feel the fourth floor offers tighter security, and the lecture room is needed for the Junior Prom to be held next Friday.

The Sheatses, also hired as election clerks in the district reported their vote.

Narcotics Director Talks On Drug & Abuse And Effect

Friday, November 8, Richard Callahan will speak to students on the issue of drug abuse and effects. Mr. Callahan is the New England Director of the U.S. Bureau of Narcotics and Dangerous drugs, and he will come from Boston to deliver his talk in the Student Union Ballroom at 8:00 P.M.

Mr. Callahan will point out some of the dangers of Narcotic abuse, as well as a great deal of information which has only recently been discovered pertaining to Marijuana and several other drugs. The maximum number of seats will be available in the ballroom.

There will be limited amounts of literature passed out about narcotics, and there is no charge to attend or for the literature. Mr. Callahan will be glad to answer any questions after his speech.

Presidential and Puffton Residents Plead Safeguards

JOHN HICKEY
News Editor

Residents of the Presidential and Puffton apartment complexes appeared before yesterday's meeting of the Amherst Board of Selectmen to plead for more safeguards for their children.

Paul Killam, speaking for the residents, said that there had been five accidents in the area in recent months and that little had been done in the meantime to correct several contributing factors. Curves on North Pleasant Street and hedges on private property tend to hamper visibility.

Mr. Killam presented a petition signed by most of the residents of the Presidential apartments and a large number of Puffton residents as well. The prime request of the petitioners was the installation of a sidewalk on the west side of North Pleasant Street.

The chief concern of the residents is the safety of children returning to the apartments from Marks Meadow School. In their report, the apartment residents stated that twenty-six children live in each of the apartment complexes. A total of forty-seven children walk northward on North Pleasant Street from Marks Meadow School daily.

Mr. Torre told the representatives of the area in reply that an appropriation of $5,000 had been made at the last town meeting for the purpose of constructing a sidewalk at the site in question. Although originally planned to begin at Old Town Road, revised plans now call for the sidewalk, to start at Berkshire Road, opposite the School of Education and Marks Meadow School, and extend as far as possible with the allotted funds. Although the walk will not be paved until next spring, it should be available as a walkway by Christmas.

In addition to beginning construction on the sidewalk, the selectmen ordered that signs be erected warning approaching drivers of the school crossing.

Jordan Lifts Curfew In Amman, Indicates Palestinian Agreement

AMMAN, Jordan (AP) - The government lifted a curfew over Amman at midnight Tuesday amid indications that King Hussein had reached an agreement with rebellious Palestinian commandoes.

Palestinian guerrilla sources in Damascus, Syria, reported an agreement had been reached during a meeting between Hussein and leaders of four commando groups in Jordan. They said the commando leaders telephoned the news from the royal palace in Amman, but there was no official Jordanian confirmation.

Machine-gun bursts sounded in scattered sections of this capital city Tuesday night, but they were believed to be warning shots for curfew violators.

The government had lifted the curfew earlier in the day, then reimposed it and later called it off again.

Outside Amman, a fire broke out near a camp housing Palestinian refugees. It was believed to have been connected with the two-day confrontation between Hussein and the dissident guerrillas.

In Damascus, Syria, representatives of guerrilla groups operating in Jordan said that a bloody showdown between Hussein's army and the commandos was inevitable.

One representative asserted that the situation in Amman was explosive and the country was "teetering on the brink of civil war."

The Jordanian army remained on the alert.

Amman authorities said they had arrested the ringleaders of the Victory Phalanges, a splinter guerrilla group accused of setting off Monday's fighting, and the army continued to round up suspected elements.

The governmeat accused the group of being paid agents of a foreign power, which it did not identify, whose aim was to stir up civil strife in Jordan rather than to fight the common enemy, Israel.

Jewish Film 'Dybbuk' Will Be Shown With Subtitles At Smith

NORTHAMPTON - The Jewish film "The Dybbuk" will be shown at 8 p.m. Wednesday (November 6) in McConnell Hall on the Smith College campus.

A Yiddish language film with English subtitles, "The Dybbuk" is an adaptation of a story by the late Polish Jewish author, S. Ansky. The second in a series entitled "Portraits of a Vanishing Era: Jewish Life in Eastern Europe," "The Dybbuk" is sponsored by the B'nai B'rith Hillel Foundation at Smith College and Amherst College in cooperation with the Northampton Jewish Cultural Center. It is open to the public.

In the story, an evil spirit, a dybbuk, enters the soul of a beautiful young girl. An intensely pious rabbinical student calls upon the mystic "kabbalah" to help her and the rabbis themselves assemble a high court to drive away the evil spirit.

Already translated into ten languages, "The Dybbuk" has been performed by many theater companies. Upon the premiere of the film, the New York Post said, "By far the finest Yiddish film shown here. It should immediately be placed on the 'must' list of those who enjoy unusual and exceptional movies."

Drive Will Begin Tonight To 'Keep Biafra Alive'

A campus drive, sponsored by the Martin Luther King, Jr. Council for Social Action Committee, to Keep Biafra Alive will begin with a Wednesday night candlelight vigil in the four complex areas.

Literature will be distributed at that time regarding the fund drive and a request for political action. Funds will be collected at this time for food and medicine to be shipped to Biafra.

Post cards will be available and individuals will be asked to write to the Secretary of State, Dean Rusk, or to the President to ask them to appeal to the U.N. to intervene in the Nigerian-Biafran confrontation to negotiate for peace and to call for a cessation of hostilities and war. The public is urged to attend and participate.

Booths will be located at the Student Union Thursday, November 7. The drive will occur between 7:00 a.m. and 5:30 p.m. and will be manned by volunteers throughout the day. If you would like to volunteer an hour of your time, call Jack Barocas 546-1044, Ruth Turner 546-9967, or Gil Salk 545-0648.

The program will be featured on Focus, an hour long radio program which can be heard on station WMUA Wednesday evening 9:30-10:30 p.m.

UMass Alumnus Begins Writing Career Based On His Peace Corps Experiences

One of the first of a new group of young Americans who have begun writing careers based on their experiences in the Peace Corps is Paul Theroux, UMass alumnus who visited Amherst recently on the way from Uganda to Singapore.

Theroux, a native of Medford and 1963 UMass graduate, is at work on an African trilogy. The first book, "Fong and the Indians", a novel set in East Africa and published recently by Houghton-Mifflin, has received favorable reviews. The second book is due out next spring or early summer.

"The first book is based on the persecution of Asians that began in Kenya in 1966," Theroux said. "It is a book about race as a condition of life." He explained that Africa, often regarded as a non-racial place, has a kind of racism that is not too much different than any other.

"It's impossible to talk about Africa unless you talk about race," Theroux said. "Africans don't have a common pursuit nor do they have a common brotherhood."

Leaving UMass in 1963, Theroux taught a summer in Italy, then spent two years as a Peace Corps Volunteer in Nyasaland teaching English. From there he went on his own as an English teacher at the University of Makerere in Uganda.

He left Uganda this year to come back to the United States en route to a new English teaching job at the University of Singapore. He began at Singapore early in November after going there by way of Russia and India.

Theroux did the following during his teaching years in Africa: wrote two novels, the aforementioned "Fong and the Indians" and an earlier one titled "Waldo", plus two English texts; learned two African vernacular languages, Swahili, and Chinyanja; and last year married English-born Ann Castle. They now have a son Marcel, born in Uganda exactly on the Equator.

Africa was a good place in which to write, Theroux said. "You seem to have more time there and you're among people who haven't the slightest idea of what you're doing so you never have anybody bugging you about your work," he explained.

He left the U. S. originally, in his words, "because it was a period of my life when there were a lot of choices to be made and I didn't feel like making any of them." He does not mean to be a permanent American exile, however.

He said: "I think the longer you stay in a place where you are socially and economically special the worse you become as a person. It can even lead to what I call a 'Tarzan complex'."

1963 UMASS GRADUATE Paul Theroux, a former Peace Corps Volunteer, is writing an African trilogy on the racism of that continent. Contrary to popular belief, Theroux feels that Africa has a typical racial problem.

The Will Of The People The Test Of The Man

Marc Landry
Editorial Staff

The recent year has resulted in the exposition of numerous defects in the election process. The whole system has been under constant criticism and the American populace has become dissatisfied, to say the very least, with its operation.

Perhaps now that the election is over, the criticism will subside and everyone will forget the inefficiencies for another four years. Or perhaps there will beone more facet, one more operation to deal with the electoral college, the system which actually elects the president. As the election returns continue to pour in, it becomes all the more evident that Nixon could conceivably lose the popular vote, but win the electoral vote and thereby legally win the election. It has happened before. In 1888 Benjamin Harrison lost the popular vote to Grover Cleveland by almost one hundred thousand votes. However, he carried the electoral college two hundred and thirty-three to one hundred and sixty-eight and became the next president.

What can be done to keep this from happening in 1968? Virtually nothing. The election is over. It's too late to be come worried about a situation that should have been dealt with years before. In all of the United States there is but one man who has the power to stop this. Who is he? He is the man who, after losing to John Kennedy by one hundred thousand popular votes and nearly a hundred electoral votes, came out for the abolition of the out-dated electoral college system. He is the man who proposed to Mr. Humphrey that, if the election should go to the House of Representatives, they should mutually agree to throw their support to the one who has the plurality of the popular vote. This should be done in order to assure that the will of the people would be upheld. He is none other than Richard Hilhouse Nixon.

As the under-dog, as the one to profit by election reforms, he has been a champion of that cause. But how will he act when he is not the one to benefit from changing the system? The true test of a man, of his motives, comes when he is called upon to sacrifice his own self-interests for the good of others, for justice. This is the test that Richard Nixon will have to face. Will he allow himself to be elected by the electoral college, while losing the popular vote? Or will he do the just and proper thing and throw his support to Mr. Humphrey? Is he a man devoted to serving his country or a political opportunist? Only the next few days will tell.

For Whom Does Thieu Speak?

When President Nguyen Van Thieu of South Vietnam announced the other day that Saigon would boycott the expanded Paris peace talks, he exposed himself to be what many war critics have argued he has been - an egotistical, undemocratic ruler. He has ignored the possibility of ending the bloodshed of his countryme n so that he and his cohorts can stay in office and continue their undemocratic ways of ruling.

What kind of government is this country supporting in Saigon? A government that jailed the runner-up in the last presidential election because he was opposed to the war. A government that diverts, according to Senator Edward Kennedy, one half of the money earmarked from this country for helping refugees into the pockets of government officials. A government that refuses to acknowledge that the people of South Vietnam don't care at this point what the United States is doing but just want our troops to leave and let them live in peace.

It is time for Washington and Saigon to realize that the National Liberation Front that will be represented in Paris holds more of South Vietnam than the Allies. It is time for us as Americans to realize that the government in Saigon is neither a government "for the people" nor "by the people". It is time for Washington to realize that almost thirty thousand of our men have died to perpetuate the type of government we fought in World War II.

If Saigon is not represented in Paris, we should negotiate for them, because, in essence, the Thieu government could not survive without U. S. aid. If we can't negotiate without Saigon, then we should force them to come or pull out of Vietnam entirely, even without an "honorable peace." It is time for the United States to realize both the futility of our military efforts and the adversities this war has caused the people of Vietnam and this country.

"Now, Don't Do Anything That's Going To Make Us Look Silly"

Inside Report:

BOMB HALT BOMBS OUT

BY ROWLAND EVANS AND ROBERT NOVAK

WASHINGTON - After explaining the reasons behind his bombing decision to the three presidential candidates on a telephone conference call Thursday night, President Johnson asked for questions.

A short silence. Then Richard M. Nixon asked Mr. Johnson to clarify several points, which the President quickly did.

Another short silence. Then Nixon's voice came over the line: "I'll back you on this, Mr. President." When Nixon said that, Vice President Hubert Humphrey's voice came in. "I'm behind you, Mr. President." Finally, George Wallace chimed in with a similar statement of support.

Nixon's soft response came as a calculated decision long in the making. Nixon and his top strategists had wrestled with the political implications of a total halt to the bombing for weeks. Asked by intimates four weeks ago whether he thought the Administration was levelling with him in his periodic briefings on Vietnam, Nixon said he did not know but had no alternative but to accept what he was told. He was deeply worried about the political impact of any bombing halt.

Then, when Oct. 20 came and went and nothing happened, the Nixon camp relaxed. A bombing halt after that, they felt, would not change things materially.

Now that the bombing halt is a reality, this appraisal within the Nixon camp appears to be about right. With Republicans other than Nixon blasting the political timing of the President's decision, Nixon can play statesman, and endorse peace.

The lack of broad popular appeal for a bombing halt buttresses this Republican view. A confidential and highly responsible poll made available to us indicates that as of two weeks ago voter sentiment against a halt was running better than 2-to-1.

One fascinating statistic from this poll shows that one-third of the minority favoring a halt actually intends to vote for Nixon. That raises the question whether a major part of this one-third will switch to Humphrey now that the bombing halt is a fact.

But beyond that small cloud menacing the Republicans, our own survey of political leaders over the weekend shows that no party chieftain feels that this major last-minute break for Humphrey will be translated into more than a few votes.

In some states - Michigan, for example - the switch of a few votes could make the difference in Humphrey's favor. But in Michigan, a top Republican official making the round of Wayne County (Detroit) precinct headquarters on Friday was not even asked about the bomb halt.

In Ohio, a party leader Friday morning telephoned four of his big - city Republican leaders to check final arrangements for Tuesday's election. Not one of them raised the bombing question.

State Republican Chairman Jack Jordan of Pennsylvania was told at a Friday luncheon with pro-Nixon labor leaders that the President's decision seemed on the surface so politically-motivated that it might actually hurt Humphrey, not Nixon.

Nor do Democratic leaders markedly disagree. In Pennsylvania, they see little improvement in their chances to carry the state. In Texas, Democratic National Committee man Robert Strauss told us the bomb halt will make no appreciable difference there (though it might enhance Mr. Johnson's reputation outside Texas, giving his voice more weight in last - minute campaigning for Humphrey). Democrats in other key states echo these sentiments.

The one big exception to this is California. The bomb-halt, combined with Sen. Eugene McCarthy's all-out endorsement of Humphrey on Thursday (a result of criticism that his earlier endorsement had been stingy and gruding) have given Humphrey a major lift, winning the support of Gerald Hill, head of the left-leaning California Democratic Council (CDC).

One reason for the lack of a greater surge by Humphrey off the bomb-halt is the old, deeply-implanted suspicion of the President. Texas Republicans are certain that because of Mr. Johnson's wheeler-dealer reputation the timing of the announcement would boomerang - a feeling shared by some peace Democrats. Arthur M. Schlesinger remarked acidly that the bombing could just as well have been ended six months ago.

Most important, however, is the feeling by Democratic leaders that the Nixon lead in such vote-rich states as Illinois, Ohio, New Jersey, and even California may be too large for last-ditch rescue. The President's belated assist, these Democratic leaders feel, came too late.

Fine Arts Council Seeks Better Student Relations

BY RAY TAYLOR
Fine Arts Editor

What is a Fine Arts Council? For the past two years this question has incurred a variety of responses, most of them incorrect. Even today the situation has not much changed. This year, however, things are going to be different. This year, the Fine Arts Council and its work will be openly discussed and reviewed. This year, its purposes will be formulated, its goals clarified and its methods defined.

To give a little history, the Fine Arts Council is a committee comprised of five faculty and five student members. It was established in 1966 to fill a void created by the Student Senate. To finance its operations, each and every undergraduate is taxed at the rate of three dollars per semester.

Yet, in spite of this, the Fine Arts Council has done little to ensure that its source of funds (undergraduate) is used to sponsor and help undergraduate projects. Part of its income has been used to help support faculty programs, part of it to aid University budgetary problems...But the trend this year is different.

The new direction this fall was initiated by the election of Ray Taylor, a student, as chairman. This election was based on a belief that better communications are needed between the Council and a majority of the undergraduate University, and that a student could fulfill this task more directly and efficiently than a faculty member. Since the election Taylor has tried to establish new lines of communication between various segments of the University Community.

Below is presented the 1968-69 Fine Arts Council budget. Although some of its categories are fixed, several are still in the development stages. Accordingly, ideas are still needed and encouraged. Please, if you have any ideas whatsoever relating to what could be or should be done, contact the Fine Arts Manager, Terry Schwarz, 327B Bartlett Hall, Tel. 5-0529. IT IS YOUR MONEY!

German Elections

FRANKFURT, Germany (AP) - West German's far right National Democratic Party-NPD-dubbed neo-Nazi by its critics, made a poor showing Sunday in local elections in two states, polling 5.2 per cent of the vote in both Hesse and the Saarland.

The totals were not impressive in view of NPD chief Adolf von Thadden's prediction that the party would win 50 seats in next year's national elections. The percentages were just above the 5 per cent figure needed to qualify for representation in the parliament.

The four-year-old party already holds seats in seven of West German's 10 state parliaments. The results of Sunday's election will give NPD its first city and county council seats in the three states.

In Hesse the Social Democrats -SPD-got 49.9 per cent compared to 51.7 per cent in 1964, and the Christian Democrats - CDU - 22.9 per cent compared to 29 in 1964. In the Saarland the SPD got 37.4 per cent compared with 39.9 in 1964 and the CDU 39.8 per cent compared to 37.4 in 1964.

Wednesdays Empty Election Tidbit

Seven teachers at Mt. Greylock Regional School in North Adams, Mass., expressed their opinion of the 1968 presidential race in a series of advertisments in a local newspaper - the North Adams Transcript.

The one-column ads, which ran every day for a week, were outlined in black ink and were completely blank except for the name of the purchaser in small type at the bottom.

Smith Opens Drive To Raise Funds To Aid Hungry Nigerian War Victims

NORTHAMPTON - An effort to help relieve Nigeria's starving war victims is being made by a Smith College student-faculty group.

The group will open a four-day drive Monday to raise funds for the food crisis in Biafra, Nigeria's secessionist Eastern Region. Relief workers there recently forecast 25,000 deaths daily in Biafra in December unless there was a cease-fire. Nigeria's Lagos government regards Biafra as a rebellious province. War conditions have sharply limited the food supply in the province.

Representatives of a Smith Student-Faculty Committee on Nigeria-Biafra Relief have been named. The drive is also open to the community.

The group is asking that checks be made out to either Church World Service - Nigeria-Biafra Relief, or Catholic Relief Services. Contributions should be sent to Nigeria-Biafra Relief, care of Mrs. Edith Thomas, secretary of service organizations, at the Helen Hills Hills Chapel on the campus.

On Monday (November 4), the Rev. Richard Unsworth, college chaplain, Miss Margaret L. Bates, Smith associate professor of government, and Emeka Manuwuike of Biafra and the University of Massachusetts will lead a discussion meeting on the relief problem. The event will be held at 5 p.m. in the Browsing room of the William Allan Neilson Library on the campus.

Problems, Dilemmas Of Foreign Students Is Panel Discussion Topic

International Club and Martin Luther King Council are sponsering a panel discussion on "Foreign Students in the United States: Problems and Dilemmas." The purpose of the program is to focus attention on the problems of adjustment and the physical and cultural dilemmas which foreign students face during their study in the United States. The discussion will critically examine the communication problems between foreign and American students and will attempt to suggest new approaches to better understanding. Rev. Ron Hardy, Chairman of the King Council will moderate the panel discussion, and participants will include Mr. Ibrahim Othman (Jordan), Mr. John Farly (England), Mr. Sam Ajiri (Nigeria), and Mr. Daniel Weir (USA). The discussion will be held Thursday November 7, 8:00 p.m. in the Council Chambers in the Student Union. The public is welcomed.

Bi-Annual Literary Publication Will Represent Nationwide Cross Section

Washington and Jefferson College's bi-annual literary publication, THE JOURNAL, wishes to present a representative cross section of the tastes, talents, and opinions expressed throughout the country.

Though past editions have had specific themes such as: "Thoreau," "Poe," and "Electric Poetry," we feel a need this year to provide a general outlet for the pertinent, the provocative, and the controversial from students and writers and wish to have all geographical areas represented.

THE JOURNAL will include a first-hand interview of two students working both in the chaotic climate of the Chicago streets and on the convention floor playing an active part in the "Draft Kennedy Movement." In addition, an article concerning the relation of drugs to today's music is in project.

THE JOURNAL welcomes the chance to evaluate and print your graphics, prose, poetry, and essays. In order to meet our January publication date, we ask that your works be submitted before December 2, 1968.

All material submitted should accompany a self-addressed stamped envelope and should be sent to:

Playtex invents the first-day tampon™
(We took the inside out to show you how different it is.)
Outside: it's softer and silky (not cardboardy).
Inside: it's so extra absorbent...it even protects on your first day. Your worst day!
In every lab test against the old cardboardy kind... the Playtex tampon was always more absorbent. Actually 45% more absorbent on the average than the leading regular tampon.
Because it's different. Actually adjusts to you. It flowers out. Fluffs out. Designed to protect every inside inch of you. So the chance of a mishap is almost zero!
Try it fast.

Graduate Students Will Be Affected By The Draft More Heavily In Future

WASHINGTON (CPS) - Although the nation's graduate schools did not face the 70 per cent reduction in fall enrollment some predicted last year because of the draft, the second semester crunch may hurt them badly.

Most universities were taken by surprise this fall, when the 25-50 per cent of their students expecting to be drafted returned to school after all. Some universities, which had accepted more graduate students than they could handle in order to make up for the draft's roll, have been faced with money and housing shortages--and too many students.

They had failed to calculate this falls's election and its ramifications on the draft in their estimates last spring.

If February, when the Selective Service System announced that graduate students would no longer be deferred "in the national interest," both universities and the government predicted that schools might lose up to 70 per cent of their first-year students.

Selective Service officials predicted that students would make up as much as 90 per cent of the draft call-ups in many states. The Defense Department said 63 per cent of the 240,000 draftees predicted for 1969 would be students. Students made up 3.8 per cent this year.

How much calls will rise will depend on the manpower needs of the armed forces, the status of the Vietnam war, and the mood of the new President. But they are sure to rise at least a little.

Whatever the increase, it is sure to hit students harder next semester; under present draft regulations, the oldest eligible males are first to go, and graduate students newly classified 1-A are perfect targets. Those who receive induction notices during the present school term are allowed to stay in school to finish the term, but must then report for induction.

Graduate schools at several universities have reported drops in enrollment from one to 20 per cent. Professional schools seem harder hit than most. At Valparaiso University, 25 of 150 students enrolled in the Law School didn't register in September. Lehigh University reports a 13 per cent decrease in enrollment.

Universities, which opposed the move to end graduate deferments, are reacting to their students' concern in many ways. Several heavily graduate universities, among them Massachusetts Institute of Technology, have announced that students whose education is interrupted by the draft--either for two years of service or for a jail sentence for resistance-- will later be able to resume their degree work where they left off, and will stand a good chance of having their fellowships renewed.

Several schools are also investigating new degree programs like MIT's five-year engineering program--in which the student does not officially receive his bachelor's degree until he receives his master's in a fifth year (and so is classed as an undergraduate for five years).

Enemy Document Orders Step-Up In Fighting

SAIGON (AP) - A captured enemy document contained orders from Hanoi to step up the fighting, terrorism and sabotage in South Vietnam despite the U.S. halt of all attacks on North Vietnam, the goverment reported Tuesday.

A U. S. military spokesman said American intelligence still had the document under study to determine its meaning, origin and authenticity.

Both the Viet Cong and North Vietnam have sworn to continue the fighting while enlarged peace talks go on in Paris.

The document was seized a few days ago and disclosed that Hanoi had decided to hew to its course of violence even before the U. S. halt was announced, the South Vietnamese political warfare department reported.

Regional and provincial political commissars were told to increase the guerrilla movement and "military, political and enemy troop action activities throughout the territory of South Vietnam after the United States stops the bombing of North Vietnam," the government quoted the document as saying.

" In the political field," the document continued, "the provincial commissars have to push into action several armed propaganda teams into the towns and cities in order to carry out on a large scale their program of terrorism, assassination and sabotage."

In the "enemy troop action" field, political commissars were told to increase propaganda to sow confusion in the South Vietnamese army " to lull them with illusory peace solution."

The daily communique from U.S. Command headquarters reported 8 "scattered small unit contacts with light casualties" throughout South Vietnam.

The U. S. Command reported that preliminary figures indicated American combat casualties since last Friday, when President Johnson ordered a halt to all attacks on North Vietnam, had continued at about the same level of the past two weeks.

Mobilization Committee Calls For Unrepresented

A call for a New England-wide community meeting for all people unrepresented by the election of 1968 to assemble on November 9th in the State Capitols of the six New England States has been made by the November 9th Mobilization Committee.

The Committee states that "men of good will must continue to demand and end to the war in Vietnam and IMMEDIATE WITHDRAWAL. Solidarity with all our fighting men can only be affirmed by calling for their return."

The call has been made because in this election year the powers in the major parties have openly disregarded the people's desire for an end to the war abroad and for social change and justice at home. Billions are being spent on the weapons of destruction while the crisis in our cities increases and the cries of the hungry children of American Indians, migrant workers, and poor rural whites go unanswered.

Though there are many differences among the various groups supporting the November 9th "Town Meeting" there is agreement about the need to unite and stand together in order to effect change and end the war.

Some organizations sponsoring the November 9th meeting are: Mass. PAX, Vets for Peace in Vietnam, Mass. Catholic Peace Committee, American Friends Service Committee, Resistance, Medical Resistance Union, Women's International League for Peace and Freedom, Students for a Democratic Society, and Harvard Law School Legal Committee on the Draft.

Here in Massachusetts, there will be a march starting at 10:30 a.m. from the Cambridge Common to a Rally at 1:00 p.m. at the Boston Common. Some Speakers at this rally will be: Noam Chomsky, Eric Mann, and Ralph Schoenman. There will be an open mike for Vets and GI's.

Anyone wanting more information or transportation to Boston on November 9th should call the Valley Peace Center 253-3683.

A Boon To Education
Alice Apathy Is Alive And Well At UMass

By Marsha Gallo

We all know and love that little gleaming light in the midst of our numbers, little Alice Apathy. The little ray of joyousness who sits behind us in lecture and lives next door to us and cheers our lives with her bright beaming thoughts and comments.

Oh, surely you know the one. She's in your English class and she always gets there late because she's out in the hall screaming it up with Joe Superfraternity. Then she rushes in, plunks herself down next to you and asks you "what did we have to read for today?" In the same breath she tells you never mind, she wouldn't read it anyway because it's so studpid and so irrelevant - who wants to read about stupid wars or some guy scratching his eyes out anyway.

As you vainly imagine yourself trying to follow the discussion, she punctuates it with "oh, I can't stand it", "I'm so bored I could die," breathing heavily, occasionally giving just a short moan lengthening into a yawn. You spurn her attempts to get you to play tic-tac-toe with her nicely but firmly, carefully keeping in check the flow of descriptive nouns that her presence brings to mind.

Oh, Joy! She's also the one in your Social Problems lecture, who sits in the back row with her cute boppy little girlfriends, with their falls and scarves and cigarettes poised in air, usually somewhere around the back of your neck, singeing your hair. While you, with a real interest in what someone who knows something is saying, are straining to hear the scoop on drug addiction, alcoholism, mental illness, prostitution, homosexuality and mental retardation, you get the scoop from the social corner instead, punctuated by giggles and puffs of smoke. You learn why Mike with the tough bod is cuter than Norman who wears that great Theta Chi combination - socks that match his sweater.

Little Alice makes everyone laugh when she tells them that she flunked her Ent. lab practical, but it's okay because that really sexy football player flunked it too and he finally spoke to her, and she doesn't know what she's going to do because he's so tough and sexy. You drum your fingers on your chair and mouth the words, but you don't say anything because you're too busy concentrating on learning something. You know she wouldn't understand.

You get to know Alice Apathy really well when she lives across the hall from you in the dorm--across the hall, next door and in the room. All you hear, night and day, over the din of such super groovy discs as "Meet the Monkees" and "Sergeant Pepper" from one room, and "Born to Be Wild" and "Piece of My Heart" from the next, is little Alice, bopping up and down the corridor, peeking into every room, saying, "Hi-i-i how are ya", "watcha doin' ", "I hate this place", "I'm so hungry and the food is so lousy."

Then she comes into your room, a book in her hand, the binding uncreased, and says "I can't hack this place, I gotta study, but I'm so bored I could die. The weekends are so lousy. During the week I just can't hack it. Larry and I hit it off so well last weekend. I wonder if he'll call. He's so tough and in a fraternity and we just hit it off so great, that's all."

While your digesting Oscar Lewis and his study of the Puerto Rican culture of poverty, and you're worrying about the three English papers you have to do, and in the back of your mind you're still trying to figure out the wave - lengths on spectroscopes, little Alice lands on your phone. She scratches out a number (having exhausted her supply of ears in person) and screams into it: "Hi Sally, how was ya weekend? I know it, this place is so poor.

Students' Guide To Dining Out
THE AQUA VITAE

By ELLEN BRESLAW

Located on Route 9, halfway between Amherst College and Smith College - a few miles from UMass - is the Aqua-Vitae, the white panelled home of authentic Italian food and Italian atmosphere.

The back door from the large rear parking lot leads you through the hustle and bustle of the kitchen to one of three dining room areas. The decor of the restaurant provides an atmosphere that harmonizes with the homecooked meals that are served. The walls are covered with huge murals of Venice -- the gondolas and the homes along the waterway. Booths line the walls of the restaurant and tables covered with red and white checked tablecloths, with candles and Chianti bottles, are situated in the center of the dining areas. A juke box provides music from one room, and a television is perched above the bar in the center of the restaurant for television enthusiasts.

The dinners offered include, baked lasagne en casserole, baked maruzzelli (shell macaroni) en casserole, chicken and spaghetti, baked meat ravioli, veal cutlet and spaghetti, chicken - in -a-basket, and charcoal broiled steaks. Most dinners are served with your choice of tomato juice or minestrone, tossed salad, French fries, Italian bread and coffee. The home-made minestrone soup, thick with vegetables is a suggested menu item to choose. Especially good is the Italian garlic bread, served hot in aluminum foil and brimming with rich butter-garlic flavor.

Other menu items include fifteen pizza combinations, spaghetti with meat balls, sausage, and sauces, Italian grinders, and ordinary burgers and sandwiches.

The Aqua-Vitae also has a complete wine and liquor list.

The service isn't fast but it makes an evening of leisurely dining possible.

The Aqua-Vitae restaurant is open from 4:30 until midnight during the week and until 11:30 on Saturday evenings. Take out orders are available.

Italian food is the specialty-of-the-house, where each hot, generous delicious meal - reasonably prices - contains a little bit of old Italy.

THESE MEN WERE MISGUIDED:

Silence gives the proper grace to a woman. (Sophocles)

Let the women learn in silence with all subjection. (Timothy 2:11)

THESE MEN WERE CORRECT:

'Tis woman's nature to bear her ills on lip and tongue with mournful pleasure. (Euripides)

How a little love and conversation improve a woman! (George Farquhar)

'NO CURFEW Doesn't Mean Instant Irresponsibility

When asked to comment on the affects of no curfew, all upperclass women interviewed could think of no way in which the absense of curfews has had any great bearing on their lives. To many it meant not having to race from Northampton to Amherst in five minutes or facing the possibility of being campused for being late. The nuisance of signing in and out was gone. But other than these relatively unimportant tasks, there was no change whatsoever.

Whether there are curfews or not, the habits of the individual are basically unchanged. If she went to bed at eleven o'clock before the abolishment of curfew, she still does. If she went partying into the wee hours of the morning, she will still do it, with or without curfews. It might have been a little more difficult to stay out all night when there were strictly enforced curfews, but that did not stop many.

For the newly orientated freshman the curfew has very little affect on their lives. Many will follow the rules throughout their college careers, but many more will not. The opportunities for breaking curfew are more easily availed upon by today's freshman than were ever dreamt possible for the girl of five years ago who signed out for Late Libe and prayed that no check would be taken.

It is being too idealistic to suppose that the rules are strictly followed by all, unfortunately the reverse is true. However, the fact remains that the curfew has no real affect upon most of the women in this school. It has been, and always will be true that all decisions are made by the individual alone. No amount of rules can change this fact of life.

PERSONAL PERSPECTIVE
Be Alert During Open House

A necessary evil? A sought-after gift? An unrestricted orgy? All these terms have equal applicability depending upon the opinion of the individual concerning the open house policy.

It can provide an atmosphere quite unlike the stark, pseudo-modern lounges. You can choose your own music (if you turn up the volume enough to drown out the incessant voice of the Southwest Complex), and your own aforn of entertainment. It may be your only chance to be completely alone with your date, something you may have taken for granted at home.

On the other hand, open house may be an infringement on your privacy. Some people seem to think open house means that there is a "Welcome" sign on every door. If you are lucky they will knock before entering. If you are unlucky, it could prove to be very embarrassing (very).

One effect open housing has had on me personally is the fact that the non-guests wandering around can prove to be quite aggressive. Boys who are asked to leave the residential floors often lurk in the stairwells and wait for a girl to enter their little trap on the way to her room after a date.

More effective supervision in regard to this kind of situation should be initiated to discourage the neurotic behavior of the minority.

UMass Geology Department Seismic Survey May Help Amherst In Lake Site Selection

A group from the geology department did field work for a seismic survey class recently and at the same time aided the town of Amherst in its Lake Amherst site studies.

The group headed by Dr. R. W. Bromery, associate professor of geology, conducted a shallow refraction seismic survey at the site chosen for the dam of the proposed Lake Amherst recreation area east of North East St.

Dr. Bromery explained the survey process this way: "Small dynamite charges were set off, sending waves traveling through the glacial overburden to be refracted off the bedrock floor. Measuring the amount of time these waves take to reach the instruments yields information on the type and depth of the bedrock floor."

The survey yielded fair to moderately good information on the topography of the bedrock, according to the UMass geologist. It indicated that the bedrock depth along the dam site is from 90 to 100 feet, shallowing abruptly at the west end to within 50 feet of the surface.

Dr. Bromery will recommend to the town that a careful engineering survey, including borings, be made at the site.

New Education Course Accepted By Ed. Dept.

The following proposal for a course entitled Alternative Structures to Higher Education has been accepted for next semester by the Education department.

(PROPOSAL)

We, a group of concerned undergraduates, have arrived at a consensus that the established structure of higher education is irrelevant to our educational ideals. We consider the present system to be too limiting in that it channels students into strictly regulated areas of study, leaving little if any opportunity to pursue personal learning goals. We feel that students in higher education should be allowed the freedom to exercise initiative and concomitant responsibility in the learning process.

Therefore, we propose a course in which participants will investigate alternatives to the present system. Areas of study would include ongoing experiments, such as Bensalem, Project 10 and Residential Colleges. We plan to correlate independent study and group discussion in order to combine empirical research and creative speculation. We hope to derive an alternative framework applicable to the University of Massachusetts.

We have considered possibilities such as holding a conference to bring together various people presently involved in innovations in higher education; field trips to existing experiments; participation in committees and groups now evaluating different facets of change at the University of Massachusetts.

Sally Moreau, Celia Mandel, John Dunphy, Robert Kentfield, Carolyn Hanson, CathyScott, Hedy Kaplan, Dick Sleeper, Ronald Payson, Rhona Schechter, Mark Cheron, Ruth Yanka.

There will be a meeting at 7 o'clock, Thursday evening in the Ed. building, room 128, for anyone interested in the course or the idea. Don't sit around and complain about the present system, do something!

NSF Graduate Student Funds Cut; Payment To Continue As Long As Possible

The UMass will make every effort to keep paying graduate assistants whose positions are funded by National Science Foundation grants Karl W. Broekhuizen, business manager of the Graduate School reiterated at a meeting of the Graduate Student Senate Monday night.

Meanwhile, the 33 NSF trainees and 99 other graduate assistants whose pay checks may be affected are guaranteed payment until Jan. 31, 1969, and as long thereafter as funds are available Broekhuizen said. This statement was in reply to a charge from the floor that some graduate assistants had received notices which did not tend to confirm this policy. The policy had been announced at a meeting of graduate students in late September.

Mr. Broekhuizen spoke at a GSS meeting which was limited to discussion because attendance fell just short of the 51 percent constitutional quorum requirement.

The crisis for NSF funded positions by a cut to a level of less than one million dollars in spending authorization against the four million plus of NSF approved research programs, Broekhuizen said. In the fiscal year ending June 30, 1968, UMass had expended 1.3 millions of NSF funds.

Mr. Broekhuizen reported that the problem was caused when the NSF both refused to cut back its Washington D.C. based operations in the face of a cut in its authorized level of spending for the fiscal year ending in June 1969, and then issued an across the board cut to all institutions receiving NSF funds.

The National Institute of Health when faced with a similar problem had renegotiated the level of spending for each grant it had issued. The NSF action left the university holding the bag when it received notice of the cut almost two months into the 1969 fiscal year.

Following the notification of the NSF cut, the university froze all available expenditures connected with NSF grants except for the payments of trainees and graduate assistants. At the same time, Broekhuizen said, it appealed the NSF ruling and began to search for alternative sources of funds with which it could continue to pay the graduate assistants its departments had hired.

Before the cut, the NSF program here had been growing at a rate of 60 percent a year, Broekhuizen reported. The university asked the NSF to add six hundred thousand dollars to its authorization. The NSF replied that its programs here and at 19 other universities would be reviewed "in a growth sense", and invited the university to substantiate its request by Oct. 31, he said.

The university has complied and expects to get some increase, Broekhuizen said but as yet there is no indication of the amount.

Other sources include funds originally scheduled to go to the Research Trust Fund.

Another result, Broekhuizen continued, is that even with a substantial increase in NSF funds, the efficiency of research at the university will be adversely affected. He said this is due to the inability to buy proper equipment and supplies.

Near the end of the meeting, Broekhuizen reported that as of Nov. 4 there were 3,107 graduate students enrolled at the university. The graduate student tax of 50 cents a head can be expected to yield the Graduate Student Senate an income of about 1,300 dollars for this semester as the result of adjustments for full time equivalency of enrollment.

In other action at the meeting, Michael Rosen, GSS secretary and chairman of the social committee reported that reaction to the "Fall Affair", the first GSS social event of the season, was almost uniformly complimentary. He said that preliminary indications are that expenses for and income from the event will come close to balancing. "Fall Affair" was co-sponsored by the Graduate Student Senate and the International Club.

The next meeting of the Graduate Student Senate will take place in the Student Union on Monday, Nov. 18 at 8:30 p.m.

Red Cross Blood Drive Next Tues., Wed., Thurs.

The annual University of Massachusetts' student blood drive sponsored by the University Women and student service and religious organizations will be held at the Student Union Nov. 12, 13, and 14.

Cochairmen Mrs. Joe Clayton and Mrs. Robert Gage are joined this year by Mrs. Ernest Buck, who coordinated registration of student donors. From Oct. 16 to 25, registration table were manned in the Student Union dormitories and dining commons by volunteers from University Women, Newman Club, Protestant Students, Hillel, Interfraternity Council and Pan Hellenic groups.

The scheduling committees will begin making appointments this week.

APO Undertakes Campus Problem

Last night the brothers of Alphi Phi Omega interviewed three coeds who related to them recent incidents of harrassment inflicted on both themselves and their friends. These incidents ranged from verbal harrassment to assault and attempted rape.

Following the interview A PO decided to take the following steps to improve the situation: to gather facts, such as those obtained from the coeds interviewed, to determine the extent of the problem; to propose reasonable and effective solutions to the problem; and to take steps required to initiate these solutions.

Any students that can contribute information helpful in completing the first step should contact Charles Schultz, 708 Webster, 6-7214.

Maclean, Decembrek Honored By Varsity M Club

Fusia Respects Crusader Personnel

BY PETER PASCARELLI
Assistant Sports Editor

Middle Guard John MacLeanand tailback John Decembrele were awarded Varsity 'M' Club citations yesterday for being outstanding performers in the Vermont game Saturday, on defense and offense respectively. The awards were made at the clubs weekly luncheon held at the Newman Center.

MacLean, a junior from Williamstown, was cited for a performance that included numerous tackles and also an interception that stopped one of the few Vermont threats. It was the second time MacLean has been honored by the 'M' club this season.

Decembrele, a junior from Canton, who was filling in for the injured Craig Lovell, was honored for achieving outstanding offensive grades from the coaching staff, chiefly on the strength of his fine blocking job. Decembrele also caught a pass for a touchdown and gained 47 yards in rushing.

UMass head coach Vic Fusia, speaking at the luncheon, had good words for the two recipient. Fusia said of MacLean, "In the event of injuries he has to play offense. John is a versatile and important performer for us."

In regard to Decembrele, Fusia said, "He has earned the job and will keep it as long as he keeps producing. He has the ability to keep producing."

The UMass coach went to discuss the offensive success UMass had against Vermont. Fusia, however, first spoke of the ordeal of losing five straight ballgames. Fusia said, "I never thought five weeks could be so long. Each hour minute seemed like days."

He also added, "Any win is a good win, but we have to face the facts that Vermont has lost a lot and started with not much."

Fusia, back on the subject of his offense, said that the Vermont defense was dependent on blitzing. Therefore UMass was forced to use audibles to combat this tactic. The Redmen obviously succeeded at this task.

The wide runs of Pat Scavone and some of the passing game were these audibles. Fusia credited the success of Scavone's runs to good blocking jobs by Decembrele, end Jim Long and guards Bruce Fulton and Noel Schablik. Fusia said of Schablik, "He has been center for three years. However, last Tuesday night we were forced to make him guard. He was the only man we had."

Fusia said of this week's game with Holy Cross, "I hope this win has given us a needed lift for Holy Cross. We know they are good."

"They don't have the won-loss record, but personnel wise they are the best team we have faced thus far. Holy Cross is like a sleeping giant. I just hope that we don't wake them up."

Assistant coach Milt Piepul, has done the scouting of Holy Cross. Piepul, who was an assistant at the Cross, was not able to be present at the luncheon. Fusia, related about some of the reports Piepul has given about the Crusaders.

Fusia stated Piepul reports to him that tackle Bill Moncevicz is probably the number one pro prospect in the east. Fusia also said, "Milt told me that Phil O'Neil is the best quarterback he has ever coached and O'Neil isn't even first string anymore."

Sophomore Mark Mowatt will start at quarterback. Fusia also had praise for a high school alumnus of his, end Bob Neary.

Overall Fusia said, that Holy Cross has good speed and depth on both sides. However, the UMass coach expressed some optimism for his own squad.

"We should have some of our injured players returning this Saturday. It could be the strongest group we have had all year. After all, we have had the same team together now for a whole two weeks.

"Emotionally we'll be up for Holy Cross," said Fusia, "and we enjoy playing them. We are going there to win. If the adhesive tape holds up, it should be a good game."

Booters To Face Unbeater Springfield

An injury riddled UMass soccer team faces its toughest opposition of the year this afternoon when the Redmen meet the undefeated Springfield Chiefs at the varsity soccer field at 2:30.

Springfield has a record of eight wins, no losses and three ties. The three ties were to Dartmouth, Yale and Williams. In their strong schedule, the Chiefs have beaten such schools as Bowdoin, Wesleyan, MIT, Brown and Southern Connecticut.

Leading the Chiefs will be an All American prospect, halfback Jim Quigley.

UMass coach Pete Broaca terms the Springfield squad, "the strongest group they have ever had."

Broaca said that the Chiefs have two groups that play, both of approximately the same strength. Broaca added, "This is the strongest team we face this season."

UMass meanwhile is in tough condition injury-wise. Halfback Rick Matuszezak and fullback John Mercury are definitely out of action while several other UMass players are below par physically. Broaca summed up by saying, "We are really hurting."

The Redmen have two games remaining following today's contest, on Saturday with Coast Guard and on November 16 with New Hampshire.

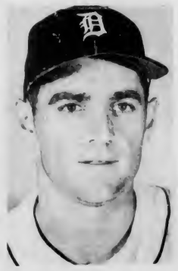
McLain Cites MacAuliffe, Mates In Accepting AL MVP

BY LARRY PALADINO

DETROIT (AP) - Nearly all year long Denny McLain was the proud, often cocky young Detroit Tiger pitcher who was headed for the fame and fortune of an unbelievably successful baseball season.

But now that he has achieved the ultimate reward, being named Most Valuable Player in the American League, he is a changed person-the ultimate in humility.

"To be serious, I thought Dick McAuliffe would get it because I contend he is the most valuable player," McLain said of the spark-plug Tiger second baseman, "Along with Bill Freehan, Jim Northrup, Mickey Stanley, Willie Horton, Al Kaline..." he rambled on naming nearly all the Tiger stars.



"I could have never done it without the 24 guys I participated with this year," said the 31-game winner.

Last week, he won the Cy Young Award for being the best pitcher in the American League. He called it, "The greatest honor ever put on me."

With all that behind him the only greater award could have been to be named MVP.

"This is the greatest honor I have ever had bestowed on me; It's a recognition that I don't believe," he said. "Half of the things that happened to me this year I don't believe."

Runners In Romp Against Central Conn

Leo Duart sped over the 5.1 Central Conn. cross-country course in a course record time of 25:39 to lead the UMass harriers to a convincing 16-40 victory. Duart, taking advantage of a cold that forced the Redman's top harrier Ron Wayne out of the race, won his first race of the year, on the hilly course.

Following Duart across the finish line were three other Redman runners, Marc Gelinas, Tom Derderian, and Charlie Lang. Gelinas came up with another top performance in taking second in 25:55. Derderian also ran a top race as he stayed close to Gelinas and got third in 26:08. Co-captain Charlie Lang picked up fourth place when he outran Walt Thompson of Cen. Conn. by 10 seconds, running 26:23.

Fifth man for UMass was Larry Paulson who placed sixth in the race with a time of 26:45. Paulson moved up to the fifth spot because of the absence of Wayne and "came through well," according to head coach Ken O'Brien. UMass' 6th and 7th places went to Diego Gonzalez who grabbed 10th and Bob Benshimol, 13th. The team's top five men were very close to each other only 66 seconds apart.

The frost harriers ran up against a tough Cen. Conn. team and were defeated, 18-39. The Connecticut team grabbed the first four spots in the race with Jim Hall winning the race over the 3.2 course in 15:46. His teammate Steve Ellis was second in 15:53. These two runners are classified by Coach O'Brien as the best one, two punch for any frosh team in New England.

Don Lunsky was the first Little Redmen to finish the race placing fifth in 16:16. Wayne Lucas was sixth in 16:24 and Ron Swasey, who came up with his best race of the season, seventh in 16:27. Al Mangan was the teams 4th man placing 10th and fifth man Steve Whicher placed 11th.

Yale Leads NE Football Poll

Yale's unbeaten powerhouse continues to roll along as a near-unanimous choice as New England's No. 1 college football team, and the rest of the Top Ten also remains pretty much the same in this week's Associated Press poll.

The Elis, who stretched the nation's longest major college winning streak to 14 games last Saturday with a 47-27 rout of Dartmouth, received 16 full first-place votes in the balloting by a panel of 18 sports writers and sportscasters in the six states. One voter split his first-place choice, giving half a vote each to Yale and Harvard, while the other voter went with the Crimson, which also sports a 5-0 record after their 28-6 conquest of Penn.

1.	Yale, 6-0	178-1/2
2.	Harvard, 6-0	163-1/2
3.	Boston College, 3-2	142
4.	Boston U., 4-1-1	125
5.	New Hampshire, 3-2	97
6.	Dartmouth, 2-4	87
7.	Holy Cross, 1-4-1	64
8.	Springfield, 6-1	49
9.	Connecticut, 3-4	48
10.	Northeastern, 4-3	12

Others receiving votes: Amherst, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Williams.

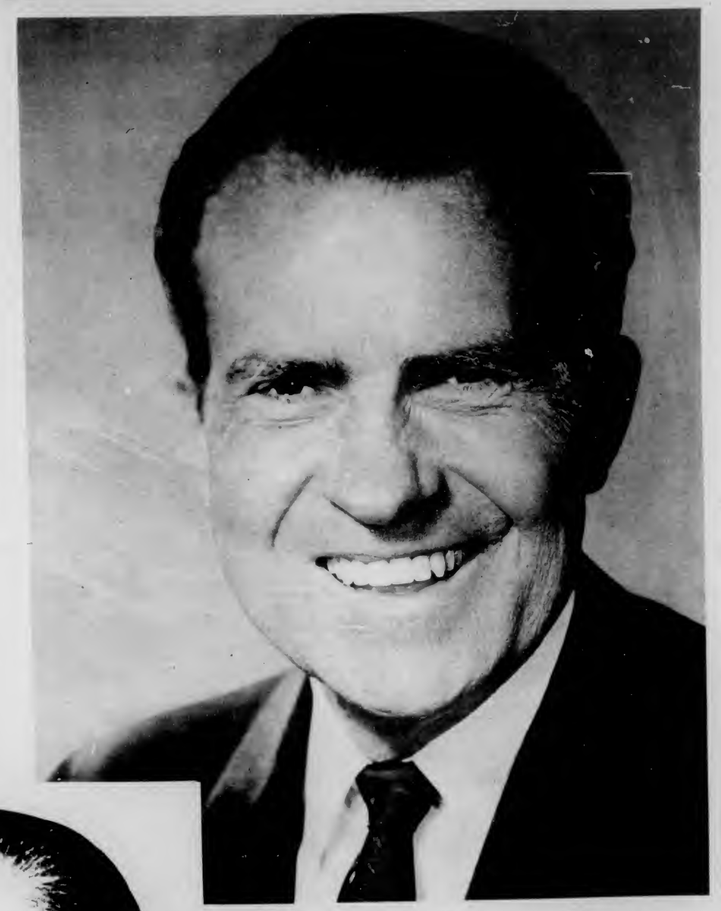
Nixon Vows To Reunite The Country

WASHINGTON (AP) - Republican Richard M. Nixon, completing an epic comeback from political oblivion, narrowly won election Wednesday as the 37th president of the United States.

He immediately pledged full efforts "to bring the American people together."

Squeezing past Vice President Hubert H. Humphrey in the critical late-counting states of Illinois and California, Nixon harvested 287 electoral votes - 17 more than needed to succeed Lyndon B. Johnson as president and to return the White House to Republican hands after eight years of Democratic rule.

But the Nixon victory was so narrow - he received only 43 per cent of the popular vote - that it failed to generate a big enough Republican resurgence to crack Democratic control of Congress. Republicans did, however, pick up four House and five Senate seats and five governor's chairs.



As tabulating of the avalanche of nearly 70 million votes neared an end, the popular vote lead teetered between Nixon and Humphrey.

With 93 per cent of the total vote tabulated, the count in mid-afternoon showed: Nixon 29,519, 667, Humphrey 29,558, 136 including votes from two slates of electors in Alabama.

Third-party candidate George C. Wallace received slightly more than 9 million votes - about 13 per cent of the total. The former Alabama governor's emotion-charged campaign threatened for a time to plunge the election into the House, but he carried only five states - all in deepest Dixie.

Even as the last votes were being counted, both Johnson and Humphrey promised cooperation and unity in the shift of executive

Student Senate Passes Motion For $300 To 'Northeast Passage'

BY SHARON O'BRIEN

In the most controversial action of the evening, the Student Senate passed a motion to appropriate $300 to the "Northeast Passage". The motion was originally to appropriate $150, but this was amended to the $300 figure.

Another attempt to change the appropriation to $1000 was an amendment by Senator Kilmartin, but this second amendment was defeated. Chairman of the Finance committee, Pat Beharry, noted that her committee had, in their latest action on this motion, voted against the appropriation. One of the reasons which she gave for the committee's action was the irresponsibility of the new organization in incurring a deficit of $198 before they knew whether or not an appropriation was forthcoming.

Opponents of the bill used two main arguments in putting forth their points of view. These were that the senate should not be getting into a problem of tax sharing before there was a report on this matter (this report is due the first meeting in December) and that this was not an emergency appropriation. In speaking for the motion Senator Jim Fox stated that the Northeast Passage was a "pioneer project", one which would "draw the area together". He referred to this action of the residents of the Northeast as an "effort against apathy."

In other financial actions taken two category changes were approved. The two organizations involved were the Northampton Volunteers and the Student Afro-American Organization. Both changes were made to cover deficits which were incurred last year.

A motion made by Senate Treasurer, Alan Gauthier, to authorize the Senate Treasurer to attach a per annum carrying charge on accounts receivable (Centex Phones) 1967-68 until such a time

NIXON A Biographical Sketch

'Nobody...Dreamed...I Would Be Sitting Here...'

NEW YORK (AP) - Sitting in his New York apartment a few months ago, relaxed and waiting, Richard M. Nixon seemed slightly bemused to find himself once again in the race for the Presidency.

He put his feet on a coffee table and said to a visitor, "You know, nobody would have dreamed a year ago that you and I would be sitting here March 12 with the situation as it is today. Who would have predicted it, as a matter of fact, in 1964."

March 12 was the date of the New Hampshire presidential primary. By nightfall, Nixon knew he had won an impressive victory. And although a long and dangerous road lay ahead, he also knew he had taken his first step in his second try for the presidency.

There was the "loser" label, pinned on him after his defeats in 1960 and 1962.

There was the period of comparative obscurity.

And finally, having moved from his native California to New York he was operating without a power base, without a strong and well-heeled state organization to support him.

Nixon has been in politics, or on the fringes, since 1946.

As the off-year elections approached at that time, Republican leaders in the 12th Congressional District of California began looking for a candidate for Congress.

The GOP chiefs quietly looked into Nixon's record. This is what they found:

He was born Feb. 9, 1913, in Yorba Linda, a tiny community not far from Whittier. His father was a small businessman. As a schoolboy, Nixon worked as a ranch hand, picking beans. He held jobs as a janitor in a school, a sweeper in a packing house and an attendant in a gasoline station.

When he was graduated from college, the Harvard Club of California awarded him its prize as as the outstanding student of his class.

He then applied for a scholarship at the Duke University Law School.

During the three years at Duke, Nixon was elected president of the university's bar association and was taken into a national scholastic fraternity for honor students at law.

He then returned to Whittier and entered a law firm.

He met a pretty blonde named Thelma Ryan at Little Theatre Tryouts. She told him her father, a miner, had nicknamed her "Pat", that she came from Ely, Nev., and had been teaching school in Whittier for several months.

A little more than a year later, June 21, 1940, they were married.

When the Pacific War broke out, Nixon joined the Navy as a lieutenant. He served in the South Pacific Air Transport Command.

One of the ironies of Nixon's career is that the political debate helped him win in 1946, whereas in 1960 it was a major factor in his defeat. He debated five times, and he said later, "Once the first debate was over, I was on my way to eventual victory."

He won by a vote of 65,586 to 49,994.

He was nominated by both parties for a second term in 1948. At the end of it, he decided to run for the Senate. He defeated the former actress, Helen Gahagan Douglas, by 680,000 votes, 59.2 per cent of the total.

Nixon quickly became a controversial figure in Washington.

He played a leading part in the investigation of Alger Hiss, a former State Department officer, by the House Un-American Activities Committee in 1948. Hiss was convicted of perjury and served a term in prison.

Nixon helped draft the Taft-Hartley law which President Truman opposed. The law was passed over Truman's veto.

Next, Nixon plunged into the controversy that erupted when Truman stripped Gen. Douglas MacArthur of his Far Eastern commands in 1951. Nixon sponsored a resolution of confidence in MacArthur.

He had been in Washington only six years when he was suddenly catapulted into national politics. Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower became the GOP nominee for President in 1952. He asked the delegates to the national convention to nominate Nixon for vice president by acclamation. They did.

But before the election, Nixon found himself making unwelcome headlines when the so-called "Nixon Fund" was disclosed. A group of California businessmen contributed $18,000 to the fund. Nixon was to use it as he pleased. In the furor, some GOP leaders urged that Nixon be dropped from the ticket.

Defending himself, Nixon delivered on television what is still known as his "Checkers Speech" because of a reference to his cocker spaniel. He reported the findings of an audit and said, "Not one penny of the $18,000 or any other money of that type ever went for my personal use."

The speech kept Nixon on the ticket.

Eisenhower made greater use of his vice president than any other previous chief executive. He sent Nixon as his emissary to 56 countries. In Caracas, Venezuela, a mob smashed the windows of his car, endangering his life. In Moscow, he took on Soviet Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev in the famous "Kitchen Debate," arguing ideology in a model of an American kitchen at an exhibit in 1959.

But nothing so enhanced Nixon's prestige as the way he handled himself after Eisenhower was stricken by a heart attack on Sept. 25, 1955. Nixon said later: "What I thought of . . . was not the awesome problems I would have if I should become president, but how I could best handle my immediate responsibility as Vice President.

Few Americans will ever forget the 1960 campaign, Nixon's TV debated with John F. Kennedy, the neck-and-neck race down to the last hour, and the final result-Kennedy winning by one tenth of one per cent, the closest national election in 76 years.

Nixon returned to California and in 1962 he ran for governor. The incumbent, Edmund G. "Pat" Brown, defeated him by 297,758 votes.

Exhausted by the hard campaign and shocked by the defeat, Nixon appeared before about 100 reporters and the TV cameras after the election and said, bitterly, "You won't have Nixon to kick around any longer because, gentlemen, this is my last press conference."

This appeared to end, irrevocably, Nixon's career. Numerour commentators wrote his political obituary.

But five years later, Nixon was very much in the presidential picture again. Two Associated Press surveys in 1967 showed he was a runaway choice of GOP leaders to be the nominee in 1968. There was no mystery as to how he reached that position.

He had earned a tremendous amount of gratitude between 1964 and 1966 by campaigning tirelessly for Republican candidates for the House, the Senate and for governorships.

But there was still that question in the minds of even his supporters, "Can he win in November." Would he be a three-time loser?

Nixon was fully aware of this. He said, candidly, "I have to destroy the 'loser image' by winning in the primaries," he said. "If I don't win, and win big, I've had it."

He announced that he was entering primaries in New Hampshire, Wisconsin, Nebraska, Indiana, Oregon and South Dakota.

But after he won the nomination he told reporters, "Had I lost one big primary, it probably would have finished me. It was a big risk, but I had to take it."

The gamble paid off. In the six elections, Nixon racked up a total vote of 1.6 million. His analysts asserted that the figure represented 73 per cent of all the votes cast, meaning those of independents and Democrats in states where the law permitted them to cross over and vote for a Republican.

So his nomination at Miami Beach in August was a foregone conclusion.

His first objective was to achieve maximum unity in his party. Nixon soothed the defeated, asked for and received pledges of full, active support. In stark contrast to the bitterly divided GOP of 1964, Nixon could boast of a party solidly united behind the national ticket.

In fact, he built the unity theme into his standard speech. He told his audiences that a campaigner with a united party could unify the nation, that the divided Democrats could not.

His campaign received an early lift from the violence in Chicago during the Democratic convention. Charles McWhorter, one of Nixon's top aides, said the riots in effect produced an instant peak for the campaign.

Chicago became an unexpected weapon in Nixon's campaign arsenal. Weeks later, Nixon still talked of the violence, told his audiences that the "disorganized rabble" which had produced that convention was not fit to lead the nation.

power to Nixon and his running mate, Gov. Spiro T. Agnew of Maryland. The change-over will come with their inauguration on Jan. 2.

From his Texas ranch, Johnson wired congratulations to Nixon and promised to "do everything in my power to make your burdens lighter."

"I hope that our people will turn now from the divisive contentions of the political campaign to a united search for peace and social justice," Johnson said.

Humphrey also sent a telegram to the presidential-elect, saying "you have my support in unifying and leading the people."

"I am confident," Humphrey said, "we shall be able to go on with the business of building the better America we all seek - in a spirit of peace and harmony."

Conceding defeat, Humphrey in a quavering voice told several hundred cheering supporters in a Minneapolis hotel: "I've done my best. I've lost. Mr. Nixon has won. The democratic process has worked its will, so let's go on with the urgent task of uniting this country."

A half-hour later, as the stock market advanced with word of his victory, a smiling Nixon flashed the victory sign with upraised hands and told a jubilant crowd in a New York City hotel that "Bring us together" will be the motto of his administration.

And he reaffirmed his pledge to cooperate with Johnson in the post-election period "in bringing peace to the world." The Vietnam war was an overriding issue of the turbulent presidential campaign, and Nixon said before the election he would go to Saigon or Paris if necessary to get peace negotiations "off dead center."

Then the man who lost to John F. Kennedy by 12 votes in the 1960 presidential race-but came back to become the first candidate in this century to win the presidency on the second try-headed for three days of rest in Key Biscayne, Fla.

En route, he planned to stop in Washington to visit former president Dwight D. Eisenhower, whom he served eight years as vice president. Eisenhower is recuperating in Walter Reed Army Hospital from a series of heart attacks.

Democrats kept control of both the House and Senate, for the eighth straight election, but by reduced margins.

Republican gains in the House were smaller than forecast, however. Even the Democrats had expected the GOP to capture a dozen or so Democratic seats, but with all races decided, the lineup was 243 Democrats and 192 Republicans. Democrats hold a 254-187 edge in the outgoing House with three vacancies.

Govs. Romney, Rockefeller To Be New Cabinet Members Says Detroit Radio Station

DETROIT (AP) - Detroit radio station WJR stated Wednesday it has learned Michigan Gov. George Romney will join the Cabinet of President - elect Richard M. Nixon.

The station said Romney would probably become secretary of commerce in the Nixon administration, but said it is possible he would head either the Department of Housing and Urban Development or the Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

Another prominent Republican governor, Nelson Rockefeller of New York, was also named by the Detroit station as a member of Nixon's cabinet, "either as secretary of state or secretary of defense-most likely the latter," a spokesman said.

Phyllis Curtin

Phyllis Curtin To Perform In Student Union Ballroom

Phyllis Curtin, leading American soprano will appear in recital on the campus of the University of Massachusetts at Amherst on Tuesday evening, November 12, 1968, as the third offering of the Concert Association's 1968-69 series. This concert will take place in the Student Union Ballroom at 8:00 p. m. and is expected to attract a capacity audience.

Miss Curtin is considered one of the most unique artists before the music public today and has been characterized by critics, fellow musicians, and knowing audiences as one of the "greats" for her ravishing technique, astonishing versatility, and rare musicianship. She has the added distinction of having sung with the Metropolitan Opera, La Scala, Vienna State Opera, and Teatro Colon and has appeared with nearly every major symphony orchestra throughout the world. Phyllis Curtin is completely American-trained which reverses the usual made-in-Europe trend of most modern day careers.

For her appearance at the University of Massachusetts, Miss Curtin has programmed three major song cycles in addition to works by Rossini and Berlioz. Six songs by Franz Schubert including "Suleika", "Nacht und Traume", "Die Liebe hat gelogen", "Standchen" and "Suleika II" will be performed on the first section. Following intermission "Three Songs of Ophelia" by Richard Strauss and "Cantigas de Amigo" by the contemporary Argentian composer, Valdo Sciammarella will be heard.

This concert is open to UMass undergraduates without charge; however, tickets are required and may be obtained at the Student Union Ticket Office. Tickets for undergraduates, faculty, and general public may also be obtained at the Student Union, however, due to the limited capacity, tickets are distributed on a first come, first served basis.

Quebec Students In Revolt Seek Second French-Language University

MONTREAL (CPS-CUP) -- Over 40,000 CEGEP students were out of classes Tuesday (Oct. 15) as the Quebec student revolution entered its second week.

Ten schools are in student hands, eight more closed for strike votes and study sessions to recommend further action. Only five of the junior colleges are operating normally.

The University of Montreal's 8,000 students are boycotting classes and occupying major buildings. The Laval University Institute of Technology is shut down by 2,000 students. Private colleges around the French-speaking province are closed in sympathy: Loyola College, Sir George Williams University and McGill University are holding study sessions or sympathy marches Tuesday or Wednesday.

The rumblings from French Canadian students, which began a week ago in Ste. Therese, a small village 15 miles north of Montreal, have become an avalanche, as students have decided that taking over their schools is the only way to make their grievances heard.

CEGEP stands for College D'Enseignment Generale et Professionel, and is the Quebec school system's equivalent of a junior college or trade school, a step between high school and the university or trade school. The CEGEP system is the first phase of a massive overhaul planned for the Quebec educational system.

The CEGEPs are in severe trouble now, as student grievances which have been smoldering for more than a year come to the surface. The students' major demand is for a second French-language university; more than 60 percent of CEGEP graduates cannot now attend a university for lack of space.

Quebec's Education Minister, Jean-Guy Cardinal, promised Saturday that a second French language university will open in Montreal in September, 1969.

But the students' grievances go beyond the university issue. They are also fighting to reorganize the chaotic administration of CEGEPs. At Lionel Groulx in Ste. Therese, student union leaders told of the disorganization of class schedules and courses. Arbitrary cancellation of classes was so commonplace, they said, that one student was told that ten of his 17 courses no longer extended.

The students also want an increase in scholarships and loans, abolition of a recently-enacted 2 percent interest on hike student loans, and planned employment for CEGEP graduates.

To the charge of disorganized administration, Cardinal was not so sympathetic; he expressed disapproval of "confrontation" tactics and said he would support any action, short of calling in the police, initiated by CEGEP administrators to regain control of their schools.

Monday the administrators met in secret session to discuss the situation. They were "fed up" with the whole affair, according to one participant. Calling in the police was only one course of action discussed. he said.

Earlier in the strike the school administrators had expressed emotions ranging from indifference to disgust. L'Abbe Charles Valeis, director of CEGEP Lionel Groulx, said he would make no efforts to oppose the occupation of his buildings, and would allow the students to remain there "if that is what they want. I don't plan to call the police--we'll simply move out."

UMass Professors Publish German Literature Studies

Two University of Massachusetts professors have had their studies of German literature published in Germany, it was announced today by Wolfgang Paulsen, chairman of the UMass German department.

Peter Bruce Waldeck, assistant professor of German, recently published his study on "Die Kinkheitsproblematik bei Hermann Broch" with the Wilhelm Fink Verlag in Munich.

Horst Denkler, associate professor of German, has edited a collection of one-act plays and dramolettes of German Expressionist dramatists under the title "Einakter und Kleine Dramen des Expressionismus" in the "Universal Bibliothek" of the ReclamVerlag in Stuttgart.

Waldeck's study investigates motifs in Broch's novels along psychological lines and adds new insight into the problems of Broch's dependence on Kafka. The publication of the book was made possible by a grant from the U Mass Graduate School.

Denkler wrote the introduction, selected the texts and provided an appendix with biographical and bibliographical information on the printed selections in his published volume on German theatre. A recognized expert on German Expressionism, Dr. Denkler spoke on the influence of Romantic theories on Contemporary German painting at last year's Amherst Colloquium on Modern German Literature.

FRESHMAN CLASS CANDIDATES FORUM

President UMC

Ernie Lepore

Fellow Classmates:

Today you will be making an important decision - WHO will lead your class? You have probably received a letter from me with this opening, but I can not stress the importance of voting enough. If there is a poor turnout it will be detrimental to the class government. I have put a lot of work into keeping this campaign free of mud-slinging and I hope it can remain that way. Throughout the campaign, as most of you already know, I have constantly kept three basic ideas in my platform, which are all POSSIBLE. First, a UNIFIED class by strengthening the Executive Council so that each dorm is represented. Secondly, many committees will be set up to open the way to class participation. And lastly, the social functions which are basically the main duty of the class officers. The Freshman Dance in December along with the Christmas Sing at the end of December. Class trip to Montreal, and most important Freshman Weekend in April. Thank you very much for reading this and I hope we can all work together is I am elected.

Steve Comack

The United Freshmen Party is a group of capable individuals who can work intelligently and creatively within the organization of class government. Each member of the UFP has his own ideas based on the needs of the Freshmen student, and is ready and willing to work effectively for the good of the Freshmen class.

As class president, I would push for increased social activities, academic reforms in school administration, a needed infirmary in the Southwest, and abolition of second semester curfew for Freshmen girls.

I urge you, the student, to compare the ideas of the UFP with those of our opponents. When voting make the best decision.

Vice-President

Steve Driscoll

My primary objective in seeking the office of Vice President is to personally inform, unite and bring about a greater feeling of spirit and awareness in the freshman class. I believe that this can be accomplished through better representation on class committees and functions and through a strong attempt at personal contact with the whole class. The most worthy of my idea's is to arrange dorm meetings with the freshman through the executive council member in each particular dorm. In this way the class officers will be able to directly inform the class and get direct opinions and questions from them. I will most importantly, if elected, work hand in hand with the other officers to make the Class of 1972 a complete success.

Jim Foley

I am a write in candidate for Vice-President. As your Vice President I would work closely with the other officers, on all matters. The Vice-President must be ready to help his fellow officers whenever necessary, I feel I could do this. I propose that out of the executive council approximately 12 people should be chosen to work very closely with the officers, because a large council of over 100 persons couldn't work out every problem efficiently. The 12 members would be selected from all parts of the campus to give the greatest variety of ideas. I would be open to all suggestions and opposition, no matter how small, and bring it to the attention of the respective person or council. Remember I am a write in candidate.

Dennis Cogan

Although this election has differed greatly from past elections, the emphasis is still on a person's name and not on his ideas. I think a Saturday afternoon should have been set aside so that the Freshmen class could have had a giant forum where the candidates debated before the class. In this manner, the voter's choice would depend on ideas and not just a name. It would also bring out more candidates as the money factor would be eliminated, for many candidates have won elections through large expenditures which have scared other candidates away. Also, voting is now done on an open ballot basis and I think this should be changed to a secret ballot. When you vote, consider these ideas.

Secretary

Linda Peterson

Although most people feel that the secretary's job is not an important one, I feel that it is. Accurate accounts of class meetings are essential in running a class as large as ours. This is a job that carries a lot of responsibilities, but I am prepared to face these responsibilities and work my hardest and make our class one of the best ever. I will cooperate with the other officers as much as possible. So everyone in the freshman class should make it a point to vote today in the student union between 9:00 a.m. and 5:30 p.m. and show the res t of the school that we are not apathetic!

Steve Effman

The UFP endorses and supports the establishment of an infirmary in the Southwest area. This would ease the burden on the present infirmary, located near Orchard Hill. In addition, it would prove to be a great help to those taken ill in the Southwest area, due to the fact that they would not have to "hike" up to the hill infirmary. Many a time, I have heard students say that the main reason why they do not go to the infirmary to relieve the aches of an ailment, is that the time and energy needed to walk there is just not worth the effort. And so it is with the welfare of the student body in mind, that the UFP wholeheartedly supports the establishment of an infirmary in Southwest.

Linda Peruzzi

The key to the unity and overall success of the freshman class is in the idea of personal contact. This can accomplish more than a newsletter or questionairre, which are frequently ignored. Personal contact is beneficial to students because it allows them to become acquainted with their class officers, while becoming informed of events and policies concerning their class. Even with a class of over 3,000 this contact will not be impossible to achieve. Executive council members can call meetings of two, or maybe three, dorms at a time. The officers will meet with the dorms and inform students of events, discuss policies, and answer any questions. If elected, I will try to fulfill my goals, and work cooperatively with the other officers for the betterment of our class.

Treasurer

Pam Larson

Today is a first for the Freshmen. Today is the first time we function as a class by voting to elect the officers that will then lead us in our first year. It's hard for you to vote, I am sure, because you know nothing about the candidates. But it was also hard for us to make ourselves known to all. We can only hope we did. The success of our class depends upon the success of our activities, and the success of our activities depends upon a good treasury and a good Treasurer to see to it that the job ahead of him gets done and gets done well. Class Treasurer is an extremely responsible and demanding position, a position I am willing to assume. I urge all Freshmen to vote today, for I ask only the opportunity to prove myself to you.

Scott Smith

The United Freshmen Party is an organization that was established for the purpose of uniting the Freshmen class with more organization and strength in campus voice, than is typical of college Freshmen classes. However, the original purpose for class government is to organize and operate social funtions and it is our first duty to stand up to this requirement. In doing so, the UFP promises individual research, true inlative, and views of the officers and the Freshmen Council, in order to make the right decisions. As treasurer, I shall authorize all expenditures according to my judgement and the judgement of the officers and the council. Our program will work.

Lee Deering

As a candidate for the officer of Treasurer of the class of 1972, I would like to express my impressions and opinions of the office. The basic policies of the Treasurer is performing, in monetary measures, the policies of the elected president. However, the duties of the Treasurer are decision-making in themselves. With the budget of $10,000 (received from class tax) the Treasurer is expected to investigate costs, evaluate situations of money allotted to an event, and make an intelligent suggestion to the class as well as to the President. All final requisitions are the responsibility of the Treasurer. In working with a budget designed to furnish adequate sums of money for events as Freshman Weekend, Freshman-Sophomore Picnic and a proposed trip to Montreal in collaboration with the Sophomores, I am willing to give energy, time, and above all, effort to the post of Treasurer.

Senator-At-Large

Dave Castricone

As a write-in candidate for the position of Senator, I feel that a few proposals should be brought up for serious thought.

Academic reform would encourage more pass-fail courses, enabling students to achieve an education, and not just marks. Also, the language course should be on a voluntary basis.

Abolition of second semester girl's curfew is necessary to enable our girls to be treated as adults. It would also add to the general happiness of the campus.

With your co-operation, these and other proposals can be discussed and the problems we now face will be remedied.

Bob Nims

On September 6, 1968, I entered the University of Massachusetts as a freshman. Within two weeks it was obvious to me that something was lacking. I decided at that time to seek office of Freshman Senator. Upon election, I plan to meet with as many freshman as possible through freshman dorm meetings. Among my policies which I intend to institute are: 1) Voting in the dorms rather than at the Union 2) Establishment of office hours for all class officers 3) A monthly letter describing Senate decisions of importance. I cared enough to look into election procedures and I care very much about your opinions. Vote BOB NIMS, SENATOR, THE FRESHMAN WHO CARES.

Rocky Hodgson

I feel that the most important office freshmen will vote for today is senator-at-large. Any reforms freshmen want, any voice freshmen wish the student body to hear, any action the freshmen want taken, will have to be done through the freshman senator-at-large. Talk to the different candidates, get their ideas, and weigh your choice carefully. You decision today will decide what kind of freshman class this will be-leaders or followers. Vote for the best candidate-"Even if you have to take the time to write-in your choice."

Blood Needed

An urgent need for blood plateiets has arisen in the area. The separation of blood into its various components to obtain the platelets must be done within a short time after donation. The Campus blood drive comes at an opportune time and place to supply this need. Plateiets are present in whole blood in small numbers and are tiny particles smaller and more fragile than the blood cells. The first pints of blood taken at the blood bank each day will be rushed to Springfield for processing in order to obtain the platelets as well as the other components present in the blood. In certain conditions each component has a specific use. For this reason the Red Cross urges that anyone wishing to donate blood come to the Student Union even if not scheduled for a donation. The hours for donating are Tuesday, Nov. 12, 11-4:45 p.m., Wednesday, Nov. 13, 10 a.m.-3:45 p.m. and Thursday, Nov. 14, 9 a.m. - 2:45 p.m.

State Arts Agency To Hold Hearing At Umass Sat

Members and representatives of arts and humanities organizations and institutions in Franklin, Hampden and Hampshire Counties, as well as interested citizens, are invited to an open meeting of the Council on the Arts and Humanities on Saturday, November 9 at 2:00 p.m. in the Auditorium of the School of Education at UMass.

The Council is holding similar public hearings in various parts of the Commonwealth in order to become more familiar with the needs and direction of the arts at the local level, both in urban and rural situations, as well as to provide citizens with an opportunity to find out more about their state arts agency and how it works.

Mr. John R. Watts, Chairman of the Council, said "We hope people will come and talk to us about their problems and ideas for the future, and find out what the Council is presently able to do to help."

The Council will be guests of the University at a luncheon preceding the public meeting. Dr. Philip Bezanson, member of the Council from Hadley, is Chairman of the Department of Music at UMass.

Smith Presents String Quartet

Members of the Smith College music department will present a program of string quartets at 8 p.m. on Sunday (November 10).

The public is invited to attend the concert, to be held in Sage Hall. Participating in the program will be Philipp Naegele, violinist, Ernst Wallfisch on the viola, and John Sessions, cellist, all members of the Smith College music faculty. Mrs. John Sessions, violinist, will also perform.

The program will open with "Andante Cantabile" from String Quartet in A Major, Opus 2 (1880) by Richard Strauss. Roger Sessions' String Quartet No . 1 in E Minor (1938) will follow. The concert will conclude with Beethoven's String Quartet, No. 10, E flat Major, Opus 74 (1809).

Sigma Delta Tau sorority won this year's silver tray scholarship award given by the University of Massachusetts Panhellenic Council. Left to right: Miss Helen Curtis, UMass dean of women; Panhellenic Council president Elaine D'Amico of Mansfield; Sigma Delta Tau scholastic chairman Shirley Mandell of Worcester, and SDT housemother Mrs. William Hoffman.

Panhellenic Council Recognizes SDT Scholastic Achievement

The annual silver tray scholarship award of the University of Massachusetts Panhellenic Council has been awarded to Sigma Delta Tau Sorority for high scholastic achievement by its members during the 1967-68 academic year.

Presentation was by Elaine D'Amico, council president, to Linda Pomeroy, Sigma Delta Tau president, at the Panhellenic scholarship tea

The silver tray award will be kept in the possession of Sigma Delta Tau, since it has earned the highest rank on two previous years, once in 1964-65 and again in 1966-67. In 1963-64 Sigma Sigma Sigma achieved first place and in 1965-66 Alpha Chi Omega held first rank. Lambda Delta Phi retired a similar trophy in 1963 as the highest ranking sorority scholars for three years prior to that.

High scholarship is one of many goals of members of the ten social sororities at the University of Massachusetts, Service to the University and community and a full program of social and cultural activities are also important aspects of sorority life for some 800 members of UMass sororities.

At present some are assisting with the Foreign Students Reception, Blood Donor Drive, UNICEF, and tutoring programs; many are involved in float parade preparations and "Mum Sale" for Homecoming. Four sororities which will build new houses in the near future have student representatives working with advisers and corporation boards on building plans.

At the Panhellenic scholarship tea, Miss Helen Curtis, Dean of Women, announced scholastic averages of all sororities. In addition to achieving high scholarship as a group with a 2.8 average, 50 percent of the Sigma Delta Tau members were on the University Honors List for the Spring semester.

A total of 37 percent of all sorority members had 3.0 or higher averages entitling them to University Honors List. The overall average for sororities was 2.658 as compared with 2.528 for all University women and 2.37 for all University undergraduates.

Former UMass Teacher Finds Original Frost Manuscripts

A former University of Massachusetts fine arts student and teacher, Thomas Edward Francis McNamara, 33, has fallen upon a treasure trove of original manuscripts of poet Robert Frost.

The find, including more than 200 items and valued conservatively at $1-million, had been kept a secret by McNamara and a few others since the Fall of 1967. McNamara discovered the manuscripts in an old farmhouse in Bridgewater, N. H.

Over the past year, he has devoted much time reading, sorting and cataloguing pieces in the collection. Last week, Plymouth (N.H.) State College, where he is professor of English and creative writing, announced to the public that the collection had been donated to the college by the farmhouse owners.

Jones Library in Amherst has a Robert Frost Room. The late poet lectured often at Amherst College.

According to the BOSTON GLOBE, McNamara, a devoted Frost scholar, is working on the first book in a definitive, three-volume study of the poetry and prose that made Frost a giant among his literary peers. For McNamara, the collection was for a time " almost a personal plaything", the GLOBE said.

FREE CHOICE OF COURSE

Requirements: the curse placed on every student by the great and noble past of the University of Massachusetts. Is it not time that there be a change?

In a way requirements are equally burdensome on all students. A Zoology major does not like to be required to take social science courses; just as a Government major does not like to take science courses. It seems that at least there is an equality in misery. But, is this misery justifiable?

Supposedly a forward looking university, UMass still has some of the most rigorous course requirements around. A student of a social science, government for example, will spend one of his four short years at the University just fulfilling language, math and science requirements. Other schools will require less than half of this. Why not the University of Massachusetts? Are we really being more "well-rounded" individuals?

There seems to be no way to get around the general university requirements. One of the major shortcomings of the Pass-Fail System is that required courses cannot be taken for a Pass or a Fail grade. Freshmen seem to be given a wonderful choice of which requirements to get over first. This bad experience has, I am sure, ruined, or at least disillusioned many students.

Several basic changes would need to be made by all academic departments if we were to totally abolish required courses. What we need are more courses on a level acceptable to non-majors in any area. This would be an advantage to majors in that area and to those just out to broaden their minds or their interests. We also need greater availability of the Pass-Fail Option. I am sure most students have interests in many academic areas. With these two changes a student could take a course just for his general enlightenment, understand what is going on, and still not feel overly pressured by grades.

It is time for a change. When a student is spending $1500 a year to attend the University of Massachusetts he should be able to choose courses which he has a desire to take.

"We Were Busy Making Speeches On Law And Order"

Special Report:

THE SAIGON PROBLEM

BY ROWLAND EVANS AND ROBERT NOVAK

WASHINGTON — The embarrassing and surprising refusal of the Saigon government to go to the negotiating table in Paris is in no small part the product of a security blackout that kept South Vietnamese authorities in the dark about preliminary arrangements for a bombing halt.

Indeed, behind studied confidence in the upper reaches of the Johnson administration, that President Nguyen Van Thieu ultimately must send a delegation to Paris, there is deep concern. This is coupled with a retrospective wish that the Saigon regime had been brought more frontally into the three weeks of negotiations preceding President Johnson's bombing halt announcement last Thursday night.

Only Thieu himself, Vice President Nguyen Cao Ky, and perhaps one other top official were privy to the U.S. plan as it developed from Oct. 9 to last Thursday. Ambassador Ellsworth Bunker, on orders from Washington, had warned Thieu not to let his official family into the secret of the delicate negotiations going on in Paris.

Bunker's explanation to Thieu reflected Washington's desire for total security. Bunker's explanation: If Thieu spilled the beans to top officials of his own government, there would have been leaks all over the place, the element of secrecy regarded as essential here would have been lost, and political backfires against de-escalation would have started in Saigon.

What complicated this was that Thieu himself apparently did not realize the extent of opposition within his own government. Thieu, in fact, at least temporarily lost control over his own administration and was unable to deliver the support for the U.S. plan that Bunker expected.

According to well-placed authorities here, this inability of President Thieu to persuade his own government to support President Johnson was a total surprise to both Bunker and Washington. But there is reason to believe that Bunker was counting on a few more days for Thieu--and Bunker himself--to break the work to leading Saigon politicians, including both Catholic leaders and right-wing politicians in the National Assembly, and win them over to the peace plan.

The original target for ending the bomb halt, had all gone according to plan, was Nov. 6--one day after the U.S. election. Through this timing, Mr. Johnson would avoid any accusation of playing politics with war and peace in Vietnam.

What threw the timetable out of whack was the unexpected speed with which Hanoi told U.S. negotiators in Paris that they would accept a Saigon negotiating team at the Paris peace talks--the toughest of all the obstacles in the way of a bomb halt.

When the President received this word from Paris, he and his principal advisers considered holding off until the day after the election, sticking to the original timetable. They decided not to for an obvious reason: U.S. lives could be lost in those intervening three days. But the decision cut short Thieu's time to prepare his own government for the news.

Against that background, the somewhat similar plight of newly-elected President Eisenhower in 1953 has now been brought out for study inside the Johnson administration.

Hard-line South Korean President Syngman Rhee reacted with uncontrolled bitterness when the U.S. (under the aegis of the United Nations) signed a ceasefire with the North Koreans. Not only did he denounce the ceasefire, he threatened to march his South Korean troops north, raising the spectre of clashes between South Koreans and Americans. Secretary of State John Foster Dulles sent Gen. Maxwell Taylor, top field commander, an urgent message to keep Rhee "on a tight leash."

Rhee's fury faded. With his troops dependent on U.S. ammunition and supplies, his position was hopeless. The threat of a march to the north petered out and the ceasefire held.

This is the pattern Johnson administration officials are now confident will be duplicated in Saigon. If the Saigon boycott truly jeopardized the Paris talks, the political reaction in the U.S. could be swift and remorseless, leading to a break in the Washington-Saigon axis and perhaps an irresistible demand on the new President to bring the boys back home and leave Saigon to its own devices. That possibility will weigh on Thieu today as it did on Rhee in 1953.

The UFP Answers The Opposition

We of the UFP wish to lift the charge of "shadow candidates" leveled against our opposition. In yesterday's Collegian, Fred Chanowski, Steve Driscoll, and Ernie Lepore brought accusations against us that were erroneous in their content and showed a complete lack of intellectual quality.

Chanowski, upholding a standard of loud, irresponsible techniques, claimed that the UFP candidates were running as write-ins because they "neglected to read the election rules and thus were too late to pass in nomination papers." It should be noted that we of the United Freshmen Party have entered the race because we feel the top running candidates would be inadequate as class leaders. Another important point that should be made is that Chanowski passed in his nomination papers late, yet was still able to enter the contest. What's the story Fred?

Steve Driscoll accused the UFP of "making promises on unspecified aspects of academic reform." It appears that Steve has neglected to read the basic platform of the UFP, which states quite emphatically that the academic reforms would be more pass-fail courses and the study of foreign languages on a voluntary basis. Driscoll also criticized the UFP for trying to initiate matters other than social into student government. It is the belief of the UFP that class officers should be willing to challenge administrative policies with which a majority of students disagree.

Ernie Lepore, charging the UFP with "senseless promises", unwittingly revealed his candidacy as class president to be senseless. He seems to have forgotten that Freshmen students are no longer high school kids who can be easily influenced by vague statements and slanderous charges. Another one of Ernie's statements was that the UFP "campaigns only in the Southwest", which is completely false. UFP candidates have campaigned on Orchard Hill, at Van Meter, Grayson, and surrounding areas, posting notices and speaking with students. And Ernie, the UFP has also campaigned at Crabtree, Dwight, Mary Lyons, etc., your own home ground. Haven't you noticed?

Being write-in candidates, we of the United Freshmen Party, have had to work particularly hard in voicing our ideas. We have gained strong support from interested, intelligent Freshmen. The final choice lies with you, the student, on election day. Consider us. Make comparisons. And then decide.

UMass Flying Redmen

To the editor:

I am a member of the University of Massachusetts Flying Redmen, the campus drill team, and was part of the contingent that marched in the Homecoming parade Friday, Oct. 25th. During the parade, we received many snid remarks and much heckling, which we have come to expect in this day and age. However, some of what was said and done has prompted me to write this letter in an attempt to erase some popular misconceptions about our team and to admonish a few people.

First, I address myself to the many people who yelled "ROTC killers," "ROTC monsters," etc. at us. We are NOT an ROTC group. As our team title (wordy though it is) indicates, we are the UNIVERSITY of MASSACHUSETTS Flying Redmen Drill Team (emphasis my own). We are an RSO organization, with the status of a club, and our membership is open to any member of the student body, male or female. At drill competitions we march in the University's name, and our emblem is the University Seal.

Second, the snide remarks about our bayonets being covered with plastic scabbards should be dealt with. Personally, I was surprised that people were even stupid enough to remark about it. If you were going to march in a parade, wouldn't you take precautions to avoid hurting any people who might wander into the parade route? As some people might have noticed, there were several times when we had to stop a spin in order to avoid hitting bystanders. There are two major problems in this area -- young children who don't know any better than to get near a spinning rifle, and the college student who is too drunk and/or stupid to watch out for what's going on around him.

Third on the list is the many people who shouted false commands and generally attempted to blow our cadence and concentration. If you can think of nothing better to do than try to ruin the results of hours upon hours of practice and teamwork, to try to publically embarrass a peforming group of fellow students, then you are in pretty sad shape intellectually.

Last, I would like to remark about the group of Revelers that followed and pestered us throughout the entire parade. I do not direct these remarks to the entire Reveler organization, for I have no way of knowing whether this group was representative of the whole, and I don't know if their actions would be condoned. As I understand it, this organization is supposed to be formed of intelligent, active students with a desire to furthur campus spirit. The group that reveled us was adolescent in charactor, childish in behavior and managed to present a thoroughly uninspiring image for the Revelers. If this group was representative of the whole, God help the Revelers, and if they were't, perhaps the organization could restrain its more juvenile members while they wear the red and white blazer, so as to preserve their excellent reputation from further decay.

I invite any student who thinks he has the strength to throw a ten pound rifle around for an hour, and the nerve to march through a meatgrinder without bayonet scabbards to come to one of our practice sessions. We meet every week night, Monday thru Friday, at 6:00 p.m. in the parking lot behind Dickinson Hall. Come try out, and if you're good enough, you might be marching with the Redmen this year.

In closing, I would like to thank the many people who watched, appreciated and applauded our performance - you make it all worth while.

Robert J. Pustell

Advice to the Collegian

To the editor:

Why is so much of the money from the students' activities fees given to the Collegian? Frankly, it is a waste. Ever since the Collegian began printing five times a week, it has worsened in its coverage. Because it needs filler, it prints the same story over and over. It is pretty sickening to read and reread a review of a concert or lecture for several days after the initial article.

The Collegian is lacking in its appeal to the student body. It needs more articles related to student interests such as in-depth reports on the different student organizations and what they are trying to accomplish. (Many of the organizations on campus are seeking new members, but a large majority of students are unaware of these organizations, e.g. Belchertown Volunteers, etc.) Students also lack complete knowledge of Student Senate happenings. What about a record of the individual Student Senators' voting and attendance to be printed in the Collegian? More articles on campus issues such as open housing, women's curfews, and academic reform and how these issues affect the students are also needed.

Why print so many articles from the syndicated news services? We can always read them in the Boston Globe! Or is the Collegian trying to be a miniature Boston Globe? We can always buy a Globe at the newsstand!

If the Collegian does not improve its coverage, student money should not be given to the newspaper. There are other organizations and newspapers on campus that could put the money to better use.

as the phones are removed or bills paid was also passed. What this would actually do would be to pay for the expenses incurred in the collection of the debts.

In passing three motions proposed by Senator Kilmartin, the Senate charged three of its committees with investigations or studies. The first of these was a charge to the Academic Affairs committee to study the desirability of a change from the present system of a five course load per semester to that of a four course load. The second investigation will be one made by the Student Matters Committee. They will attempt to answer the questions: "are dorm counselors necessary?" and "should the position of dorm counselor be abolished?"

Finally, the Services Committee will conduct an investigation of the University Book Store. Among the pertinent questions to be answered by this investigation is one which asks "Would a cooperative bookstore be better than the present system. This last investigation has a deadline of the last Senate meeting in February, 1969.

In the final action of the evening, Senate Vice-President Fred Hartwell called up the motion to reconsider the Senate's action which put them philosophically behind the actions of the United Farmworkers in California.

Engineering and Science at IBM

"You're treated like a professional right from the start."

"The attitude here is, if you're good enough to be hired, you're good enough to be turned loose on a project," says Don Feistamel.

Don earned a B.S.E.E. in 1965. Today, he's an Associate Engineer in systems design and evaluation at IBM. Most of his work consists of determining modifications needed to make complex data processing systems fit the specialized requirements of IBM customers.

Depending on the size of the project, Don works individually or in a small team. He's now working with three other engineers on part of an air traffic control system that will process radar information by computer. Says Don: "There are only general guidelines. The assignment is simply to come up with the optimum system."

Set your own pace

Recently he wrote a simulation program that enables an IBM computer to predict the performance of a data processing system that will track satellites. He handled that project himself. "Nobody stands over my shoulder," Don says. "I pretty much set my own pace."

Don's informal working environment is typical of Engineering and Science at IBM. No matter how large the project, we break it down into units small enough to be handled by one person or a few people.

Don sees a lot of possibilities for the future. He says, "My job requires that I keep up to date with all the latest IBM equipment and systems programs. With that broad an outlook, I can move into almost any technical area at IBM—development, manufacturing, product test, space and defense projects, programming or marketing."

It takes a lot of time, effort, energy, and work to put on a broadway production. This year, the members of the guild are devoting all this and more towards making "Annie Get Your Gun" their most successful presentation to date. Under the able direction of Miss Marya Bednerik with musical direction provided by Mr. William Neigher, the show is progressing very well and will indeed prove to be very entertaining and enjoyable for an evening out.

So to give you an idea of what's to come and what it takes for it to happen, we'd like to present some pictures of the Guild members "doing their thing".

Gun Control Act of 1968 Establishes 30-Day Registration Period, Nov. 2-Dec.1

Anyone having an unregistered machine gun, sawed-off shotgun, short barrelled rifle or other gangster-type weapon, or device such as, bomb, grenade or land mine, may register it with the Internal Revenue Service without penalty from November 2, 1968 through December 1, 1968. The Gun Control Act of 1968, signed into law last week, establishes a 30-day period for the registration of certain weapons and destructive devices. The registration requirements do not effect ordinary rifles, shotguns, pistols and revolvers.

The Gun Control Act Law provides that information or evidence submitted in registering a weapon during this period cannot be used against the registrant in any criminal proceeding arising out of a prior or concurrent violation of the law. However, this would not prevent prosecution for furnishing false information.

Former servicemen should register any automatic weapon, pistol with shoulder stocks or other national firearms acts weapon they might have as a souvenir of their military days.

The registration requirement for gangster-type weapons dates back to the National Firearms Act of 1934. There is no federal registration requirement for ordinary rifles, shot guns, pistols and revolvers although certain controls of the sale of these weapons become effective December 16, 1968 as part of the new gun law.

Anyone who possesses a firearm or destructive device as defined by the National Firearm Act, and who fails to register the weapon between November 2 and December 1, 1968 as required by the Gun Control Act, will be subject to imprisonment up to 10 years, a fine up to $10,000 or both for each weapon not registered.

Under certain conditions the law provides civil penalties and property forfeitures.

Smith College Presents 3-Day Seminar On 'The Impact Of Human Expansion'

How much, how fast, and how much longer can man change his world without disaster?

This weekend at Smith College, a U. S. Congressman and four scientists will try to find the limits. They will be participants in a three-day symposium on "The Impact of Human Expansion."

"The United States has just finished an election campaign in which the candidates have not taken positions on the truly important problems as seen by ecologists," believes one speaker, Dr. Lamont C. Cole. "It is inconceivable that the public could be apathetic about these problems if they understood them. So, our present situation must be attributed to alarming ignorance."

U. S. Congressman Hastings Keith of West Bridgewater, Mass., will speak on "Responsible Leadership in a Man-Dominated Environment." He has served as a Congressional delegate to a United Nations affiliate group studying oil pollution threats to the seas by oil tankers similar to the ill-fated Torrey Canyon. He has submitted a report on the international control of oil pollution to Congress.

The Vanderbilt Symposium sessions will be held in Sage Hall Friday and Saturday. The symposium is being made possible by the Sarah Sanderson Vanderbilt Fund, established in 1955 to enrich the cultural and intellectual life of the college with unusual speakers and events.

Dr. Cole, a professor of ecology at Cornell and frequent consultant and member of advisory panels for various government agencies, will speak on "The Limits of Environmental Destruction" at 2:30 p.m. Friday. At 4 p.m. Friday, "The Ecology of Catastrophe" will be topic of a lecture by University of British Columbia Professor of Zoology Crawford Stanley Holling.

Friday evening at 8, University of Colorado Professor of Psychology E. James Archer will lecture on the topic "The Price of a Better World."

Congressman Keith will speak at 10 a.m. Saturday. Following his lecture, a panel session with the symposium speakers will be held at 11:30 a.m. The moderator will be Dr. Dennis H. Chitty, National Science Foundation Senior Foreign Scientist Fellow in the biological sciences; he is currently at Smith.

The panel session will give the audience a chance to get responses to questions pre-solicited from them. It will also offer an opportunity for exchanges on the urgency, priorities and course of action seen as needed for planning environmental conditions.

Says Professor Hollings: "... man's institutions are incapable of changing rapidly enough to absorb the high rate of increase of the problems. There is a weak signal from the environment, and institutions, because of their history, cannot respond to the signal. The result is ecological and sociological 'violence'."

Lt. Gen. Sir John Glubb Lectures On Arab-Israeli Confrontation

"A New Look at the Arab-Israeli Confrontation" will be the subject of a lecture by Lt. Gen. Sir John Glubb, when he speaks on Friday, November 8, at 4:30 p.m. in the Converse Assembly Room at Amherst College. The lecture is open without charge to the public.

The son of Major General Sir Frederic Glubb, educated at Cheltenham College, England, and the Royal Military Academy, Sir John was first posted to the Middle East in 1920 as a British Army officer in Iraq. He resigned from the British Army in 1925 to work in the governments of Iraq and Transjordan, where he became one of the most widely publicized military men of his time and a distinguished scholar and writer about the Arab world. From 1930 to his abrupt dismissal in 1956, he served in Transjordan (later the Kingdom of Jordan) and is perhaps best known as the creator of the Arab Legion, of which he became Chief of Staff in 1939.

Author of numerous books which have been widely read in England, Sir John is perhaps most familiar to American readers through WAR IN THE DESERT, THE GREAT ARAB CONQUESTS and THE COURSE OF EMPIRE. A SHORT HISTORY OF THE ARAB PEOPLES is now in press.

Prior to his long service in the Middle East, Sir John served in France and Belgium in the First World War, was three times wounded and was awarded the Military Cross.

Three-Day Jazz Weekend At Amherst To Explore Roots Of Contemporary Jazz

The roots of contemporary jazz will be explored in depth at Amherst College November 8, 9, and 10 as two professional groups, the Paul Winter Contemporary Consort and the Harold McKinney Quintet, share the stage of Buckley Recital Hall with three student groups, the Amherst Jazz Orchestra, the Meyer-Conn Quintet, and the Elysian Time Machine from UMass. The three-day Jazz Weekend, sponsored by the Amherst Faculty Lecture Committee, includes concerts on Friday and Saturday evenings (Nov. 8 and 9) and on Sunday afternoon (Nov. 10), as well as two workshop sessions with the visiting artists. All events will take place in the new Amherst Music Building and are open to the public without charge.

The Jazz Weekend opens at 8 p.m. Friday with a concert by the McKinney Quintet in the Buckley Recital Hall. This all-Negro group specializes in the exploration of the Black origins of contemporary jazz in the primitive tribal rhythms of Africa. Their leader, Howard McKinney, is the pianist for the group, which also includes Marcus Belgrave on trumpet and Roderick Ricks on Bass. McKinney will also conduct the first workshop session on the influence of African music on the contemporary jazz idiom on Saturday at 10 a.m. in the Music Building's instrumental rehearsal room.

The second part of the Jazz Weekend program will feature the Paul Winter Contemporary Consort, first in a workshop session in the instrumental rehearsal room at 2 p.m. Saturday and later in an 8 p.m. concert in the Buckley Recital Hall. The Winter Consort is widely known for its efforts to bring to contemporary jazz the influences of classical musical forms. First organized by Winter as a jazz sextet at Northwestern University, the group won the Intercollegiate Jazz Festival in 1961 and was then sent by the State Department on a tour of 23 Latin american countries. This group, which evolved into the present Contemporary Consort, takes as its idiom such diverse sources as Bartok, Villa-Lobos and Charles Mingus, as well as interpretations of music by such contemporary writers as Pete Seeger, Bob Dylan and the Beatles. The Consort has given a concert at the White House, at the invitation of President and Mrs. John F. Kennedy. The group, which derives its name "Consort" from instrumental groups of the early Renaissance, features Paul Winter on Saxophone, Richard Bok on Cello, Gene Betroncini on Guitar, Jim Kappes on percussion, Virgil Scott on Flute, Gene Murrow on English Horn and John Beal on bass. Ruth Ben Zvi, a talented guest artist from Tel Aviv, Israel, will also play the unique Israeli drum, known as the Darbuke or Jar-drum.

The Amherst Jazz Orchestra, under the direction of Jim Meyer '69, will open the Sunday afternoon concert in the Recital Hall at 2 p.m.

Comedy by Pirandello To Open At Kirby Theatre, Friday

SIX CHARACTERS IN SEARCH OF AN AUTHOR will open the 1968-69 Kirby Theater season at Amherst College on Friday evening, November 8. The contemporary "Comedy in the Making" by Luigi Pirandello will be given six performances by the Amherst College Masquers, November 8, 9, 10, and 22, 23, 24 at 8:30 p.m.

Heading the cast, which includes members of the Amherst Masquers and students from Smith and Mount Holyoke Colleges, is Steve Collins '69 as the Father, Jon Alper '71 as the Son. Hugh Laurence '70 will be seen as the Director. The Boy is played by Jay Williams, son of Mrs. Marion L. Williams of Kendrick Place, Amherst.

Among the female characters, major roles will be played by Sarah Harris, as the Stepdaughter, and Meri Golden as the Mother. Both girls are students at Smith.

Tickets for all performances of SIX CHARACTERS IN SEARCH OF AN AUTHOR may be purchased at the Kirby Theater Box Office weekdays from 10:00 a.m. to 12:00 noon and from 2:00 to 5:00 p.m. Seats are $1.50 for Friday and Sunday performances and $2.00 for Saturday evenings. Tickets may also be reserved by telephoning the Box Office, 542-2278.

Professor Schoenfeld Speaks On Behavioral Research, Nov. 8 At Amherst

Professor William N. Schoenfeld, of Flushing, New York, will speak at Amherst College on Friday, November 8, at 2:30 p.m. in the Converse Assembly Room on the topic: "Theory and Research in Contemporary Studies in Behavior." The lecture is open without charge to the public.

Professor Schoenfeld, professor of psychology at City University of New York, Queens, and for many years in an equivalent post at Columbia University, presently holds a clinical professorship in psychiatry at the Cornell Medical School. He is the co-author of one of the leading texts, entitled PRINCIPLES OF PSYCHOLOGY with F. S. Keller, and his numerous publications have provided guidance for behavior research over the past two decades.

A Fellow of the American Psychological Association and a consultant to both the National Institutes of Health and the Veterans Administration, Professor Schoenfeld received his bachelor's degree from City College of New York and both the M.A. (1939) and Ph. D. (1942) from Columbia University, where he taught for 22 years.

Will Holy Cross Be 'Up' Saturday ?

Crusaders Feature Top Grade Personnel

By MIKE CURRAN
SPORTS EDITOR

What happens when two above average football teams suffering through disastrous seasons meet head on? Saturday's game between Holy Cross and UMass at Fitton Field will provide an answer.

The Crusaders, who started the season with a confident attitude, have acquired a 1-4-1 record and with it, a losing attitude. Last week's 47 - 0 loss to Syracuse before Holy Cross' hometown fans was the real crusher. Sophomore coach Tom Bolsture will be hard-pressed to get his squad high for UMass.

Holy Cross doesn't necessarily need the greatest inspiration however. A win is a win and the Crusaders have had the personnel needed for victory all along. Redmen coach Vic Fusia has said that, "they have the best personnel of any team we've faced this year."

One of Holy Cross' brightest stars may not be starting Saturday. Boisture, in an effort to bolster an offense which has produced only three touchdowns in the last four games, has decided to bench senior quarterback Phil O'Neil in favor of a sophomore, Mark Mowatt.

Mowatt, a Detroit native, is probably the Crusaders fastest runner and can be expected to call a few option plays. O'Neil, who will see plenty of service if Mowatt can't get Holy Cross moving, is a passing quarterback. Last season he threw for 10 touchdowns.

Others in the Crusader backfield will be Steve Jutras, the team's leading ground gainer, fullback Tom Lamb and flanker Ed Murphy.

End Bob Neary, a pro prospect, is the leading pass receiver. His moves will give the Redmen secondary a stiff challenge. Tight end Jim McLowry, a sophomore, uses his size, 6'3, 225, well.

The offensive line is made up of tackles Bill Monceruz and Vin Doyle, guards Charlie Boytano and Doug Kane, and center Vic Lewandowski. This is the biggest spot.

Linebackers John Garva, Paul Jcopetski and Dan Raymondi also form an experienced unit. Their play was improving considerably until the Syracuse debacle.

similar to UMass, except that he is known as a 'crusader' rather than a 'chief'. Junior Mark Doherty fills this spot. A good lacrosse player, Doherty has adapted well to his defensive position after being the second string quarterback on last year's squad.

Web Knight, Mark Beert and John O'Sullivan are the defensive backs who round out the Purple's starting team. The academic loss of Co-Captain Bob Kurcz is still being felt at the defensive halfback postion.

opposing line the UMass defensive front four will face all year. Each of the above five is over 6' and weighs more than 225.

End Pat Bourge and tackle Ralph Williams are the defensive standouts. Mike Cummings is another veteran lineman. Fred MacDonald will probably be at the other line

UMass 2, SC 1

Two second half goals by Springfield College were enough to tip a hustling band of UMass booters 2 - 1, yesterday at Varsity Field. The loss drops the Redmen record to 3 - 6 while Springfield remains undefeated at 9-0-3.

The Chiefs, who outshot UMass 16 to 6, broke the ice with a third quarter goal which was set up by some nifty passing on the part of the half-backs and forwards. The second, and what proved to be the winning goal, came on a penalty kick.

Steve Blanchette did the scoring for UMass on a beautiful shot which caught the Springfield goalie out of position. His goal seemed to provide the necessary emotional lift for the Redmen to forge ahead, but some conservative play on the part of the Chiefs gave UMass very few further opportunities.

Redmen coach Pete Broaca was disconsolate following the game. "I've lost so many 2 - 1 contests that there is little to say. The kids hustled and did everything possible but we just couldn't tip it the other way". He had praise for goalie Steve Kramer who "played a great game" and several others. But, when you lose, as he implied, words mean little.

Bruins Slam Philly 7-1 Move Into First Place

BOSTON (AP) - Ken Hodge banged in a rebound to cap a sustained power play barrage and rookie Wayne Cashman followed up with his first National Hockey League goal Wednesday night as the Boston Bruins scored three times in the second period en route to a 7 to 1 victory over the Philadelphia Flyers.

The triumph boosted the Bruins past idle Montreal into first place in the NHL's East Division.

Boston's Tommy Williams opened the scoring with the first of his two goals in the second period and then Hodge tapped in the rebound on Bobby Orr's shot.

Gary Dornhiefer scored for the Flyers while they were a man up a minute later but Cashman hiked the margin again when he scored from in front.

Phil Esposito, Gary Doak and Derek Sanderson tallied one each in the final period as the game turned into a rout.

McLain All Set

DETROIT (AP) - Detroit Tiger pitcher Denny McLain, Most Valuable Player in the American League, said Wednesday he won't have any trouble winning again next year if he stays healthy.

"If I can stay healthy, I don't fear winning," he said. "I just hope and pray the Tigers continue scoring runs."

Detroit bats gave Denny an average of five runs a game to help him to a phenomenal 31 - 6 record and led the Tigers to their first pennant and first World Series triumph in 23 years.

McLain won one Series game, despite being bothered by a shoulder ailment that forced him to take a cortisone shot two days before his victroy in order to ease the pain and reduce the inflammation.

Bears' Sayers Named Top Offensive Player

NEW YORK (AP) - On the theory that a man who runs for 205 yards against Green Bay rates the nod over a field goal kicker, even if the latter does win the game, the Associated Press has named Gale Sayers of the Chicago Bears as the offensive player of the week in the National Football League.

Sayers even outdid himself Sunday in Green Bay with 205 yards on 24 carries, his best day since he gained 284 yards as a sophomore at Kansas against Oklahoma State.

"We won," said Sayers after the Bears' 13 - 10 victory, "That's the main thing. It doesn't make any difference how many yards I make. We're leading our division tied with Minnesota. That's what counts."

In addition to piling up the yardage, Sayers was used as a decoy while others carried the ball. One Chicago score came when the Packers keyed on Sayers who ran right while quarterback Virgil Carter bootlegged for two yards to the left.

Of course, it was Mac Percival's 43-yard field goal in the final 26 seconds on a free kick that won the game. Percival's streak of 11 consecutive field goals was broken earlier in the game but the former school teacher made it 11 out of 12 with the game-winner.

NASL Ready To Reorganize

ST. LOUIS (AP) - The owners of the St. Louis Soccer Stars announced Wednesday that they expected nine other former North American Soccer League teams to join them in organizing an all star squad. The squad would play at least four games against foreign teams in each city next summer.

The NASL announced last Friday that the league was disbanding because of financial reasons.

Robert Hermann, Star's president, said the St. Louis team would be joined by former franchises in Kansas City, Atlanta, Cleveland, Dallas, Oakland, Detroit, Washington, Baltimore and New York.

Hermann said the plan would be submitted Saturday to the National commission of the United States Soccer Football Association in New York.

Lepore Elected Freshman President; Pledges Unity

By ANNE GARDINE

Ernie Lepore, freshmen class president, was in high spirits as he celebrated his victory in this years' freshmen student election.

Elected along with Lepore were Steve Driscoll, Vice President, Linda Peruzzi, Secretary, Lee Deering, Treasurer, and Robert Nims, Senator at Large.

Lepore will attempt to unite the class by having representatives from each dorm on his executive council. All the freshmen will be encouraged to become active in the committees of the council. There will also be a dialogue between the girls' and boys' dorms on campus.

Even though only 900 out of 3200 freshmen voted, Lepore did not think it was due to a lack of interest. He thought most of the freshmen stayed away because of the rain and scheduling of classes. With an average of 1000 students going to the poll each year in fine weather, he thought the 900 represented a good portion of the class.

Lepore was enthusiastic about his plans for the coming year. He wants the class of '72 to break with tradition. First he will hold a meeting of the new officers to obtain their views and help. He is particularly pleased with

In what has become a campus tradition, Freshmen candidates campaigned on election day, in front of the Student Union. This election had an added interesting feature, as a group of candidates ran on a write-in party slate. All of them, however, lost. (MDC photo by Mike Alpert)

President-Elect Nixon

Johnson-Nixon Power Transfer Plans Formed

WASHINGTON (AP) -- A representative of President-elect Richard M. Nixon called at the White House today to pursue preparations for the transition of power from President Lyndon B. Johnson.

The representative was Franklin B. Lincoln Jr., a member of Nixon's New York law firm and a former assistant secretary of defense in the Dwight D. Eisenhower administration.

Before the election Johnson invited each of the presidential candidates to name a representative to get the transition of power started early - the actual transfer of power will come next Jan. 2 - and Lincoln has had previous talks with Murphy. But today's visit was his first consultation since the election.

There has been no personal meeting since the election between Nixon and Johnson but the President's press secretary, George Christian, noted today that Johnson has told Nixon he will cooperate in every way possible to effect a smooth transition.

Nixon and his running mate, Spiro T. Agnew, will be beneficiaries of more advance planning for the transfer of goverment than ever before in history.

They will be the first to avail themselves of a $75,000 transitional expense account provided by Congress.

Lincoln was accompanied on today's visit by another associate in the Nixon firm, William Harmon. Also participating in the talks with Murphy was William Blackburn, a lawyer on the White House staff.

These, he noted, involved the preparation of a State of the Union message to Congress, usually delivered to a joint session early in the new Congress, the preparation of the budget, which is the outgoing President's responsibility, and such things as an economic message which must be presented before Johnson leaves office.

Election Complaints Highlights Fourth S.U.G. Board Meeting

BY SHARON SAMUELS
Staff Reporter

Several protesters from the MFP (Mass. Freedom Party) attended last night's meeting of the SUG Board to issue a three fold complaint about the nature of yesterday's election procedures.

The mfp's complaints were as follows: first, that the name of one of the party's candidates had not been listed with other SUG Board candidates in Wednesday's issue of the Collegian, secondly, that the middle initial F. of two of the candidates had been censored by the Board and omitted from the ballot, and thirdly, that no provisions had been made on the SUG Board ballots for write-in votes.

The Board Chairman apologized for the omission of the party's candidate's name as an oversight. Another representative explained the omission of the initial, saying that it was their policy to list only one middle initial on a ballot. The representative explained that any write-in votes had been counted in the election.

These complaints evoked a discussion among board members concerning their election procedures. It was decided that a definite election policy would be drawn up and adopted into the constitution before the Board's next election.

Mention of the Board's lack of adequate publicity of it's upcoming elections was made by Jack Dean, Editor in Chief of the Collegian, attending the meeting.

He stated that every year the election sneaks up with few people being aware of it.

This brought discussion by SUG board members as to the extent of publicity that should be given to their elections. No decisions were made.

The fact that students, rather than the state, would be responsible for the burden of payment of the costs of the new campus center was made known during a discussion of usage priority of the floors of the building. Only a small part of the costs will be payed by anyone other than students. These funds will come from conferences utilizing the center's facilities during the academic year.

In further business, mention was made of the fact that membership on a subcommittee for the new campus center originally for SUG Board members only, was now open to the whole campus. Applications for membership on the subcommittee are available now in the RSO Office.

Nutrition Expert Delivers Talk on World Problems

Dr. Jean Mayer, expert in the fields of health and nutrition, delivered a lecture in Mahar Auditorium last night on "Nutrition and Civilization."

The visiting lecturer's main theme was that as civilization develops, health problems change. Some of these problems may be solved, but new civil and ethical ones arise.

Dr. Mayer pointed out that problems of malnutrition were not simply limited to "poor, or underdeveloped countries." He cited the American Indians and migratory workers as examples.

It was stated that the world's rate of food production has kept up with the birth rate, and that it will continue to do so. The production rate has, in fact, increased steadily through the past years.

Much of the lecture was concerned with the causes of cardiovascular deaths. High cholesterol diets, obesity, and lack of exercise were cited as causes.

Throughout the lecture, Dr. Mayer emphasized the importance of preventive health measures. In his closing statement he made the plea to the audience: "I beg you to define the type of life you would like to have, consider any drawbacks, and then plan how to achieve it."

A discussion period followed at Crampton House.

ing year. The first event will be a freshmen dance sometime around Dec. 7. Also the officers want to see the freshmen included in the trip to Montreal which is being sponsored by the seniors.

Lepore wants to innovate a living yearbook. This would be accomplished by taking moving pictures of special events each year. They would then be put into a film and shown to the class.

Even though the office of president is a social position, Lepore feels that a great deal of learning is accomplished in social events. his fellow officers and envisions accomplishing a good deal with them.

He also plans a meeting with all the candidates who lost since they have expressed a desire to be on the executive committee. Lepore felt this election was different from preceding years because there was a close feeling of unity among the candidates and everyone expresses a willingness to pitch in and help.

The new president and his fellow officers have already begun to think about some of the activities they will be sponsoring this com-

Growing Tension in Middle East Prompts Several Reposed Plans

BY MARY GAULT
College Press Service

BEIRUT, Lebanon (CPS) - Twenty years of peace proposals and three Arab-Israeli wars have not yet effected either peace or "secure and recognized" boundaries within the Middle East. Nor is the latest rash of peace plans likely to alter the situation.

Israeli forces entangling with the Palestinian resistance fighters in almost-daily futile skirmishes. A recent incident involving a hand-grenade explosion in Hebron (occupied territory) resulted in nearly 40 dead and several wounded. The incident was the finale to a week of mounting tension - a week in which Jews in Hebron had persisted in entering the Muslim mosque of Ibrahimi, with little consideration for the proper visiting hours and the rituals Muslims feel are obligatory on entry into the mosque.

The Jews, on the other hand, claimed they had the right to visit the mosque because the tomb of Ibrahim (whom they also consider an ancestor) is located there. The hand-grenade interrupted them as they were on their way to the mosque.

Such incidents, as well as reports of increased Soviet contact with the Resistance movement, make the casual observer here even more skeptical about recent peace plans. For despite past and newly presented plans, the situation appears to contain even more explosive potential than ever.

Israelis who thought they could demand security and a protective demilitarized zone after Israel's lightning 1967 victory, now realize that maintenance of the State itself calls for military force. Most objective Israelis further acknowledge that the latest peace plans amount to little, since the Arab states, supported by the Palestinian people themselves, agreed at the Khartoum conference last year not to recognize the state of Israel AS IT EXISTS TODAY.

Although they would certainly recognize the Jewish inhabitants, they do not recognize the existence of the state of Israel, an exclusively Jewish state, which, in their opinion has not permitted the Palestinians to live in their own country as free and equal citizens.

Mr. Humphrey's and Abba Ebau's plans fail to take such Arab opinion into account. Such plans cannot, therefore, be regarded as sincere or feasible solutions to the Arab opposition--nor to the Israeli security problem. Because both plans guarantee the non-existence of Palestine by proposing the continued existence of Israel as it exists at present, failure is inherent in both these plans.

Mr. Eban further calls for the withdrawal of Israeli forces from the occupied territories. However, he fails to specify which territories, and Mr. Dayan stated shortly after the presentation of the Eban plan that Sinai must not be evacuated. The Arabs, on the other hand, view the occupied territories as their or that of the Palestinians--who have been neither repatriated nor recompensated for the sudden ejection from their homes. Arabs further insist on the complete withdrawal of Israeli forces from the occupied territories--territories occupied during the '67 war and previously.

Mr. Eban calls for "special status for the holy places in Jerusalem." However, he differentiates between the status of the holy places and that of Jerusalem (the entire old city). This area - the old city of Jerusalem--was internationalized by the UN. It is sacred to three faiths; yet the Israelis now occupy it and show no signs of relinquishing it. The Arabs stand by what the UN has resolved and by what the U.S. has also demanded: that the entire old city of Jerusalem maintain its international status, free from control by one state.

Both Mr. Eban and Mr. Humphrey call for a settlement of the refugee problem either by the world community or by the Middle Eastern states. This appears, here, as an overt example of "passing the buck." Arabs demand that Israel deal with the Palestinians themselves: they should, after all, be allowed to speak for themselves. The Palestinians, for their part, say their case is not merely one of refugees, but that of a people evicted from their land by force, and that the solution is a return to Palestine - a new state in which Jew and Palestinian can live as equal citizens with equal rights.

Although both plans have little feasibility from the Arab point of view, Mr. Eban's is certainly the less contemptuous of the two.

Dems Search For New Role In Nation

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Democratic party, preparing to relinquish national power after eight years finds itself with a strong congressional base but in need of considerable rebuilding across the nation.

Republicans, on the other hand, have their greatest strength in the states but are hoping that President-elect Richard M. Nixon, will set a national pace that will finally bring congressional breakthroughs in the 1970 and 1972 elections.

The strong Democratic showing in congressional races, where they lost a net of only four House seats, confirmed their view that the 1966 losses cut the party back to its hard-rock strength in many Northern areas.

Heavily financed, vigorous GOP challenges failed to dislodge Democratic incumbents in many marginal districts and states, even as Nixon was running ahead of Democratic candidate Hubert H. Humphrey in those areas.

In 1970 the Democrats hope to benefit from the usual mid-term gains by the party out of power, even though they will again have to defend a number of Senate seats in normally Republican states and House seats in the large Eastern states where Nixon ran weakest.

It is these big states that present for the Democrats both their brightest promise and their biggest problem.

In one after another, the party machinery is virtually in shambles, and the top positions are in Republican hands. Thus, in New York, Pennsylvania, Michigan, Ohio, Illinois and California, the Democrats have no governors and only three of 21 senators - Philip A. Hart in Michigan, newly elected Alan Cranston of California and 79-year-old Stephen M. Young of Ohio.

The fact that Humphrey carried New York, Pennsylvania and Michigan, and ran relatively well in other states despite severe organizational handicaps, means that the Democrats have a good chance to make comebacks, provided they can reorganize and pick attractive candidates.

In the meantime, they will face next year a governor's election in New Jersey, where Democrat Richard J. Hughes is nearing the end of his second and last four-year term. Their leading possibility is former Gov. Robert Meyner, but several of Tuesday's congressional winners are also possibilities. Other major elections next year will be in such big cities as New York, Los Angeles, Pittsburgh and Cleveland, where Democrats will be trying to retain power.

The Democratic record on the national level may play a considerable role in the party's long-range prospects. For one thing, Nixon, as president, will campaign in 1970 for an end to divided government by election of a Republican congressional majority. A constructive Democratic record would help defeat such a plea.

Senate Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield of Montana, one of the least partisan of congressional leaders, has already pointed the way to such an approach.

In the absence of any strong Democratic leadership in the House, Senate Democrats seem likely to become the party's chief national spokesmen.

The presence there of Sens. Edward M. Kennedy, Eugene J. McCarthy, George S. McGovern and Edmund S. Muskie, plus newly elected Harold E. Hughes of Iowa, virtually assures this.

As for Humphrey, many Democrats feel their defeated candidacy can best serve his party by working to initiate the reforms in party structure noted at the Democratic convention, so that the party will be able to widen its popular base looking toward 1972, especially among the young.

AWOL Soldier Gains Sanctory at M.I.T.

An allegedly AWOL soldier, John M. O'Conner was the man in the middle in his first day of attending classes at Massachusetts Institute of Technology where he is currently in sanctuary.

In a freshman humanities class discussion centering around civil disobedience, students questioned O'Conner's motives for taking santuary.

"If you were fighting against the draft and going into the Army, that is one thing," a student told O'Conner. "But when you enlisted you should have stuck with it."

O'Conner answered he had been "forced into the Army as an alternative to going to jail." Another student also defended the soldier's motives, stating: "When you are 17 years old you don't really know what you are doing."

A faculty committee at M.I.T. Monday recommended that O'Conner be allowed to attend classes at the sanctuary site in the Student Center only.

O'Conner, who has been at M.I.T. for more than a week, also attended classes on the Spanish Civil War, architecture and current events.

During the day, the sanctuary site was changed from a second floor hall to a room on the fourth floor.

Red Cross Blood Drive in Student Union Room Early Next Week

The annual University of Massachusetts Student Blood Drive, sponsored by the University Women and Student Service and religious organizations in cooperation with the Hampshire County Red Cross, will be November 12, 13, 14 in the Commonwealth Room, Student Union.

Appointment cards have been mailed to the 708 students who have pledged to donate a pint of blood. All students who are under 21 are reminded to have the permission slip signed by parents. Bring the signed slip to the blood drive at the time of your appointment. Many permission cards have been returned by mail and are filed, awaiting donor days. Additional permission slips are available at the Infirmary.

The Bloodmobile will arrive at the Student Union with staff and equipment necessary to transform the Commonwealth Room into a complex and smoothly running operation. A physician will be on hand at all times. One hour after arriving at the bloodmobile, the donor will return to normal activity with a membership card for the Hampshire County Red Cross Blood Insurance Program. A Blood Donor record card with his blood type included will be mailed to each donor within a month.

Walk-in donors without appointments, will be accepted, beginning Tuesday afternoon, Nov. 12. Hours for donating are Nov. 12; 11 a.m.-4:45 p.m. Nov. 13: 10 a.m.-3:45 p.m., Nov. 14: 9 a.m.-2:45 p.m.

Commissioner of Education Resigns From Post

Harold Howe II, considered by some to be the most controversial Commissioner of Education in the history of the office, has resigned. Howe became the target of Southern antagonism in Congress for the tough enforcement of his school desegration guidelines which arose out of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. The Southerners were told they must follow these guidelines which they criticized as "going to far too fast" or else lose much needed Federal Funds.

Now 50, Howe, long associated with educational reformers who sought "radical change" in the creaky structure of American education wrote:

"The schools of the future will inherit much from the past, but they should question all past practice before adopting any of it."

What's so special about Beechwood Ageing?

We must be bragging too much about Beechwood Ageing.

Because we're starting to get some flak about it. Like, "Beechwood, Beechwood . . . big deal." And "If Beechwood Ageing is so hot, why don't you tell everybody what it is?"

So we will.

First, it isn't big wooden casks that we age Budweiser in.

But it is a layer of thin wood strips from the beech tree (what else?) laid down in a dense lattice on the bottom of our glass-lined brewing tanks. This is where we let Budweiser ferment a second time. (Most brewers quit after one fermentation. We don't.)

These beechwood strips offer extra surface area for tiny yeast particles to cling to, helping clarify the beer. And since these strips are also porous, they help absorb beer's natural "edge," giving Budweiser its finished taste. Or in other words, "a taste, a smoothness and a drinkability you will find in no other beer at any price."

Ah yes, drinkability. That's what's so special about Beechwood Ageing.

But you know that.

The SWAP Conference – Contributions and Qualms

By PATT FRANCIS
Staff Reporter

All week people asked me where I was going last weekend. All week I answered SWAP. Then inevitably, the question was, what's that? Those who knew said to watch out for the professors.

SEVERAL times after dinner speakers were questioned by faculty members in attendance. The emotional question and answer sessions which followed illustrated the stong feelings connected with academic reforms. (MDC photo by Mark Silverman)

I boarded the bus headed for the SWAP conference at Oak 'n' Spruce resort in South Lee with a great deal of curiosity and some apprehension. What was this strange creature that had built itself such a name on this campus . . . or such a lack of identity?

SWAP stands for Student Workshop for Activities Problems. The delegates are people connected with RSO organizations, faculty members, and members of the administration.

The avowed purpose of SWAP is to provide an opportunity for students, faculty and administration to discuss problems of interest to the university community, and to break down the barriers stemming from their respective positions.

This year the problems were three: the relevance of the curriculum, the student voice, and academics, including pass-fail, the 12-point system, and the physical education requirement.

All of these were eventually quite thoroughly discussed, and some other topics were even added in for good measure. These did not all necessarily have a direct bearing on the topic at hand.

By Sunday morning, there had been resolutions and suggestions made, and an outline of the general lines of discussion in each group was presented to each delegate.

The weekend started out with a great feeling of optimism that the dark cloud over the name of SWAP could be lifted, and that this year, SWAP would be different.

After hearing the keynote speaker, Isadore Silver, the feeling persisted as the delegates broke up into small groups to do some preliminary discussion of the topics.

The feeling STILL persisted as the smaller groups reassembled in the general area of the bar.

Optimism reigned supreme as the delegates staggered into the dining room for breakfast. After a cup of coffee, most of them felt reasonably alert and ready to face the agenda of the day – serious discussion all morning, and then all afternoon, of the topics.

After the morning discussions, the bubble had been broken. The two largest groups had gravitated to the discussions on relevance of the curriculum and student voice. Consequently, these turned out to be the most irrelevent, in terms of topics discussed. By lunch, tempers were worn a little thin, and a number of people were voicing their dissatisfaction with what had ensued. Professor Stanfield of the Sociology department spoke to the assembly and pointed out what he had noticed as failing points in the morning's discussions.

Feeling somewhat more relaxed and refreshed by the break, the delegates reassembled in the discussion groups. Or at least, most of them did. There were some who felt that the game of touch football started during the delay of the start of lunch was more interesting than discussion of the assigned topics. Others found that their beds, and a couple hours of sleep beckoned more strongly than the conference table.

Those who did remain in the discussion sections for the afternoon were finally rewarded with a feeling of having accomplished something. Virtually every group was able to present some sort of positive suggestions for solutions to the problems discussed.

But now comes the hard part. The delegates are back on campus, separated by their divergent interests, living areas, and things like activities other than SWAP. It was easy enough to talk about ways to make a better life at the University while we were nestled in the heart of the Berkshires, away from the topsy-turvy world we call a university. Back on campus, the question is whether or not the people who attended SWAP care enough, or are interested enough, to work to make their propsals known. . . to get something done about them.

There is one other question that came from many people: Is SWAP worth it? In terms of money, I don't think so. The atmosphere of equality between students and the faculty and administration that comes of meeting at, say Oak 'n' Spruce, can be obtained just as easily off-campus in Amherst, or even on-campus, if a certain place (i.e. a dining commons or an area in the Student Union) is set aside for SWAP.

SATURDAY'S morning discussion group, the basis for the recommendations made by the SWAP Conference, were dominated, on the whole, by faculty and administrators. This, however, was corrected to a degree in the afternoon meetings. (MDC photo by Mark Silverman)

Taxes will be deducted from each student's paycheck on the University Student Payroll for work performed after December 29, 1968. This action is necessary to comply with federal and state tax rulings.

Each student employed by the University must have an M-4 and a W-4 form on file. These forms will be available at the Cashiers Office in the Whitmore Administration Building on the November 15, 1968 payroll date. Additional forms may be obtained at the Placement and Financial Aid Office, Room 239, Whitmore Administration Building. All forms should be returned to the Placement and Financial Aid Services Office by November 27, 1968.

If, for any reason, these forms are not filed with Placement and Financial Aid, the maximum tax deduction will be taken.

Collegian Ranks High Among College Newspapers

Dr. Dario Politella, the editor of the DIRECTORY OF THE COLLEGE STUDENT PRESS IN AMerica, ranks the DAILY COLLEGIAN favorably with other college newspapers across the nation.

The DAILY COLLEGIAN, he said, has better photographs than most other college newspapers. As editor of THE COLLEGIATE JOURNALIST, Dr. Politella culls photographs from the college press for this publication, and he chooses more photographs from the DAILY COLLEGIAN than any other college paper in the United States.

From a mechanical standpoint, he considers the DAILY COLLEGIAN a superior paper. The layout, the arrangement of news copy, photographs and advertisements is quite well done in the COLLEGIAN according to Dr. Politella, who is a journalism professor at UMass.

As the 1947 editor of the DAILY COLLEGIAN, Dr. Politella can sympathize with the manpower problems of gathering news. He does have high hopes, however, that a viable program in communications education will be established at the University. Then the DAILY COLLEGIAN will be able to draw students who have the interests in communications that will result in a newspaper that ranks with All-American newspapers as well as being the largest in New England.

Dr. Politella has served as an adviser to magazines and yearbooks at four universities. He considers the 1968 INDEX, the University's yearbook, to be a "breakthrough". From a mechanical standpoint, it was considered by experts to be "good enough" to enter a competition for commercial lithographers.

He said the picture quality of the INDEX has improved but the editors have trouble finding writers. This deficiency of written copy will detract from the yearbook's historical importance ten years after a student graduates, Dr. Politella believes.

Because the yearbook serves the function of a "memory book", it should gain in value as the years pass, he said. Dr. Politella believes a vital, living yearbook should tell a complete story in both pictures and words. If there is no text to point up the meaningfulness of pictures, they will lose their impact, he explained.

Dr. Politella also has high hopes for the INDEX. He believes the 1969 book has a good staff "who are dedicated to producing a book that will favorably reflect the greatness of this campus.

Amherst College Authorize Funds for Students

The Amherst College Trustees have appropriated $30,000 as "seed money" to support a three-part program for disadvantaged secondary school students during the summer of 1969 and next academic year.

The plan was submitted by the joint student-faculty-administration Black and White Action Committee appointed by Amherst President Calvin H. Plimpton last spring shortly after the assassination of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. The Trustees had already authorized creation of a Black Student Center, under supervision of the campus Afro-American Society and open to all members of the college community. The Center was one of the Committee's initial recommendations last May.

The Committee estimates a need of nearly $170,000 to support their proposals during the first year. In their response to the request for funds, the trustees said that the college budget for the current year has already been determined and that they could not finance the entire program as presented. "The magnitude of the request properly reflects the magnitude of the need," they stated, but noted that the chances to attract full support through outside funds for the first year at this date were "distinctly unlikely."

The Board authorized the College's development office to seek the additional money needed and encouraged students and members of the faculty to join in the effort. Individual trustees also indicated their intent to make personal contributions to the program.

The College Chest Drive is seeking $5,000 for it through student contributions, and the physical education department has pledged $2,000 from its members and activities, plus participation in the program during the summer.

Precisionettes March Before Deaf Students

BY RICHARD LANE
Senior Reporter

It was called the "first of this type of work we have done lately."

That's what Linda Bjorkman of the University of Massachusetts Precisionettes has said concerning the group's performance at the Clarke School of the Deaf in Northampton last Sunday.

Clarke School has 200 students from ages 4-1/2 to late teens and early twenties. These youths range from having minor hearing disabilities that would affect their getting along normally in the world to those with "total deafness", according to Miss Bjorkman. The school is run by Dr. Bievins.

The UMass Precisionettes went to the school because "we felt the students would enjoy watching us," and for the "satisfaction of seeing those kids smile," Miss Bjorkman stated.

75 students saw the Precisionettes conduct a three to four minute demonstration of silent drill similar to the girls' Homecoming routine. Simple column and salute movements among others were executed. The important thing was to keep eye attention, she said.

After the performance the Precisionettes met with the students. Miss Bjorkman stated that the youths appeared "quite impressed" about the drill.

Both the students and school's directors invited the UMass girls' drill team to return. Nothing is definitely planned at present, however.

The Precisionettes also performed another act of charity last week in the form of an annual Halloween Parade in Pittsfield.

City officials have called the Precisionettes the "highlight of the parade" over the years, the coed Bjorkman said.

In addition to charitable activities the Precisionettes also perform at football games and various competitions during the spring, highlighted by a trip to Washington, D.C. in April.

Precisionettes are advised by Capt. Kleb of the University Army ROTC Department. The group is 37 members strong, consisting of sophomore, junior and senior girls of the campus. It is an RSO group and University sponsored.

Senior Regina Shepard is the group's commanding officer, Junior Corky Hood is the executive officer and Miss Bjorkman, a Junior is the Precisionettes' sargeant major.

Landscape Dept. Sponsors Dialogue

A series of talks by individuals outside the planning and landscape architecture professions is featured in "The Meaning of Open Space," this year's University of Massachusetts Landscape Architects Association Conference at the University Friday, Nov. 8.

The 23rd annual conference for alumni, students and guests will be held in Memorial Hall with registration beginning at 9 a.m. and the final session ending at 4:30 p.m. Admission is by payment of a registration fee, with special rates for students.

The initial talk will be by Ervin H. Zube, head of the UMass department of landscape architecture. The final summary will be by Dr. James Smith, executive director of the President's Citizen Committee on Recreation and Natural Beauty.

Speakers will be Ben Seligman, director of the UMass Labor Relations and Research Center; Louis Lyons, news commentator; Leo Marx, author of "The Machine in the Garden," Thomas Atkins, Boston city councilman; Alan Gussow, New York artist; Robert Ellis, vice-president of the Travelers Research Corp; Rev. Richard E. Koenig of Immanuel Lutheran Church in Amherst; and Peter Stern, vice-president of Northeast Utilities.

Jointly sponsored by the UMass landscape architecture, the conference is supported by a grant from the Research Center for Outdoor Needs.

SWAP

BY RICHARD STORY
Education Editor

The spirit of SWAP is Sue Tracy's announcement of the first-name policy at the meetings; the Sociologist in Residence telling the faculty and administrators to cool it, talk-wise, in the discussions; and the Utility Infielder from Whitmore. The spirit of SWAP is the first Trustee ever invited, and happy to be there; the Friday-night party in H8 with its amazing mix of people; and the random changing seating at each meal. The spirit of SWAP is the notorious Red Garter Gang: CONEY ISLAND OF THE MIND; and the eager video-tape crew from the School of Education. The spirit of SWAP is the straw grading-preferance poll; the position papers that didn't get read; and the prof that bought the first pitcher of beer.

SWAP has its detractors, of course, and their voices should be heard. But SWAP also has its boosters too. The Red Garter Gang didn't come up with The Plan to reform the University - that shouldn't have been its goal. Besides, any such plan to come out of one 24-hour session would be suspect if it proposed to do such a job. But the intangibilia... there's where it's at, I think. If for no other reason, I think SWAP should be preserved as probably the most valuable institution we have for proving that nobody's really as bad as he's sometimes made out to be - that the folks from the upper floors of Whitmore don't really have horns, fangs, or come dressed in red devil suits.

Speaking only for the group in which I participated - we didn't solve all the University's problems, in practice or even in principle. But the ideas that ran back and forth - the give and take from all sides - made the sessions eminently worthwhile.

The benefits, insights, and fragments of ideas that come back to campus from this annual affair seem to me to be worth far more than any mere $35 fee. The fact that everybody returns to his own constituency makes it all the better, I think - the greater dispersal of ideas and suggestions that results makes it far more likely that some will find a fertile reception and take root.

For the campus-wide mess that was created by the ubiquitous WFCR posters this past weekend, I apologize.

The task of advertising our need for financial support was taken up with more zeal than was helpful. It will not happen again.

"Quiet, Children — Daddy Is Still A Little Shaky"

Student Dissent

It has been generally accepted that adults should guide the new generation in the ways of living the "proper" life. What may we define as proper? I am sure that a cross-section of one hundred individuals would respond with one hundred different answers. So we then ask the question, "Should adults unequivocally hold sway over the life of the younger generation, or not?" And most of this generation will say no.

Where does the responsibility of parent end, and child begin? This society says at the age of twenty-one. Value judgments of past generations have told us when we will be old enough to exercise individual freedom. Who has the right to judge? Who can ever judge? The older generation of this country seems to know what is best for college students. Many adults have never attended college, and those who have lived in a different time. The values of this generation have dramatically changed from those of the last.

Within the structure of American society there is the channel of security - first prepatory school, then college, graduate school or armed forces, marriage, children, social security benefits, medicare, and finally death. Just imagine - preplanned existence. I say that there is nothing wrong with this life for those who want it. But what of those who do not. Have they not the right to pursue their own happiness? Society says no. A college degree is necessary to become an acknowledged person of learning. Since when is there only one way to become educated. The stigma of college as the only way to learn is deep-rooted within our society.

In the Declaration Of Independence it is clearly stated that each individual has the right to "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness". But within the complexities of this society it is no longer a respected way to trudge on.

Those who boycott and dissent in order to bring about a more compatible college atmosphere are kicked, jeered, and excoriated. Only because they are working toward an ideal - for something which they strongly believe. I do not condone violence in order to obtain change, but the price one pays to be himself is heartbreaking.

In this land of freedom dissenters are spat upon just for not accepting. But those who jeer are the ones who fear. They fear their own security. Is this not also a selfish attitude of those who accept the American way of life. What has happened to the respect for the right of dissension?...

The Muskie Phenomenom

BY ROWLAND EVANS AND ROBERT NOVAK

WASHINGTON - Shortly before the election, some old-style Southern Democrats sipped their iced tea in a rural Georgia barbecue joint and bemoaned the sad state of politics in 1968.

To a man, they were supporting George Wallace for President -- unequivocally and irrevocably, even though they conceded the hopelessness of his cause. They had little use for Richard M. Nixon and even less for Hubert Humphrey. The national leadership of both major parties had deserted them, they felt. Their contempt for the national communications media and the intellectual community was unbounded.

As much as any campus radical, then, these Deep South Wallaceites were alienated from the mainstream of political development. Was there ANY national politician apart from Wallace who appealed to them in the slightest?

"Oh, sure," shot back the owner of the restaurant. "I kind of take to this Muskie. We could vote for him for President without a bit of trouble." His companions quickly nodded their agreement with this view.

These Georgia red-necks who had chosen Sen. Edmund Muskie, a New England liberal with a flawless civil rights record, had plenty of company this fall. In two months, Muskie had emerged from obscurity to become the political hope of students, dissident Democrats, blue-collar workers, and some disenchanted liberal Republicans.

By succeeding in attracting so disparate a coalition where Nixon and Humphrey failed, Muskie clearly proved to be the phenomenon of the campaign. His popularity played a huge though unmeasurable role in Humphrey's late campaign surge. As such, Muskie was the clear winner of the campaign, staking out a bright political future.

The reason is not readily apparent by conventional political standards. His positions were scarcely different from the lukewarm, dated liberalism dispensed by Humphrey. His oratory was scarcely elevated above the mundane level of this drab campaign. In keeping with the general professional inefficiency of the Democratic party today, Muskie often wound up in remote towns speaking to miniscule audiences.

The explanation of Muskie's amazing appeal has to do with the basic nature of politics in America today, which is appreciated far less by the politicians than by Marshall McLuhan. In a time when the public is demanding "coolness" from its politicians, old-fashioned "hot" politicians like Nixon and Humphrey -- noisy, fast-talking, fervent -- fail utterly to make contact with the public. As for Spiro T. Agnew, he is even less contemporary and relevant to the television politics of 1968.

According to McLuhanesque politics, what is said is not nearly so important as how it is said. Thus, Muskie did not differ in any major respect from Humphrey on such key issues as the race revolution or Vietnam and yet is far more congenial to the white supremacist or the peacenik solely because of style. His style of speaking -- quiet and slow -- is totally appropriate to television. Like Sen. Eugene McCarthy, he entranced even those who disagreed with him.

What made Muskie particularly effective was his contrast, not only with Nixon and Humphrey, but particularly with Agnew. Abrasive, with foot-in-mouth, Agnew was peculiarly unfitted for the television age of politics.

The final factor is the lightning speed of television in transforming the Governor of a small Border state or an obscure U.S. Senator into a national figure. Within weeks of their nominations, Muskie and Agnew were indeed household figures.

Accordingly, Vice Presidential nominees no longer are assured of faceless anonymity. The political attributes of a Muskie and the political defects of an Agnew no longer will be limited to the privacy of the political clubhouse.

Yet, the transmogrification of Ed Muskie during the autumn of 1968 would not have been possible had either Nixon or Humphrey been able to develop rapport with the voter or if the Republicans had selected for Vice President a candidate with Muskie's "cool" qualities -- Sen. Howard Baker of Tennessee, Rep. George Bush of Texas, Gov. Daniel Evans of Washington. That this combination significantly multiplied the Democratic vote on Tuesday cannot be disputed.

Riot Violence

London's pacifist demonstrations this past weekend didn't quite catch the usual regal pomposity associated with British ceremonies. The British police also didn't quite come down to their Chicago counterparts. The bobbies just stood by not attempting to put down the demonstrators and the protest went without incident. It didn't explode or go off as the Chicago demonstrations went off in a still resounding uproar. The bobbies command respect without bullhorns, guns, grenades, or general gendarmlne gear. How do they do it? They didn't have any Wallace supporters, nor necessarily synonymous small town Southerners, nor surely any burly Irishmen in their ranks.

Maybe they get respect because they are respectable. Seeing a poor policeman, parked in his cruiser under a grove of Dutch elm trees, wearing the middle of the National Enquirer on his face doesn't make you want to run out to him with your heart and sunglasses in sympathy. You also can't really empathize with the shy retiring rookie trooper behind the billboard who has to make his daily quota of tickets, nor with the cop on the beat who wants your street corner only to quickly relinquish it for the better one you found down the block.

Maybe some day the American policeman will be on a level with the British bobby and a rapport similar to that in England will exist between police and people.It is forseeable that one day Jack Webb could even run for Vice-President. Theobliteration of the word "force" would be a first step. The American Policeman is now only on a par with George III's Hessians.

London's pacifist demonstrations this past weekend didn't quite catch the usual regal pomposity associated with British ceremonies. The British protestors also didn't quite come down to their Columbia counterparts. The demonstrators ran hand-in-hand down the streets of London and not into police cordons. The positive impression they made will be deep and long lasting.

A surly lion may bite the trainer's hand that feeds it and then get a big steak, but it might not get just a distemper shot at the vets. Due process, bureaucracy's good if but a small brother, is a foundation of justice and democracy. Wanting something does not carry with it the right of carrying it out. Experience can't open all doors. Humanity wouldn't even get out of the womb, wouldn't even approach the fetal stage if so. Carl Hayden may have had a license before Henry Ford, but that doesn't mean that he could drive half a block down Wall St. on a Sunday morning.

Conversely, all the knowledge garnered via speed reading in a drug store doesn't make one capable of accomplishing all he tackles. Some think it gives them the right to pull down all the distasteful they touch. Plato, Christ, Descartes, and Marx weren't born yesterday: they have been read before. College administrators shouldn't be students, unless some successful, self-educated should decide to go to the school at which he's a trustee. Loss of objectivity results. Carts can only pull horses downhill and over cliffs.

Peace, birth control, civil rights, legalization of marijuana, social security, and academic freedom are all pop causes. Unfortunately man can't live in an impassive, sterile, grey room atop an ivory tower smoking pot rolled in welfare checks and expect three credits. Too many demonstrators can't see beyond the hair on their faces that must coins have two sides. Vociferous minorities should not be catered to as the caretakers of humanity. They are only looking out for those with similar trickles of thought.

The scars of belligerent police and bellicose demonstrators should be treated like the judges' extreme scores in a diving competition. They are dropped and the middle scores are averaged. The edge of the road more often collapses and falls into the ravine below, rather then the middle.

Maturity?

Daniel J. Duen

Well, another Tuesday has come and gone, and with it another ROTC drill and the usual, inane farce of an SDS demonstration. One wonders why these "yo-yo's" persist in kicking a dead horse. These ridiculous absurdities have reached the point where they are completely unamusing, which removes all of their value. Or didn't the SDS know that the entire campus is laughing at them and their ridiculous displays of immaturity? Perhaps they should go into hiding for a month or so and change their philosophy from that of a leech in society's side to that of a service organization. Or maybe, these students don't really care about the noble goals they use as fronts for their activities.

If they want to protest the Vietnam War, who don't they protest in the streets of Hanoi, or in Havana, which is only ten minutes away by hijacked jet. Didn't they ever stop to wonder why no anti-Russian protests ever are heard in Moscow, why no anti-Cuban ones are heard in Havana, why no anti-Viet Cong protests are ever heard in the streets of Hanoi, or why criticism of Moscow resounded in Prague, but not for long? But, why is there so much protest in the U.S and other free-world countries? Is it because these countries are so much worse in every way than the Communist ones? Are the people really that disenchanted with democracy?

Do they really want Communism or the anarchy the SDS supports, or do they just have too much freedom? Or perhaps, are some young people never mature enough to appreciate it, even with a college education that prepares them for life? Or is it perhaps, that these people (the SDS) have never fought and never will fight for these freedoms?

A noted scholar once observed that for things to be appreciated they must be gained at a high price. Perhaps this is the problem with the SDS. These cowards will never have to fight for these freedoms, or, if they had to, it is certain that they would resist. They are like children who see something in a store window but refuse to pay for it. For the SDS, maturity will never come. They are doomed to run around forever screaming about things they find fault with, wishing to destroy them, but never offering a feasible, better way.

It is really too bad that society has to put up with parasites like this, those who refuse to work or fight, but would reap the benefits of everyone else's labor. [illegible] cost, the name, Students for a Democratic Society (S[illegible]) [illegible] they are not and never will be, since it is just a hypocritical "front" [illegible] anged to simply the Anti-Social Society (ASS), and let's call a spade a spade. It will never make them what they are not, but at least, people will not be misled by a high-sounding name for a low-crawling group.

Campus Comment

The SDS Furor

To the editor:

I have watched the complacency of responsible UMass leaders and more particularly the Collegian with regard to the formation of a UMass SDS Chapter with much chagrin over the last two weeks.

The individuals who form the some 250-odd SDS chapters over the country are anything but a cross-section of the American population, and they are driven by esoteric furies. Their tactics are coldly calculated, their goal the humiliation and destruction of the United States. Some intimation of their moral quality can be gleaned from the manner in which they occupied President Kirk's office at Columbia: excrement in the wastebasket, obscenities scrawled on walls, filth and destruction everywhere.

Their tactics are the same whether it be at the University of Florida, University of California, or, God forbid, the University of Massachuseits. Unable to make headway within the rules of liberal democracy, they have thrown the rules overboard and resorted to force in an attempt to bring the majority to its knees. Far from being democratic, they are authoritarian -- they will govern by their rules or they will refuse to be governed.

In a University of this size one must expect the presence of a small group of this type. Yet they ought not be complacently accepted. The Collegian has a responsibility to inform the students of what lies benind the facade of the organization as it attempts to establish itself on the campus. Nor do student leaders and UMass officials have the responsibility to aid an organization which seeks their respective destruction either financially, with facilities, or under the disguise of academic freedom.

This is not to say that these measures will squelch the organization or that it will not function.

Such results are not so easily attained. In a democracy, moreover, devolutionists must be tolerated, even if irresponsible. Yet the student leaders, student newspaper and university have no responsibility to aid them to their goals -- i.e., they have no responsibility to promote their own destruction.

The student body deserves to know the implications of the SDS. Student leaders ought to seize this opportunity to protect students' rights and indeed the majority of UMass students; likewise the Collegian should not remain silent.

The One

To the Editor:

As a comment about the "choice that became an echo," the American people have finally elected the One. In an age where the actions of the One will affect the lives of millions, we have picked the one with a bright shining image and a polished exterior. But like the cars we buy what do we know about what is under the bonnet?

Soon the One will have foreign policy in his hands---but what will he do? We have an idea about Johnson, but what will the One say? Has he ever said anthing about it? Aside from the "quest for an honorable peace" (an American euphemism for victory), do you really know how your next president will act? Do you think he knows?

Domestically, the One prescribes his own special brew, to be specific, "change". He is aware, I hope, that we have a few problems facing us; perhaps he will let Spiro take charge of this area ("if you have seen one ghetto, you have seem them all"). The One has also promised us that man's best friend, Big Business, will cure our evils; yet the aim of business is ultimately profit, and rightly so. So how can you expect business to do ANYTHING, for what profit is there in poverty, and what money is there in the slums? When the One asks his big business buddies to do something in the country's interest they'll ask, "will I get a 20% return on my investment?" The ruddy individualist business man can not be so, unless he comes out ahead.

How about Strom? The One has a lot of obligations to meet. Can you see a huge Federal building in the heart of Strom's South Carolina paid for with the money that could be used to kill rats in Harlme? Or better yet, how about the Supreme Court appointment---can you see it: Chief Justice Strom.

However, I hope the Onedoes do something beneficial for the country,and to do this we must give him our support. Why? Because if he is stalemated and things get worse, can't youhear The Little Judge in 1972 saying, "I told you so; now try me."

Arnold Wallenstein

But New

I--the unabashed I--without Benefit of Committee, Foundation Support, or Mandate--I want to offer a course next semester called "The Poetics of Education". Through it, I hope to merge two personal loves--obviously, poetry and education.

To the best of my knowledge, no one, at least in modern times, has offered such a course--anywhere--and no one has done any specialized work in the area--ever. In fact, so far as I know, there is at this moment no such area as "the poetics of education". And, the first guy that comes up to me and says, "It's been done," or "You'd be interested in the research done in that area among the Polynesian expatriates at Stanford," or who says anything else to crush my belief that I am trying something new, different, and potentially exciting--at least, to me--that guy earns one tall, thin pole in the nose!

Now, what I need is takers, any five or more takers--just as long as they are people. They don't even have to know how to read, although the two books I'd like to list as beginning supplementaries to the course are Elizabeth Drew's POETRY: A MODERN GUIDE TO ITS UNDERSTANDING AND ENJOYMENT (Dell, 60¢), and Jerome Bruner's THE PROCESS OF EDUCATION (Vintage, $1.35). Time involved for takers? Probably one hour twice a week for one semester, or an hour and a half once a week for one semester.

If you will enroll in such a course, or if you can talk others into enrolling (besides poetry, education, wife, and family, I love undergraduates, for instance), please drop a note in my box in Room 128, School of Education, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Massachusetts 01002, before Friday, November 15, or write to Lloyd Kline, 49 Kellogg Avenue, Amherst, Massachusetts 01002. We need at least five students, remember, to get the course offered and credited.

The course, by the way, has potential peripheral exploitation by observers interested in educational philosophy, aesthetics, teaching style, curriculum, innovation, etc., as well as more conventional possibilities for those participants interested more routinely in language and education.

ROTC Credited

To the editor:

As a graduate of the University of Massachusetts, a resident of Amherst, and a staff member of one of the area's five colleges, I am vitally concerned with the activities of the University. As such, I am puzzled by the logic of the Student Senate regarding the current issue of giving academic credit to the ROTC courses.

I am temporarily ignoring the fact that students generally disapprove of war in general, which could tend to color the issue, and am questioning the validity of the charge that the "content of the classroom material (of the ROTC program) was not sufficiently academic." While I have never been in a position to judge this personally, I have been able to judge the "academic merit" of other courses in the College of Arts and Sciences.

For example, many of the broadcasting courses offered under the Department of Speech have no "academic merit", if one is following the CURRENT definition, and according to the present standards of the Student Senate, should also be investigated as to their eligibility to receive complete academic standing. The basic Ceramics course offered under the Department of Art might also be investigated as to its "academic merit." The examples are numerous if one will go through the courses listed in the catalogue.

I am not advocating abolishing credit for these courses, for I believe that they have merit for a person who is intending to go into these fields as a career. What I AM trying to point out is that there seems to be undue attention and attack given to the problem of ROTC when the same "problem" exists within numerous other departments at the University.

If the University is going to give credit for a course in broadcasting, and at the same time allow the student electing these courses the freedom of choice, then it is only fair that the student electing ROTC be given the same consideration, and the same freedom of choice. It appears to me that the Student Senate is attempting to deny the very freedom that it usually proclaims so loudly in other areas.

Rebuttal

To the Editor:
(Concerning Miss Gallo's article)

After reading your article, I wanted to prove that some "UMie guys" were gentlemen.

My first chance came today. A frail young lady on crutches was bobbling up the hill to Van Meter. My two compatriates and I, realizing the chance to clear the "UMie guys" soiled reputation, offered her a lift. She refused.

My immediate reaction was that the "UMie gals" were not yet ready to be treated as ladies. This reasoning, of course, is all wrong. This was an isolated case and should not be made a generalization.

All this brings us to the list of HE & SHE. If you feel that HE needs to be reminded these things, I suggest that you change your social circle. If you feel SHE needs to be reminded these things, I believe that you are in the proper social circle.

Crime Commission Critique Published By UMass Professor

"The Challenge of Crime in a Free Society," a Report by the President's Commission on Law Enforcement and Administration of Justice, is now being published by Avon Books. Previously available only in a limited edition from the Government Printing Office, the paperback Avon edition is 816 pages contains the full text of the Report together with new critical commentary by Professor Isidore Silver of UMass.

The Report includes sections on juvenile delinquency, the police, the courts, organized crime, corrections, narcotics and drug abuse, drunkenness, and science and technology. In addition, Professor Silver includes in his 16,000 word Afterword the relevant sections from the Task Force Reports compiled by the Commission's specially appointed consultants and advisers, Reports which he believes have not yet been adequately studied and which to a large extent were given short shrift in the major documeat.

While Professor Silver acknowledges that the Commission was plagued by problems that generally hamper the efficacy of Presidential Commissions, he writes that in spite of this, "The Commission has made a substantial contribution, if we choose to listen, to the problem of understanding crime." He charges that although the Commission's Report was released in February, 1967, to an enthusiastic reception by the press -- THE NEW YORK TIMES called it a "comprehensive, sophisticated and highly detailed study" -- since then, for the sake of political expediency, it "has been studiously ignored despite increasingly abrasive debate about its vital subject."

Professor Silver had been evaluating the Commission's Report and writing about it for over a year when public opinion polls began to reflect the current increase in public concern over crime. When "law and order" became a highly-charged political issue, Avon decided to rush the book to press for immediate release.

In his Introduction, Professor Silver charges that by now "both parties have been hypnotized by the vote-getting potential of the crime theme." He believes that crime, under its currently fashionable designation of "law and order," "promises to be America's Number One domestic political issues for many years to come." In view of this, he urges that all the work of the Commission now be thoughtfully re-studied as a prelude to a non-political, non-emotional re-examination of crime in America.

Isidore Silver is Associate Professor of Law and Environment at UMass, and he serves as a legal counsel for the America n Civil Liberties Union. He is a practicing constitutional and criminal lawyer and a contributor to many law reviews as well as to COMMENTARY, COMMONWEAL and NEW REPUBLIC.

Nixon Begins to Study Problems Won't Go to Saigon Unless Asked

KEY BISCAYNE, Fla. (AP) - President-elect Richard M. Nixon ruled out Thursday a mission to South Vietnam - unless President Johnson "suggests it would be helpful in furthering the negotiations toward peace."

Nixon's chief spokesman relayed that response to an invitation from South Vietnamese President Nguyen Van Thieu. Aide Ronald L. Ziegler said Nixon now has no plans for any foreign travel before his inauguration next Jan. 2.

Nixon, the Republican who won the White House Tuesday, spent the day conferring with advisers and relaxing on the lawn of a rented resort home, clad in blue sport shirt and black bermuda shorts.

He planned to remain through Sunday in Key Biscayne, his vacation retreat eight years ago in presidential defeat, before returning to his New York headquarters to begin the task of assembling a new administration.

Ziegler said Nixon will not name anyone to his cabinet before Dec. 5. "Mr. Nixon feels that, with the current unrest in the country, he wants to fully assess the situation and that he wants to select the best people available," Ziegler said.

Nixon received and read a cable from Thieu inviting him to Vietnam "to make an on the spot assessment of the war and the situation."

Ziegler delivered this response: "Mr. Nixon plans no foreign trip, and will make no such trip unless the President, President Johnson, suggests it would be helpful in furthering the negotiations toward peace. As President-elect Nixon said on 'Meet the Press' he would be willing to cooperate with President Johnson in any way that he would deem helpful."

In that interview, last Sunday, Nixon said he would go to Saigon or to Paris if Johnson asked him to do so in the interests of enhancing peace prospects.

"As Mr. Nixon has said on numerous occasions," Ziegler said, "he feels that the country has only one president at a time and therefore will do nothing to undercut or derrogate the current leadership of the country."

"President-elect Nixon will have no comment on the international field and will do nothing in this field unless it has been discussed with the President and the secretary of state and unless it is in the interest of foreign policy as they see it," Ziegler said.

For liberal arts majors

PQT*

Professional Qualification Test—A prerequisite to qualify for a career position with the National Security Agency.

WHEN: December 9, 1967

WHERE: Contact your Placement Office for location of test nearest you, or write to NSA (address below) right away!

If you expect to receive a liberal arts degree before September 1968 register for the Professional Qualification Test. Taking and passing the PQT doesn't commit or obligate you to anything, but we urge you—even if you are not now fully certain of your future interests—to investigate NSA career opportunities.

An Agency of national prominence, this unique organization is responsible for developing "secure" communications systems to transmit and receive vital information. How and why does that affect you? Because NSA has a critical and growing need for imaginative people—regardless of your academic major.

You will participate in programs of national importance, working in such areas as: Cryptography (the making of codes and ciphers), analytic research, language research, data systems design and programming, and administrative management.

At NSA, your professional status and earning power grow rapidly from the day you begin, without having to wait for years of "experience." Starting salary of at least $6,700 (for bachelor's degrees), regular increases, excellent advancement possibilities . . . and all the benefits of Federal employment. Another advantage is NSA's location, convenient to both Baltimore and Washington and a short drive from ocean beaches and other recreational attractions.

Plan to take the PQT. It could be your first step to a great future!

IMPORTANT: THE DEADLINE FOR PQT APPLICATIONS IS NOVEMBER 27. Pick up a PQT Bulletin at your Placement Office. It contains full details and the necessary registration form. Applicants must be U. S. citizens, subject to a complete physical examination and background investigation.

Election Protest

Students Form Own Nation Protest American System

Fifty UMass students seceeded from the United States Wednesday night and formed their own nation, the Killing Floor. The students, who come from all four campus residential areas, have based their state on the third floor of Moore House.

A spokesmen for the Killing Floor, wishing to remain annoynmous, explained, "We are motivated by the ultimate disallusionment which has been produced by the failure of the American system in this election. The criteria for citizenship are a desire to live under a better system, and the understanding, that, when away from fellow citizens, you will play along with the Americans."

The Killing Floor has its own standing army, designed to protect Pierpont during panty raids, and a border patrol to protect itself from infiltrators.

Humanities Council To Hold Open Hearing Here Tomorrow

The Massachusetts Council on Arts and Humanities will hold an open hearing at the UMass School of Education Auditorium Saturday afternoon, November 9th at 2:00 p.m. The Council, appointed by the Governor, represents leading individuals in all areas of the arts and humanities. At present, the Council is involved in a variety of programs designed to strengthen the cultural atmosphere of the Commonwealth.

Council Chairman, John R. Watts, Assistant Dean of the School of Fine and Applied Arts at Boston University has changed the emphasis of Council meetings from their former site in Boston to meeting in various locations throughout the state The first of the current out-of-Boston meetings was held this summer in Pittsfield and attracted a large number of interested citizens from that part of the state. The meeting in Amherst on Saturday is expected to attract maay persons from throughout Western Massachusetts interested in the arts.

Members of the Council who have indicated that they will be present at Saturday's open hearing include Elliot Norton, drama critic, Boston Record-American and lecturer at Boston University; Dr. Philip Bezanson, composer and Chairman of the Department of Music, Boston Public Library; Mrs. George Marks, board member UMass; Mrs. Bruce Crane of Dalton, founder and President of the Pittsfield Music School; Alfred Duca, painter and sculptor and Miss Ora J. Those representing the University include Dr. Oswald Tippo, Provost; Dr. I.M. Hunsberger, Deaa, College of Arts & Sciences; Dr. Paul F. Norton, Chairman of the Art Dept., Dr. Ronald F. Reid, Chairman, Dept. of Speech; Dr. Richard DuBois, acting Chairman, Music Dept.; Professor Robert Mallary, Art Department and Terry C. Schwarz of the Fine Arts Council.

College Role in Military Research Exposed by Che Guevara Story

"The capture and death of Che Guevara in Bolivia" was the direct result of military research conducted for the Pentagon by the University of Michigan, an article in The New Republic magazine asserted.

The magazine said the university developed instruments at its Willow Run Laboratories to identify persons by measuring the heat given off by their bodies. Using this system, airplanes piloted by the Mark Hurd Aerial Surveys, Inc., of Minneapolis, photographed for the State Department's Agency for International Development a large area of Bolivia where Che's band was operating.

This information was then turned over to members of the U.S. Special Forces "trained by the University of Michigan scientists who were in Bolivia under CIA and Pentagon orders," the article alleged.

"Che's course could be easily plotted, his speed, campsites, even the exact number of men with him could be known. With this knowledge it was only necessary for the Special Forces advisers to 'advise' the Bolivian troops who had been trained in Panama, where to set up their ambushes and which peasants (those living on or near the route the guerrilla band was taking) to question and bribe."

The article, by Albert G. Sugerman, of the Institute of Continuing Legal Education, at Ann Arbor, Mich., is titled "Michigan, Che and the CIA". Guevara, an intimate of Cuba's Fidel Castro, was killed in Bolivia just over a year ago.

Sugerman said the university has long been engaged in radar and infrared research for the Pentagon, helping it to develop the Bomarc missile which can destroy an aircraft by homing in on the heat produced by its motors. Afterwards, it launched Project Michigan, to advance military knowledge of infrared and radar technology. Sugerman continued: "When the Department of Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency was faced with the task of trying to help the Royal Thai military 'find clandestine Communist guerrilla activity,' the University of Michigan was approached because, as George Zissis, head of the Infrared Physics Laboratory at Willow Run, explained, 'We know what parts to order, what systems to design, how to build, how to interpret information, and what to watch for.'"

In 1966, the Mark Hurd aerial survey firm was awarded an AID contract to "provide aerial photographs of approximately 23,500 square miles of southern Bolivia," Sugerman wrote. "There is good evidence that the airplanes Guevara referred to in his diary on September 10, 1967, were owned by this company."

"The 'survey' was to take place during the summer of 1967, using techniques developed by the University of Michigan scientists." Superman added that Dean Hanson, a vice-president of the aerial survey company admitted conducting missions in the Rio Grande Valley area of Bolivia, where the guerrillas were known to be active during June - November, 1967, period. Hanson also admitted that the infrared cameras were used on those missions, and the film was turned over to AID.

The firm's films, then, Sugerman says, were then interpreted most likely by Special Forces members who could then zero in on Che's activities.

Undefeated Frosh Eleven Meet Strong Little UConn Huskies

By STEVE SHAMBAN
Staff Reporter

Redman football fans will have a look at things to come this afternoon as frosh Coach Dave Kelley's undefeated gridsters take on the Little Huskies of U-Conn. This second and last home game will be in Alumni Stadium with kickoff at 2 p.m.

UConn, boasting a 3-1 record, is a big, strong team that likes to run the ball, and they have been very successful at it so far. They will throw very few passes, but their last win over UNH by a 20-17 score came on a late touchdown bomb of 75-yards.

Offensively, they will use wing right and wing left formations, often times sending the wingback in motion. The Little Huskie quarterback will probably spend a good deal of the afternoon running up and down the line of scrimmage using the belly option series.

Fullback, Ed Grasso has averaged 100-yards a game rushing and is difficult to bring down. The Little Huskies, however, have several other strong backs who have aided in attaining a team rushing average of over 300-yards, which includes 374-yards in their only loss to Boston University.

On defense, UConn averages 235 pounds in the line. Tackles, Jon Logan, 6'5, 245, and Bill Tuzic, 6'4, 252, are the mainstays of this unit. Two other stalwarts should be linebackers, Dick Savage, 6'2, 215, and Bernie Lefkowitz, 6'5, 210. Lefkowitz also doubles on offense at split end. UConn will come out in a 52 monster formation which is similar to UMass'.

The Little Redmen will go into this game in the best physical shape they've been in for several weeks. Fullback Mike Sawyer is out for the season with a shoulder injury and Dick Cummings will have to go most of the way. According to Coach Kelley, Cumming's sore ankles are 95 percent healthy, but his practice time has been limited and he may not be in top shape.

The rest of the backfield is intact. Bill Bush will go at quarterback and Marty Evans will also see action. Ken Bjornsen has moved ahead of Angelo DiNardo and will start at wingback. Art Harris and George Tsivmis will split at tailback. The versatile Harris will go both ways also seeing action at the defensive halfback position.

Walt O'Malley and John Huleckl will go at the split and tight ends respectively, while Mike Popovich and Bob Donlin will be the tackles. Ron Marino will be the center and the guards will probably rotate throughout the game with Gene Smith, Dan Kelley, Rich Etna and Dave Levine all expected to see action.

The defensive front five will have Curt Bristol and Carl Dambman at the ends with Steve Greahy and John Case at the tackles. The middle guard will be Bill DeFlavio. Line backers will be John Borderud and Joe Sabulis while Brian O'Malley will be chief. The backfield will be composed of Bob Cabrelle and Jim Kiley at halfback with Jom Keating at safety.

Coach Kelley questions the emotional readiness of his team for the game, "We should be all right, but coming off that big win at BC, we may be a little down. We have good quickness in the line which should compensate for their muscle."

Harries To Run in New England Championships

the past two and a half weeks. The one two punch of Yan-Con champ Ron Wayne and Leo Duart will put UMass up in the scoring but Coach O'Brien admits, "We need a good aggressive third man to close to the top two for us to upset Connecticut." Marc Gelinas, Charlie Lang, Tom Derderian, Larry Paulson and Diego Gonzalez will be trying to run the type of race that will turn the tide to UMass.

O'Brien, said this year's top teams will be closer, no runaway as victorious Brown had last year. Also, the individual times should be better. The top 10 will probably go under 23 minutes for the course.

The Little Redmen will be in the freshman version of the New England over a 3.1 Franklin Park course. The frosh team of Don Dunsky, Wayne Lucas, Ron Swasey, Al Mangan, Steve Whicher, Don Brigham, and Bruce Blackburn, form a strong unit who are running close together.

This unity could help the Little Redman, for as Coach O'Brien pointed out, sometimes tend to have a bad day in the New Englands, and if a UMass man doesn't run in top form some of the other runners could pick up the slack.

With Dunsky and Lucas running well in the one and two spots and Whicher and Swasey running well in the three and four spots and with Mangan, who runs best on a relatively flat course, running on his type of course the coach hopes that his team can break into the top five. The teams the Little Redmen will have to beat out are Brown, Providence, UConn, Holy Cross, and Central Conn.

Ashe, Graebner To Play India For Davis Cup

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico (AP) —The U. S. Davis Cup captain passed over the home favorite, Charlie Pasarell, and named Arthur Ashe Jr., and Clark Graebner to play singles against India here tomorrow in opening matches of the Davis Cup Inter-Zone tennis final.

"I know that Pasarell is disappointed and so are the Puerto Rican people," said Donald Dell, the former Yale man from Bethesda, Md., "but I have to use the best men and at the moment Ashe and Graebner are the best singles men on the team."

Pasarell, from Santurce, is the former intercollegiate and U. S. Indoor Champion and is ranked No. 1 nationally, A graduate of UCLA, he has been serving in the U. S. Army.

Redmen To Joast With Holy Cross Crusaders

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
Sports
FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 8, 1968

FOOTBALL PREVIEW
By PETER PASCARELLI
Assistant Sports Editor

A UMass team, coming off its most impressive win will meet a Holy Cross eleven, coming off its most resounding loss, tomorrow at Fitton Field in Worcester. Gametime for the interstate clash will be at 1:30.

Last week the Redmen thumped a thin Vermont team to the tune of 49 -0, snapping a five game loss streak. The Crusaders, meanwhile, were getting manhandled by their perennial loss Syracuse, 47 - 0.

Jim Long, Tight End

Pat Scavone, Safety

For a change this week, the UMass injury report is an improving one. The Redmen, who have been attacked by the injury jinx all season, have four of what Coach Vic Fusia calls his "injured soldiers" returning this week.

Full back Ed Sarno will be available this week after suffering an ankle injury in the Rhode Island game. Offensive lineman Jim Nangle will be able to see action after suffering a concussion against Connecticut.

Guard Pierre Marchando has been cleared for some duty as has tailback Craig Lovell. Both were injured against Connecticut. Although none of the above mentioned will start, they will give Fusia needed depth he has lacked for weeks.

A notable absence again this week for the Redmen, however, will be defensive star Randy Robinson. The standout linebacker, who was injured in that same U-Conn game, had the cast removed early this week, but Robinson has not worked out all week and is not ready as yet.

The Redmen will need the added men this week as they are facing a big, deep Holy Cross team that just has not jelled this season. They have the material, however, to beat almost anybody.

Fusia says of the Crusader personnel, "This team, man for man, is, according to all our scouts, the best squad we have faced so far this year." Not too much has to be added to that.

The Crusaders, who have been plagued by injuries this season also will be starting a sophomore Mark Mowatt. Mowatt, in the words of Fusia is "an exceptionally good runner". The coach added, "Running quarterbacks have shown well against us all year. Also they have not generated much offense, and this is a move to get the offense underway."

On defense Holy Cross uses a four-four combination and makes adjustments from that. Though this defense was blitzed by Syracuse for 47 points, Fusia respects it still. "They are physically the biggest we have faced, and you have to realize that Syracuse had much to do with their defense," he said. "Holy Cross can still have a good defense in their league."

UMass expects to throw a lot this week, as they do every week. The Crusaders have had a weakness in their defensive backfield all season.

The Redmen are facing a team that will have alot more depth than they do and, a lot of people say, a lot more talent. But Fusia says, "Some people think we are out of our element down there, but I don't think we are."

The coach went on, "They (Holy Cross) might have trouble getting up for us, but we are approaching this game like all others with a fine attitude. Our boys can't give any more than they have."

An added sidelight of the contest will be the performance of Holy Cross defensive end Bob Piepul. His father is UMass assistant coach Milt Piepul. Coach Piepul however, saw no added tension to the game. "I have scouted this one just like any other one."

UMass will be up for Holy Cross. It is a major college team no matter what the record is, and the Redmen will be the underdog when the game begins.

Metawampe's Grid Picks

The national celebration of National Indian Sneak Week will end tomorrow, but by then Metawampe will prove again that he is still the old foxy prognosticator that he ever was.

His sole contribution will be the Redman victory over the Holy Cross Crusaders. The victory will be accomplished solely by the use of bows and arrows, which as any thoughtful discerner of Indian lore knows, are far superior to the jousting weapons of the knights from Worcester. There's even a little intertribal rivalry to spice the game up. Will son better father, or father better son?

Football Rivals To Play Independents

BY GLENN BRIERE
Senior Reporter

There is no Yankee Conference action scheduled this weekend as the four teams still in contention for the Beanpot take on independent opponents in preparation for next week's decisive UMass-New Hampshire and Rhode Island-Connecticut games.

Boston University is a solid favorite over slipping Rhode Island in a game at Kingston. The Rams have dropped two in a row to Conference opponents, while B.U. has already handled three Yankee Conference teams this year.

Connecticut is also an underdog at Rutgers. The Huskies are 3-4 but have yet to beat an independent opponent this year. Rutgers, on the other hand, has one of its strongest squads in years.

New Hampshire finds itself a slight favorite over Springfield. The Wildcats have been coming on strong after their inexcusable loss to Vermont.

Maine and Vermont have finished their Conference schedules. The Black Bears close out their season by hosting Hofstra, while the Catamounts, reeling from last week's 49-0 loss to UMass, return to their own class against Middlebury.

Boston College will be hardpressed to remain above the .500 mark, facing Army at West Point. The Cadets gave fourth-ranked Penn State a king-sized scare before losing, 28-24, last week. B.C., 3-2 on the season, is a 10-point underdog.

Delaware, leading the University division of the Middle Atlantic Conference, will try to stay on top against Lehigh. The Blue Hens should not have any trouble.

Buffalo travels out west to face Northern Illinois in an intersectional battle. The Bulls outlasted Temple last week, 40-20.

Harriers To Run in New England Championships

Monday the varsity and frosh cross-country teams will compete in the annual New England championship meet at Franklin Park in Boston. The meet should produce, barring bad weather conditions, the fastest times ever recorded in the history of the New England championships.

Aiming for his first New England title will be Holy Cross' Art Dulong, who's second place time of 22:16 last year was the second fastest time ever recorded on the 4.7 mile Franklin Park course. Amby Burfoot, who set the course record of 21:51, graduated from Wesleyan last year. Other top runners who have broken the 23 minute barrier and will be competing Monday are BU's Paul Hoss 22:32, UMass' Ron Wayne 22:52, and Providence's Martin Robb 22:55. Just over 23 minutes are Ben Wilson of MIT (23:01) and Larry Josephs of Northeastern (23:07). Also shooting for the top ten will be UConn's John Vitale who has not run at Franklin Park this season.

Coach Ken O'Brien, who had led his team to an impressive 7-2 record so far this season, picks his team along with Providence, UConn, Holy Cross, and a "dark horse" Northeastern as the top five teams in the meet.

"Providence has improved immensely since we beat them earlier in the year," admitted O'Brien "they are running now that way I anticipated they would. Providence beat Manhattan which won the (New York) Metropolitan championships."

The coach believes UConn would have to be classified as pre-meet favorite due to their undefeated year, their Yan-Con championship and a shutout win over Fordham, who was third in the NY meet. However, he pointed out that UMass is closing in on the Huskies who won the duel meet between the two schools 20-35. However, in the conference meet, which looked like a duel meet with UMass-UConn, the Huskies margin of victory was only seven points.

Both Holy Cross and NU have to be given only outside chances to win the meet. Coach O'Brien feels that Holy Cross has the talent but has not jelled. NU has a sophomore team which has been running erratic but running on their home course could help.

UMass is the fifth contender to the New England crown. But they are far from the least of the five contenders. The Redmen have slowly moved closer to meet favorite UConn, and Coach O'Brien thinks that his team should catch UConn in the New England. The top five Redman runners have been running well and close together for

'We'll Wait For The President' Says Black Student Leader

At an unofficial noon meeting yesterday, nine black students met with administration and faculty representatives to discuss the list of demands presented by the black students Friday. Due to the absence of UMass president John Lederle, in Washington on University business, an official response was delayed until Thursday. The students agreed to return to meet with the president at 11 a.m. Thursday.

The original twenty demands of the black students were clarified at the work session, with changes being made in three of the items. The name of Daniel Schwartz was eliminated from the list of police officers whose ouster the students demanded. Robert Henderson, the nineteen-year-old leader of the black student group, said "Afro-Am, at this time, makes a public apology to Mr. Schwartz."

Another of the demands, that no black student flunk out this semester, was modified to read, "that no black student involved in the CCENS program flunk out this semester."

Demand 18 on the original list was clarified by the leaders of the black group. They demand that all students, black and white, attend freshman orientation sessions for sensitivity. Henderson said that the purpose was to sensitize whites to black students and vice-versa.

Dean of Students William F. Field and Provost Oswald Tippo, the acting president, met with the nine student leaders. Also present at the meeting in the Board of Trustees Room in Whitmore Hall were the assistant provost, Dr. Jeremiah Allen; John Childs, assistant dean of men; Daniel Melley of the UMass News Office; Glen Gordon, secretary of the faculty senate; Paul Silverman, president of the Student Senate; a faculty member, Isidore Silver; and Dallas Darland, director of special programs in the office of the provost. Darland has been the liaison between administration officials and the Afro-American group during the events of the past few days.

A statement issued in the name of President Lederle was rejected by the student representatives, at least until the president makes the response to the demands personally. Robert Henderson said, "I doubt that Lederle even knew what was in that statement. When Lederle makes the responses, then we'll decide." Today's meeting clarified the positions of both sides and no further action is planned until Thursday. "We'll wait for the president," said Henderson.

Student Senate President Paul Silverman stated after the meeting that he was "satisfied that the administration didn't talk about what they had done, but what they would do." Silverman added that the atmosphere of the meeting was not hostile and was "a beginning."

The 25-year-old Newton resident said that the administration "had given honest answers to each problem."

The demands proceeded from a meeting of black students Thursday night following the alleged beating of a white student and his black guest. Five white students, as yet unidentified, followed the pair from the Newman Center where they had engaged in an argument. One of the group reportedly said that now that Richard Nixon was to be president, "niggers don't belong at UMass any more."

The five overtook the visitor, James R. Hall of 87 Buckingham Street, Springfield, and his host near the Hills dormitory. Words were exchanged and one of the five whites struck Hall, beginning the fracas which grew to include the others. Hall remained overnight in the university infirmary with a sprained elbow. His companion was treated for bruised ribs and released.

On Friday morning at 10:30, about 85 black UMass students and several faculty members marched to Whitmore Administration building to present their demands. They were met at the door by the associate dean of students, Dr. Mark G. Noffsinger, who was joined by President Lederle and Dean Field. The spokesman for the group, Robert Henderson, read the list of twenty demands. Lederle deplored the beating, declared himself sympathetic to the complaints of the blacks, and promised a speedy response to their demands.

About twenty staff members met for four hours Sunday to develop responses to the list of demands. In a statement released yesterday, President Lederle again condemned the violence and the racism that provoked it. While claiming that "no rules or regulations imposed by the university will cure the sickness in a person's heart," Lederle recognized the responsibility of moral leadership of the academic community and the need to educate its members to the needs of all its elements.

Since Thursday night, two or three staff members have been working to discover the identity of those responsible for the incident, according to Dr. Robert N. Brooks, assistant to the dean of students. Massachusetts State Police are now involved in the search.

Gil Salk, executive secretary of the Martin Luther King Social Action Council, met with representatives of the Afro-American society yesterday morning before the group proceeded to Whitmore. Salk said that the council backs the actions of the students in spirit, "but not necessarily to the letter."

The King Council plans a rally for today in support of the black students actions. The rally is in conjunction with, but distinct from, a solidarity rally of the Afro-Am society. The supporting rally was planned by the office of the executive secretary, without complete approval of the board of directors, which is to meet tonight. The rally today is a student-sponsored King Council activity.

Lederle Makes Statement About Assault Incident

The beating of one of our students and his guest on Thursday night was a vicious and cowardly act unworthy of any member of our University community. The University of Massachusetts does not and will not tolerate physical or verbal abuse by one member of this academic community against another. No person involved in this senseless act belongs on a college campus, let alone in society. This nation cannot exist if such incidents go unchecked. I am especially concerned with reports of verbal assaults and harassment that are hurled from the protective cloak of darkness. Nothing could be more reprehensible than this form of racism.

I have directed our Dean of Students' Office to take every necessary action to identify those who carried out the assault. In addition, we are using the full investigative powers of the Commonwealth to apprehend the assailants. The offenders will be dealt with swiftly and severely. Let it be known that any further incidents involving physical or verbal racist assaults against any member of this academic community will bring quick and stern action against the offenders.

Our student body is composed of a cross section of society. Students come from a variety of backgrounds. They bring with them the tensions of a larger society. Our University is dedicated to giving equal opportunity to all students, regardless of race, religion or background. This means that there can be no discrimination against any one, and no special liberties taken by a few.

No rules or regulations imposed by the University will cure the sickness in a person's heart. But if the University fulfills its responsibilities, moral leadership will be exerted at every level--administration, faculty and student body--to eliminate prejudice. Only through the goodwill of the majority of students, black and white, will education's aim of sending graduates into society equipped to deal with massive problems be achieved.

I call upon all members of the academic community to exhibit moral leadership in fostering true brotherhood on this campus. I ask all to exhibit great tolerance and understanding. I urge everyone to cooperate in rooting out pockets of prejudice. And, in particular

I request that any person with knowledge of this cruel and unwarranted attack come forward with information that can bring the culprits to justice. It is the duty of every member of this University to do all in his power to cooperate in reducing divisive tensions. Any person cooperating will be protected.

As president, I pledge that I will do all in my power to see that all members of this academic community are treated with fairness and equality.

Demands to be Clarified At Today's Noon Rally

A rally is scheduled for today to reinforce and clarify the demands made by the black community at UMass last Friday to the administration. The rally is intended to impress upon the university the solidarity of the black community and to show the common interest of all members of the university in those demands whose implications are not only black but white as well. It is also to protest what they consider the disregard of black students' concerns by President Lederle.

Representatives from Afro-American societies in the Five-College community are expected to join the UMass group as an expression of their support for the black students' position.

Marchers will leave Mills House at 10:30 this morning. The rally is scheduled for noon outside of the Whitmore Administration Building. The Afro-american society will hold the rally to qualify and explain to the general campus community their position in the current dispute with the administration. The society invites the campus community's support.

Opera Star Phyllis Curtin To Present Concert Tonight

Metropolitan Opera Star to Giver Concert

Miss Phyllis Curtin will be performing this evening in the Student Union Ballroom at 8 PM. Miss Curtin is a world renowned vocalist, "one of the all-time great singers" to quote Eric Leinsdorf.

She will be accompanied by Mr. Ryan Edwards. Mr. Edwards is a graduate of the University of Florida where he studied piano. He also studied in France from Boulanger.

Miss Curtin has had a rather unusual beginning to her career. She originally studied violin and went to Wellesley as a political science major. When a junior in college she decided to take voice lessons simply as something musical to do. From that time she became more and more interested in singing.

Miss Curtin is considered to be one of the most musically advanced sopranos in existance. Her performances are not only technically brilliant, but musically refined.

This evening Miss Curtin's varied programs will include selections from Schubert to Rossini.

Tickets are available at the Student Union Box Office and are free for undergraduates. They will also be sold at the door.

'Get Tough' Policy Urged By Educator

WASHINGTON (AP) - University administrators were urged Monday to get tough with student extremists who try to foment campus revolutions.

Dr. Lewis F. Powell, Jr., president of the Virginia State Board of Education and a past president of the American Bar Association, told a convention of Public University Presidents that today's problems cannot be solved outside an ordered society.

"Like their heroes Che Guevara, Fidel Castro and Ho Chi Minh, the only language student extremists understand is force," Powell declared.

"These extremists and the faculty members who support them have forfeited any rights to remain as members of a university community," he said. "The sooner they are expelled and dismissed from faculties, the sooner our campuses will resume their historic roles as centers of reason and intellectual pursuit."

Powell spoke at a meeting of the American Association of State Universities and Colleges, now holding a joint annual meeting with the National Association of Land Grant Colleges and State Universities.

Powell acknowledged that students often have legitimate grievances. He suggested that these should be dealt with by students meeting together with administrators to find solutions.

Powell described student organizations such as the Students for Democratic Society, the W.E.B. Du Bois Clubs, and the Young Socialist Alliance as "extremists determined to destroy."

Detroit Youths Held On Bombing Charge

DETROIT (AP) - Eleven youths, including two girls, were charged Monday with conspiring to bomb public facilities in the Detroit area in what was described by investigators as an anti-establishment plot.

The defendants, described by police as "hippy types", were held in lieu of $25,000 bond each and face a possible 25 years in prison if convicted.

Among the targets hit in the alleged plot were several police-owned cars, the Central Intelligence Agency office in nearby Ann Arbor, a U.S. Army vehicle, and a draft board office.

The bombings dated back to Aug. 3, when a dynamite blast caused extensive damage to a patrolman's car parked at the 13th Precinct police station in Detroit.

'Annie Get Your Gun' Performed Successfully On Opening Night

Review of ANNIE GET YOUR GUN
by Bobbi Peterson

Opening night arrived Friday, November 8, and the UMass Operetta Guild presented ANNIE GET YOUR GUN which stars Deborah Nadeau, Tom Babson, Karen Connolly, Jay McAuliff, and Marty Kitrosser. Although the show began with a bang of the timpani, opening night nervousness must have effected the players, for the overture of the orchestra started a bit timid. However, as they gained confidence, the music became richer and fuller.

The cast also had the same problem, for the first scene took a while to get going. Once the performers warmed up their talent was exposed and predominated throughout the rest of the show. Although the audience was small, it was very receptive.

The finest acting was the portrayal of Annie Oakley by Deborah Nadeau. Tom Babson as Frank Butler was very suave and convincing in his acting, though his nervousness, somewhat flattened the quality of his numbers. Some of Charlie Davenport's (Jay McAuliffe) Annie's manager, lines failed to carry beyond the orchestra pit. Dolly Tate was very effective in her role due to the Ethel Merman quality of her voice and complete character absorption. Marty Kitrosser's stone-faced delivery of Sitting Bull's lines made him not only the mighty Sioux chief, but one of the most memorable characters in the show.

Although the show actually is a 2-1/2 hour production, one was hardly aware of this fact, as both acts of the show were comprised of many entertaining numbers which supplemented the few and important lines in the play. In the first act, the numbers that highlighted the show were Debora Nadeau's "You Can't Get A Man With A Gun", and Tom Babson with the outstanding male trio in "My Defenses are Down", In the second act Deborah Nadeau and the stereophonic effect of the chorus made "Lost In His Arms" the most beautiful number of the evening, while Deborah Nadeau and Tom Babson in "Anything You Can Do" emphasized personality of the "big-headed stiff", Frank Butler, and the cock-sure sharpshooter, Annie Oakley.

UConn Students Stage Sit-In To Protest Job Interviews

STORRS, Conn. (AP) - About 5 persons began a sit-in at a University of Connecticut administration building today to protest campus job interviews by private companies and also to protest action against leaders of a previous demonstration.

The demonstration is an outgrowth of an Oct. 3 incident in which some 100 persons halted a job interview being conducted by a representative of Dow Chemical Co.

Today's sit-in involved many persons who were present at the earlier demonstration. They sat down on the floor of the main lobby of Gulley Hall, where University President Homer Babbidge, Jr., has his office.

The protestors said they are demanding the university cease any disciplinary action planned against those involved in the Oct. 3 protest.

The university took no immediate action against the demonstration today.

It's only the beginning! The campus was blanketed by the season's first snowfall Sunday. Three to four inches accumulated before turning to rain. (MDC Photo by Ken Emery)

Would-be Assassins Slated For Hearings

NEW YORK (AP) - A Brooklyn grand jury was scheduled to hear evidence today against three Yameni Arabs accused of plotting to assassinate President-elect Richard M. Nixon.

The three men-a father and his two sons-also were slated to appear in Criminal Court for a hearing on charges of conspiracy to commit murder, criminal solicitation and possession of deadly weapons.

One of the first witnesses to appear before the grand jury would be the 36-year-old man with an Arabic name who told police of the alleged plot.

The informant, whose name has not been disclosed, remained in protective custody, to be escorted to and from the grand jury room by armed guards.

Detectives and Secret Service agents, with a knowledge of Arabic, interviewed residents of Brooklyn's "Casbah," in the Cobble Hill section, for more information on the three suspects-Ahmed Rageh Namer, 43, and his sons, Hussein, 20, and Abdo, 19.

Meanwhile, Los Angeles police said they had not been contacted by federal or New York authorities investigating a possible connection between the suspects and Sirhan B. Sirhan, a Jordanian charged in the slaying of Sen. Robert F. Kennedy.

Funeral Services To Be Held Wed. For Wife of Activities Coordinator

Mrs. Frances Agnes (Doherty) Scanlon, 45, wife of UMass Coordinator of Student Activities Gerald F. Scanlon, died Sunday at Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston.

Mrs. Scanlon was born in Amherst, the daughter of Francis J. and Agnes (Murphy) Doherty. She was educated in the Amherst school system and was a 1941 graduate of Amherst High School. In recent years she has been employed as a secretary in the 4-H Extension Service office at UMass.

The Scanlons were married in St. Brigid's Church, Amherst, on April 19, 1950. Besides her husband, Mrs. Scanlon leaves her parents i n Hadley and four sons, Gregory, 15, John, 13, Joseph, 12, and James, 7, and a daughter Elizabeth, 10, all of 290 North Pleasant Street; five brothers, John F. Doherty of Hadley, William R. of Amherst, Robert E. of Hadley, James D. of Windsor Locks, Conn., and Gary B. OF Sunderland; four susters, Mrs. John M. Sullivan of South Hadley, Mrs. Eugene Reardon of Westfield, Mrs. Charles Bennett of Williamsburg, and Mrs. Michael Curtin of Hadley.

Calling hours are at the Douglass Funeral Home in Amherst, from three to five this afternoon and from seven to nine this evening. The funeral will be from the Douglass Funeral Home Wednesday at eight a.m., followed by a High Mass of Requiem at nine in St. Brigid's Church. Burial will be in St. Brigid's Cemetery.

Johnson And Nixon Confer On Future Of Presidency

WASHINGTON (AP) - President-elect Richard M. Nixon assured President Johnson Monday there will be no "lame duck presidency" during the transition of government. He said the White House can speak with the full authority of the nation and the incoming administration in dealing with Vietnam and other foreign problems.

The president-elect said in a statement that in times of overseas crisis there are matters facing the nation which cannot await decisions until the new Republican administration takes office Jan. 20.

Nixon said, "If there is to become a crisis, it will become only if the Communist world realizes that Johnson is fixing policies which will be carried on by the new administration.

"For that reason, our discussion was extremely candid and forthright with regard to the policy decisions and the negotiations and discussions that will go on with regard to Vietnam and other matters." Nixon said.

"I gave assurance in each instance to the Secretary of State and of course to the President that they could speak not just for this administration but for the nation, and that meant for the next administration as well."

Johnson and Nixon met in the Cabinet Room with Secretary of State Dean Rusk, Secretary of Defense Clark M. Clifford, Gen. Earle G. Wheeler, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and Richard J. Helms, Director of the Central Intelligence Agency.

Johnson and Nixon emerged from the White House at dusk to report on their conference. Each, in turn, made a statement.

"We realize that the American people expect their government to efficiently function at all times," Johnson said. "Both he and I are going to do everything that we possible can to see that the wheels of government operate at maximum efficiency, not only from now until Jan. 20th but for all time to come."

APO Announces Study Of Assault Incidents

On Nov. 6, Alpha Phi Omega announced that they are undertaking a study to determine the level of harassment to UMass coeds walking campus at night. The goals of the study are to clarify many rumors of assault and rape, to determine if a problem does exist, to consider solutions to the problem if it does exist, and to initiate these solutions.

In a recent meeting with Dr. Mark Noffsinger, Alpha Phi Omega was encouraged by the apparent willingness of the Office of the Dean of Students to deal with such a problem, when proven to exist. Dr. Noffsinger pointed out that, only one incident has been reported to the Police, and following this incident security personnel were assigned to the area in which the incident occurred. Since APO has been told of several incidents, it becomes clear that one way that coeds would make the campus safer for themselves, is to report all major incidents to someone of authority. In this way the people in the best position to take action would realize what is now the common fear of many coeds.

Alpha Phi Omega also urges any girl who receives a questionnaire (from APO) to fill it out completely and return it immediately. This questionnaire will be part of the survey APO is planning for next week. This survey is expected to give a true indication of the extent of the problem, if it does exist.

Former Student will Join VISTA Program in Texas

Suzanne Savignac, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alphonsel L. Savignac at 296 Woburn St. in Wilmington, Massachusetts, was one of 20 trainees who were graduated recently from a VISTA training program at the Oklahoma Training Center in Norman, Oklahoma.

As a Volunteer in Service to America, Suzanne, 25, will spend one year working with the LACK Project in Houston, Texas. Volunteer activities; developing social service centers; organizing groups for self - help projects; participating in Head Start operations; take children on recreation field trips; tutoring; establish community center.

Suzanne graduated from the Amesbury High in Amesbury, Massachusetts. She studied English at UMass in Amherst and Boston, Massachusetts. Her previous volunteer work was Camp counseling with the Girl Scouts of American in So. Hampton, New Hampshire.

Cold Caused by Air Pollution

DETROIT (AP) - A new study finds that cleaning up polluted city air would reduce human miseries from the common cold.

The reduction in total bouts with colds could range from one to two per cent, in some seasons, the results indicate.

Weather is usually important in the incidence of colds in most seasons, but air pollution definitely contributes, researchers from the University of Washington School of Medicine in Seattle reported Monday to the American Public Health Association.

For three years this team studied the incidence of common colds in an area of New York City, correlating the findings with weather data and data from special air pollution monitoring equipment installed in the area.

The cold study was part of an investigation to pin down health effects from air pollution.

Drama Critics Award Prize to UMass Prof

A literature prize of 7,500 German marks (about $1500) was awarded to UMass Professor Egon Menz at a public ceremony in Stuttgart, Germany last Friday for his play "Die Tubinger Mahlzeit."

Menz, assistant professor in the department of Germanic languages and literature, accepted one of the Schiller Memorial Prizes from the Minister of Cultural Affairs of the State of Baden - Wurttembert. Each year the German state selects recipients of the awards on two levels of achievement: a first prize to an established writer, which will be given to Gunther Eich this year, and a second prize to a beginner who has had at least one play published.

A committe composed of drama critics, theater directors and other theater specialists made the final selection for the winners of the awards. Critics had an opportunity to view Prof. Menz's play at its premiere at the Municipal Theater in Fretburg last summer.

Prof. Menz joined the UMass staff this fall as an assistant professor and teaches German language courses. He was graduated from the University of Tubingen (Germany) with a B.A.degree and earned his M.A. degree from the same institution in 1966. He taught in Germany for 15 months before coming to the United States.

Amherst College Present Films of Jean-Luc Godard

Four films of Jean-Luc Godard will be presented on successive days by the Faculty Lecture Committee of Amherst College, beginning today. A discussion panel will comment on the films at the close of the series on Friday. The offering includes:

"Le Petit Soldat" (1960) with Anna Karina and Michel Subor. English subtitles. Tonight, 8 p.m., Converse Assembly Room.

Originally banned in France on political grounds (during the Algerian War), the film is considered by most critics to be a study in depth of the moral complexities of a political stance, rather than mere propaganda.

"Far From Vietnam" (1967). In English. Wednesday, 8 p.m., Converse Assembly Room.

A documentary conceived as deliberate propaganda, this is a collaborative effort of one American and six French film-makers, including Godard in a rare self-portrait talking about the political role of the film-maker; Alain Resnais, Claude Lelouch, Agnes Varda, Joris Ivens, Chris Marker (editor), and William Klein, the American photographer.

"Les Carabiniers" (1963) with Marina Maase and Albert Juross. English subtitles. Thursday, 8 p.m. Converse Assembly Room.

This anti-war fable, based on a screenplay by Rossellini, Grualt, and Godard, poses the hypothetical problem of explaining to children what all wars are and have been.

"La Chinoise" (1967) with Anne Wiazemsky, Jean - Pierre Leaud and Juliette Berto. English subtitles. Friday, 8 p.m. KIRBY THEATER.

Winner of the Special Jury Prize at the 1967 Venice Film Festival, the film's characteristic propagandadistic zeal, mind-teasing violation of audience expectations, concern with language as both dialogue and recitation, and mastery of both the stylized and improvised visual image, indicate why Godard is considered one of the most important film-makers of our time.

The members of the discussion panel on Friday evening will be James Bierman, Richard Cody, Dan Keller and Jerrold Maddox of Amherst, and Arthur Bresson, of Northampton. All showings are open to the public without charge.

Digital is one company that hasn't had time to ossify. We've been too busy growing. In just 12 years, we've become the fifth largest computer manufacturer in the world, measured in total installations. We've led the small computer revolution. And our growth continues to be phenomenal with $57 million in sales last year — a 47% increase over the previous year.

We haven't done this by placing people in boxes on organization charts, and we don't intend to start now. If you're interested in any areas of modern computer technology — from engineering and programming to marketing and personnel — we're interested in you. A COMMON CONCERN

Friday morning, black students led an orderly, dignified and effective march to the Whitmore Administration Building to protest the beating of a black student and to present a list of demands to President Lederle and Dean Field. Both the demonstration and the demands have raised a great deal of discussion and concern among the rest of the University community.

We are in sympathy with a number of the black demands. The five white students involved in the incident must be found and brought before a student judiciary. Harassment and intimidation of fellow black students must end. Prejudice cannot be eliminated by legislation, but the outward manifestation can be; hence immediate action should be taken against students who are involved in any racist behavior.

We also ask for an increase in black personnel on campus, and in order to broaden the University climate, there must be a revision of, or an end to, the 5% out-of-state rule for all students — white as well as black. We also demand a thorough investigation of Chief Blasko and suggest a representative student-faculty board to discuss complaints dealing with University police and security. We also support a review board for any staff member who acts in an offensive manner to either black or white students.

However, the phrasing of some of the demands was unreasonable and alienated members of the white community. The strongest student reaction came from the demand, as stated on Friday, that "no black student flunk out this semester". This has since been modified to "no student in the CCENS program to flunk out", which is much more reasonable and would probably have been implemented anyway in an experimental project such as this.

While we agree that sensitivity training programs should be introduced to the campus on a broad scale, it would be contrary to the University's concepts of self-government to make attendance mandatory. The word "compulsory" at UMass tends to connote a step backwards.

It is also a fact of life at UMass that funds for all student organizations are handled by the Student Senate and such should be the case with the Afro-Am Society's request for more funds. To circumvent this system would be to endanger rights which are enjoyed by students at few other schools.

In many instances, the blacks have given impetus to languishing reforms already in the works, or have spurred efforts in new directions. This is good. But the demands presented, were unreasonable and in some instances illogical.

There is no doubt in our minds that these demands were the result of much humiliation and frustration. There appears to be a breakdown in the "proper channels" if the black students felt it was necessary to act as they did. Weak points in the student-administration relationship have been emphasized, and the ever-present lack of communication between groups within the University community has been exposed as never before.

This is the most important issue the University has ever faced and it is the concern of every student, administrator and faculty member. If we are to solve any of these problems, however, it is essential that there be increased communication and understanding between these three sectors. And, we might add, mutual trust.

INSIDE REPORT:

Nixon To The Left

BY ROWLAND EVANS AND ROBERT NOVAK

WASHINGTON - The best reason for believing that Richard M. Nixon who owes his election to the South and Border states, may now move to the left is the counsel being given him by Lt. Gov. Robert Finch of California.

Finch, perhaps Nixon's closet confidant, may well resign his California post to come to Washington in the Nixon administration and, in any event, will be here to put the new administration together. In whichever capacity, Finch will provide counsel quite different from the habitual caution of those who managed the Nixon campaign for President.

Thus, Finch is telling close associates as well as Nixon that the 1968 election will be the last to be determined by the un-young, unblack, and un-poor. To keep from being strictly a one-term President, Finch tells Nixon, he must reach out his hand to the left.

Finch is buttressed in this position by several Nixon aides who were frustrated by Nixon's modified Southern strategy during the campaign and who look for a more free-swinging approach now that Nixon has won. Rather than let his debt to the Southern and Border states hedge him in, they now argue, Nixon must stretch his mandate by moving left.

None of this means Nixon will run an Administration radical by or even acceptable to New Left standards, but he may go far leftward by Eisonhower standards. Through such schemes as his black capital ownership plan, Nixon will try to wed Republican free enterprise dogma with New Leftish concepts of decentralization. Whether he is successful in this marriage may be shown quite soon by his Cabinet choices.

Accordingly, there is strong sentiment inside Nixon's inner circle for a legitimate Democrat - not a Southern-fried conservative Democrat of the kind conspicuously favored in the Eisenhower administration. Specifically, Nixon is being advised to offer a top job- a White House spot or possibly Secretary of Urban Affairs - to Daniel P. (Pat) Moynihan, the Harvard urbanologist whose support of decentralization occasionally dovetails with the Republicans.

Nixon aide Leonard Garment, a political liberal in Nixon's law firm, has been exploring the ranks of liberal Democrats and some New Left thinkers to cull ideas and size up personalities. For example, Garment lunched with Richard Goodwin, Kennedy speechwriter and liberal pamphleteer, in Manhattan a couple of weeks ago. No offer was made, and none would have been accepted. But there was an exhange of ideas.

Nixon's Cabinet is expected to be speckled with left-of-center Republicans, obnoxious though that would be to Republican Bourbons. John Gardner, the liberal Republican who served as President Johnson's Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, could have that job back - or the Urban Affairs portfolio - if he desired. Three big name Republican liberals also are under Cabinet consideration: Gov. Nelson Rockefeller (Defense), William W. Scranton (State), Gov. George Romney (Commerce).

Nor will orthodox Republicans who yearn for a latter-day George Humphrey at Treasury, even at the price of a little recession, be satisfied. Nixon seems to have decided that a moderate exponent of the New Economics, not a doctrinaire budget balancer, should be his Secretary of the Treasury.

That rules out Chairman George Chamion of Chase Manhattan Bank, an economic traditionalist and longtime Nixon fan. It also probably eliminates Maurice Stans, budget director in Eisenhower days who would love the Treasury post. (Because of his fund-raising efforts for Nixon and because of expert knowledge of the Post Office, Stans may end up as Postmaster General - a considerably less sensitive post than the Treasury.

The top Nixon choice for Treasury seems to be Chase Manhattan's David Rockefeller, though it is doubtful Nixon wants two Rockefellers in his Cabinet.

Despite these indications, however, Nixon and his political managers aren't about to forget, even if they could, the Wallaceite right. Their objective: to bring the South back into the union. Typically, Nixon wants to look both right and left.

While the election returns came in late Tuesday night, seated together and chatting amiably as they waited to see Nixon were perfect symbols of the Republican right and left: Sen. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina and Sen. Jacob Javits of New York. Yet, it would be an impossible political balancing act for Nixon to satisfy both for long. With perhaps less confidence than they show, more progressive Nixon advisors fervently hope, for the sake of the Nixon administration, that it is Thurmond who ends up unhappy.

The Domino Game

Douglas Packer
Editorial Staff

Most events in the Olympics are well known to everyone. Events like track and field, weightlifting, swimming and basketball are followed closely by people throughout the world. However, one event which is given very little coverage is the Domino Game.

Only small countries which are bordering or are close to Russia or China, or which have unstable governments, may enter the event. They also must be bordering other small countries, forming a sort of domino pattern. This exciting and competitive event was formed by the United States shortly after World War II and the countries who enter are grateful to the United States for this opportunity to compete for their version of the gold medal---United States aid and hopefully, if their point score is high enough, United States troops. Korea, you recall, was the first winner in the Domino Game and received the first gold medal given by the United States.

There are a number of events in the Domino Game, much like the decathalon.

The first event is Corrupt Government. A total of 1000 points is awarded to the government which is most corrupt. Five hundred points for second and three hundred for third most corrupt government. The winner in the 1964 Domino Game, Vietnam, scored a perfect 1000 points and an additional 500 points for extra effort.

The second event the countries must compete in is People Support. One thousand points goes to the country who can convince the United States that the people of their country hate America's guts. Seven hundred points for second and five hundred for third. Vietnam, who set a new Olympic record in the Domino Game in 1964 scored 1000 points in this competition with Santo Domingo second and South America third in the last Olympics.

The third event is the Domino competition. The country that can convince the United States that they are the first domino is awarded 1000 points. The theory behind this event is that if the first domino (country) falls then all the other dominos will fall to communism. The contestants may use any means available to convince the U.S. -from experimenting with communism to drafting a democratic constitution.

The fourth event is called the Bravery competion. This event requires that each contestant try to convince the United States that the soldiers in his country are more cowardly than any other country. The best method, and the one which South Vietnam used so effectively, is to convince the U.S. that their troops will join the enemy as soon as they hear the first shot. One thousand points goes to the winner of this event.

The final event is the Great Man in history event. This event like the others, awards 1000 points to the first place country. The object of the event is to convince the President of the United States that if he gives their country aid and arms, the President will go down in history as a Great Man because he stemmed the communist tide.

As you can see these events are highly competitive and vicious tactics are used to build up points.

The past winners of the Domino Game are Korea in 1948, Joe Mc Carthy in 1952, Cuba and Fidel Castro in 1956, Laos in 1960 and South Vietnam in 1964. Five thousand points is a perfect score and South Vietnam currently holds the all time lead with 4,900 points.

The point values not only serve as points in competition but are also used by the winner after the competition is over. The gold medal is awarded to the winning country by the United States in troops and money. One hundred points converts into ten million dollars or ten thousand men. South Vietnam's gold medal is just about running out and the competition in the 1968 game is especially fierce.

The leader this year is Czechoslovakia. Even though they haven't entered the competition the United States has given them 3000 points in abstentia. Thailand and Cambodia are the other major contestants.

Many people wonder why the United States opened this competition. We put this question to the head of the awards committee, General Givemhell, who said, "The United States knows that since we are the strongest democracy in the world, it is our duty to curb communism. We feel that the domino theory is the correct theory to use and instead of arbitrarily picking a country to defend against communism we opened this competition to see which country is the most deserving. We have awarded 3000 points to Czechoslovakia this year, because, even though they are not qualified to compete in any of the events, they still are a small domino country surrounded by other small countries and bordering the Soviet Union. All they had to do was to ask us to step in and we'd have given them 5000 points and sent in money and men. But they didn't ask us, so what could we do?"

Well that's the report from the Domino Game at the 1968 Olympics. See you in 1972!?

Fight Until Final Victory

To the Editor:

In his article of Oct. 23, Mr. Selby never mentioned the name "Palestinian People". The West, the American people are completely ignorant of the tragedy that has befallen the inhabitants of Palestine, who have been subjected to dissposition, foreign domination and exploitation by an alien and oppressing colonialism; i.e. Zionism. The feeling of guilt, the fear of anti-sematism, and policies of colonial self interest in the West have resulted in strict support to Zionism and Israel. The Palestinians had to pay for the crimes of the West, of which they had no part, with their own homes and lands, their own existance.

Were the Palestinians aggressors when in 1917 their land was promised by Britian to European Zionists? Were they aggressors in 1922 when British colonialism and British troops occupied Palestine and opened the door for thousands of European Zionists to immigrate to Palestine? Were they aggressors when in 1948 Zionist gangs such as the Stern and Haganah occupied their villages and towns, and when the State of Israel was declared while they lived in refugee camps? The Palestinians are the AMERICAN INDIANS of the 20th century, an oppressed people, subjected to disposition and domination by Western Colonialism and imperialism. The remnants of Palestine's Arabs in the Zionist settler state since 1948 have their own "Bantustans", their "native reserves", their "ghettoes"-refered to by Zionist authorities as "security zones". The Palestinians lived under martial law, prosecuted before military tribunals, deported and subjected to forced residence by the Military Governor.

Were the Palestinians aggressors in 1967, when Israeli forces conquered and occupied their land, as well as parts of Syria and Egypt? Witness in the 20th century the mass deportation of Palestinians from their homes in "Ghaza", witness how homes and whole villages are blown to dust, witness the arrest, detention and killing of innocent Palestinians simply because they are suspected of resisting occupation. Witness the use of napalm and fire bombs and then call the Arabs aggressors! The Palestinians have been denied the right to resist occupation, for they must submit to deportation and expulsion. The Zionists are proud, for they have proven to the West that "Jews" can fight and kill!

The Palestinian people have been subjected to persecution for the last forty years, but the will to resist colonialism, Zionist occupation and imperialist domination has never been stilled for a moment. They are now fighting for national liberation and survival. The West and American people have been misguided to think that the conflict is between 100 million Arabs and 2 million Jews, the former comitted to exterminating the peaceful Jews, thus it is genocide on part of the Arabs, and a fight for survival on part of the Jews. This is a myth, and the reality is that Zionists are exterminating the Palestinians, occupied their land, with the aid of colonialist powers. It is a conflict between Palestinians and foreign invaders, Zionists aided by colonialism.

Palestinian freedom fighters are called terrorists, and Palestinian Liberation Movements are called terrorist organizations. Are we terrorists if we fight the invader, if we resist occupation, if we fight to liberate our homes and lands occupied by European Zionists with the aid of colonialism? The Palestinians know that there is no justice, no law in this world, except the law of the jungle, where the strong, the superior subordinated and exterminates the weaker. Thus our people will fight to free their land and defend its human dignity. Let it be known, al-Fatah freedom fighters are heroes revolting against occupation and oppression, with their guns and blood they are defending their land. The American people should understand this well; the Palestinians are determined to fight until victory.

Smith to Present 'Robin Hood' As An Experimental Musical

R. TAYLOR

"Robin Hood" is coming to Smith College. In an experimental musical for children and adults, the legendary character's story will be told-complete with the trees and paths and sounds of his Sherwood Forest hideaway.

For performances from November 13 through 17, a studio theatre in the college's new Center for the Performing Arts will become the wooded setting for the adventures of the folk hero who robbed the rich to give to the poor. The aisles of the theatre will be wooded paths and its seat sections divided into clumps of leafy bushes.

Actors will move among the audience, asking them to participate by making background bird and animal sounds and joining Robin Hood and his merry men in their songs.

According to its director, Denton Snyder of the theatre department, the unconventional seating and production of "Robin Hood" is designed to make it impossible for the audience "to just sit and watch."

"Come to Sherwood Forest" is the theme of the production. It was written by two young Smith alumnae, Jane Yolen Semple of Conway and Barbara Green Snyder of Williamsburg. The play will be given in the Hallie Flanagan Studio Theatre in the Center.

Mrs. Snyder, wife of the director, wrote the music for the play. She said it was written to appeal to the child in the adult and the adult in the child. Its sophisticated approach is geared to the average television-age child of today who is exposed to so many communicational influences. The Smith production is designed to make the audience feel that it is actually in Sherwood Forest or attending Nottingham Fair.

Mrs. Semple, the author of two children's books to be published this fall, wrote the lyrics. She and Mrs. Snyder based their version of the play on the "Robinhood" musical written by Herb Felsenfeld and presented by the Charles Street Playhouse Musical Theatre for Children last season.

The Smith department of theatre and speech will present the musical at 8 p.m. November 13 through 16, and 2 p.m. November 16 and 17. Tickets may be purchased by mail order or at the theatre box office in the Center. The box office will be open from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. and 4 p.m. to 5:45 p.m. through November 16, and one hour before the performances.

The cast of 25 will include Smith College graduate and undergraduate students, Northampton High School and Smith College Day School students and a member of the theatre department faculty. Also in the play will be a troupe of 11 "Robin Hood" dancers.

Johnson Address

WASHINGTON (AP) - "The place and time are different. But the objective is still the same," President Johnson said in a Veterans Day message that dealt largely with Vietnam.

"It is the will to live in liberty and peace. It is the battle of centuries - a battle for the preservation of man's dignity and of his right to be free from tyranny and fear."

The President's message was delivered by A. W. Stratton, deputy administrator of the Veterans Administration, during Monday's hour-long memorial ceremony at Arlington National Cemetery.

ACE Freshmen Questionnaire To be Altered for Security

WASHINGTON - A survey distributed earlier this fall to approximately 300,000 entering college freshmen by the American Council on Education has been questioned by the National Student Association because of possible problems of security. The Office of Research of the ACE, headed by Alexander Astin, author of THE COLLEGE ENVIRONMENT and other studies of student life, has agreed to revise the survery form and procedures for its 1969 administration as a result of discussions with NSA President Bob Powell.

The questionnaire is distributed for the ACE by about 300 colleges and universities.

The American Civil Liberties Union was asked for assistance and advice, and an ACLU representative made suggestions to ensure even more strict confidentiality of the data. These suggestions have been accepted by the ACE, including the elimination of the student's social security number.

In response to questions about confidentiality of the data, Astin explained that the identifying information for each student has always been separated entirely from the data and locked in a physically separate file. This file is unlocked only when mailed follow-up surveys are conducted in later years. "Since the ACE research program is aimed at discovering the effects of different college environments on students from different backgrounds, this capability of following the progress of the individual student over time is essential to the validity of the study," Astin said.

In a letter to NSA President Powell, and in another to the ACLU, the ACE Office of Research explained what traditional and new safeguards are provided against improper use of the date by anyone or for any purpose other than scientific, behavioral research. National summaries of the results are published each year and are carefully studied by many college leaders for their implications for instructional and other programs. The data gathered by the ACE are similar to those gathered in NSA research projects,such as NSA studies of drug usage by students.

An ACE spokesman pointed out that identifying information is not accessible to anyone outside of the ACE Office of Research. The research data created by this project is accessible to the NSA's research workers as well as to other legitimate research centers. Dr. Astin pointed out that the overwhelming majority of students in the sample of colleges and universities completed the form voluntarily.

Smith College Bestows Honor On Former Professor of Music

Smith College professor emeritus of music, Arthur Ware Locke, has been honored by having a room in the Werner Josten Library named for him.

President Thomas C. Mendenhall announced the naming of the room at the opening of the Werner Josten Library in the Center for the Performing Arts on November 3. Professor Locke, who was a member of the college music faculty from 1915 until his retirement in 1952, was a colleague of the late Mr. Josten's.

Housed in the red-carpeted Locke room are collections of definitive editions of music scores, rare books and music, files of periodicals, recordings and the Albert Einstein Collection of volumes of vocal music of the 16th to 18th centuries and instrumental music of the same period. The contents of the Arthur Locke Room are considered by musicologists one of the finest music collections in the country.

During his years at Smith, Professor Locke was largely responsible for the selection and acquisition of definitive editions of Bach, Beethoven, Brahms, Mozart, Schubert and many others. According to Mrs. Kostanty Ankudowich, Smith music librarian, his sense of the future in building a music library helped to make possible the fine collection Smith now has.

Professor Locke was graduated from Harvard University in 1905 and for the next two years studied piano and composition in Berlin, Germany as a traveling fellow of the Harvard Graduate School. Before coming to Smith, he taught at Brown University, Washburn College, Topeka, Kansas and the University of Wisconsin. At Smith, he taught advanced courses in Wagner and Bach and a practical course in piano.

He is noted for the three editions he compiled of choruses for women's voices. The third edition was done in collaboration with Charles K. Fassett.

'E. Madigan' Poignant Tale

BY SUSAN SCHMEHL
Fine Arts Staff

Like poetry, this tragic tale of ill-fated love remains imprinted on the senses. The youthful tight-rope dancer Elvira and her lover Sixten are destined to extinction in nineteenth century Sweden. He has deserted his family and the army-his "country," and she her life as a circus performer. Two lovers, they are runaways in the inescapable labyrinth of society's mores.

"A blade of grass very close is seen clearly and the rest of the world is but a blur." For Sixten and Elvira, that slim blade was their life and reality.

They loved and loved each other tenderly and for them it was enough. An "impossible dream" perhaps yet they still tried to make it work. As wine flows from an overturned bottle, their life together slowly gurgled down into the earth never to be recalled.

The entire movie had fantastic photographic images throughout. Its pastoral and gentle scenery enhanced the poignant story, lending to it the aura of what makes a memorable movie.

Former Student to Work In Vista Youth Program

Robert C. Crosby, son of Mr. and Mrs. David Crosby, Box 1972, Juneau, Alaska, was one of 44 trainees who were graduated recently from a VISTA training program at the University of Oregon in Eugene.

As a Volunteer in Service to America, Crosby, 20, will spend one year working with the Arizona State Hospital Youth Program in Phoenix, Ariz. The Volunteers will be helping "multi-problem" families deal with concrete obstacles in their environment. They will also provide support and refer them to proper agencies.

Crosby attended the University of Massachusetts in Amherst. He is a 1966 graduate of Juneau Douglas High School. His previous volunteer experience includes giving therapy to retarded children and emotionally disturbed adults in Massachusetts.

Problems, Dangers of Drug Abuse Discussed by Narcotics Agent

By ROSE MILLER
Staff Reporter

"There is always a certain "in" and with 1960's we find the "in" thing is drugs. The Narcotics Bureau has to take a 1968 approach to a complex problem," Mr. Richard Callahan, U.S. Narcotics agent and Director of U. S. Bureau of Narcotics in New England, said in opening his address on "The Problems and Dangers of Drug Abuse" last Friday in the Student Union Ballroom.

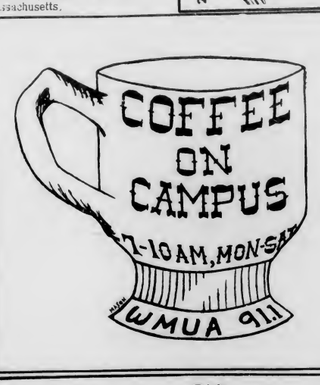
Mr. Callahan explained his bureau's role to the 300 people attending as primarily an enforcement agency but he added, there is a need for education on the subject of drug abuse in order to bridge the generation gap which limits the discussion between parents and their children on the problems of drugs. Callahan cited "Marijuana" as the third most used drug with alcohol and nicotine above it in use. The danger of drugs as compared to the danger of alcohol and nicotine is enhanced by the unpredictability and lack of knowledge concerning the purity of the drug, since it is processed by the criminal element.

The 1960's presents "drug problem number 2," as Callahan terms the complex problem of drugs now, as compared to past, when the problem was chiefly the use of heroin in ghetto areas. "The drug difference, the indiscriminate experimentation and the middle class as the new users add up," according to Mr. Callahan, "to a new, and complex problem."

The danger of using illegal drugs besides "not knowing what you're getting, as outlined by Callahan, were the effects produced by the hallucigen in regard to time and space, the retardation of thinking and motor skills, the unpredictable reaction of one's body chemistry to the drug, and the disregard in breaking the law in procuring the drug. "These results have been proven, said Callahan,

"although more far-reaching results have not been accepted by experts in the field of drug abuse, since personal prejudice and lack of research have to be surmounted before more severe implications of drug use can be substantiated by clinical proof."

"Due to the making of synthetic marijuana by an Israeli scientist, the answers to the question of how damaging are halucigens to body chemistry will be known in 2 to 3 years," Callahan predicted.



In the question and answer session, Callahan detailed a further difference between an alcohol user and a drug user, for "an alcoholic seldom steps up to a more potent substance, while drug dependency may lead to a stronger and therefore far more dangerous drug use."

Artist Publishes Woodcut Portfolio

UMass artist Hul-Ming Wang has published a portfolio of woodcuts in a limited edition of 100 copies based on the ancient Chinese poem "The Song of Eternal Sorrow" by Po Chu-I (722-846 A.D.)

Dealers for the portfolio are the Boris Morski Gallery in Boston and the Babcock Gallery in New York City. The artist, an assistant professor in the UMass art department, is a printmaker and painter whose work has been featured at one-man shows throughout the northeast.

Zono 6 Launch Paves Way For Possible Moon Race

MOSCOW (AP) - A new unmanned Soviet spaceship was on its way to the moon Monday in a mission possibly paving the way to a race with America to send a man around the moon next month.

An announcement about Zond 6, launched Sunday, said only that it would "conduct scientific explorations along the route of the flight and in near-lunar space" and test unidentified "system and units" aboard it.

The launching stirred speculation that the new craft would carry out even more complex maneuvers than those of the unmanned Zond 5, which seven weeks ago achieved history's first flight around the moon and recovery on earth.

A Western diplomat said it was possible the Russians also would be in a position to attempt a manned flight around the moon next month, challenging the U.S. effort to send men around the moon first.

The diplomat said he based his prediction on the important Zond 5 triumph and also the manned earth orbital fight, less than two weeks ago. It was the first successful Soviet manned flight in 3-1/2 years.

Zond 6 is expected to reach the vicinity of the moon by midweek.

'Consort' To Perform Tonite With Springfield Symphony

The Paul Winter Contemporary Consort will perform with the Springfield Symphony tonight in the Springfield Municipal Auditorium.

College students who like their music contemporary, folk, or symphonic, will all be pleased when they hear the original idiom of music by the Paul Winter Contemporary Consort, performing with the Springfield Symphony on "College Night", tonight at 8:30 p.m. at the Springfield Municipal Auditorium.

The consort's repertoire is broad, including blues, Bach contatas, folk pieces, and original compositions based on folk modes, ethnic rhythms, and Gregorian chant. Winter is also putting the finishing touches on a new symphonic work to be presented for the first time at Tuesday's performance.

Playing the interpretations of music by contemporary writers such as Pete Seeger, Bob Dylan, The Beatles, and Gil Evans, Winters' music is tuned to the ears of the college students. The instruments in ever-changing combination producting fascinating sonorities has been acclaimed during performances at several hundred universities on tours throughout the United States and Canada.

Winter organized his first group a jazz Sextet, while a student at Northwestern University. This group won the 1961 Intercollegiate jazz Festival, and was signed to a recording contract by Columbia Records.

For their concert with the full Springfield Symphonic Orchestra, the Paul Winter Consort will consist of eight accomplished musicians. Twenty-one year old Richard Bok, soloist with the Cosmopolitan Youth Symphony of New York is Cellist. The classical and 12-string guitars will be performed by Gene Bertoncini. Gene directed the Notre Dame Jazz Orchestra while attending the university. On percussion is Jim Kappes, a graduate of the Manhattan School of Music. Alto and Base Flutes are performed by Virgil Scott, founder and director of the Wakefield School of Music in Bronx, New York. John Beal, currently with Leopold Stokowski's American Symphony is on Bass, and the English horn will be handled by Paul McCandless.

Winter will introduce a talented artist from Tel Aviv, Israel, as his guest artist with the Consort, Ruth Ben Zvi, who came to the United States to study at the Julliard School of Music, is the most acclaimed virtuoso of the unique Israeli drum known as the Darbuke, or Jar-Drum.

Students Begin Partial Fast

WELLESLEY, Mass. (AP) - Fifty-two students at Wellesley College are in the midst of a four-day partial fast for peace in Vietnam.

The girls started abstaining from solid food at midnight Sunday and say they expect to continue through midnight Thursday.

The girls, led by senior Nancy Ross of SVACO, Maine, are meeting for informal discussions on the war and the political situation, but are not planning any mass meetings.

Rushing Attack Absent Injury Jinx Reappears

Holy Cross vs. UMass
BY MIKE CURRAN
Sports Editor

WORCESTER - UMass, suffering through its worst season since 1958, took another on the chin Saturday. Holy Cross rolled over the Redmen, 47-20, before 10,190 at Fitton Field.

On UMass' first play from scrimmage Crusader defender Mike Jordon picked off a Tim Adams pass and raced 44 yards for a touchdown.

Exactly four minutes later Holy Cross tallied again on an 18 yard pass play after moving 48 yards in five plays. The TD came on a Mark Mowatt to Bob Neary aerial.

The Crusaders, doormats to some rugged opponents in recent weeks, were suddenly alive and kicking. It was going to be a long day for the visitors.

Steve Parnell put UMass back in the ball game, temporarily, on the ensuing kickoff. The junior speedster took the boot at his own 15, swept left behind a convoy of blockers, shook one arm tackle, and tip-toed down the sideline for six points.

It was the only real moment of happiness for the Redmen fans. Holy Cross' defense was too high and despite fumble recoveries by Larry Fortunoff and Bill Sroka in good field position, the UMass offense couldn't tie it up.

A long pass to Neary put Holy Cross on the nine, but the Redmen defenders regrouped and forced the Crusaders to settle for a field goal.

The Holy Cross defense, meanwhile, was stopping UMass running plans in the backfield and when Adams dropped back to pass, they dumped him almost as often as he got the ball.

Using the hard running of Steve Jutras and Tom Lamb the home team pushed to the UMass 11 for what looked like another score. The defense forced another three pointer by Jim McClowry, this one from 34 yards out.

Senior quarterback Phil O'Neil, working out of the shotgun got the Crusaders their third TD in the closing seconds of the second period. A screen pass to Lamb and a bootleg by O'Neil brought the ball to the UMass seven. With five seconds remaining in the half, O'Neil found Neary all alone in the end zone to make it 27-7.

After intermission, a beautiful interception by Bill Frye held off the Crusader offensive machine for a while.

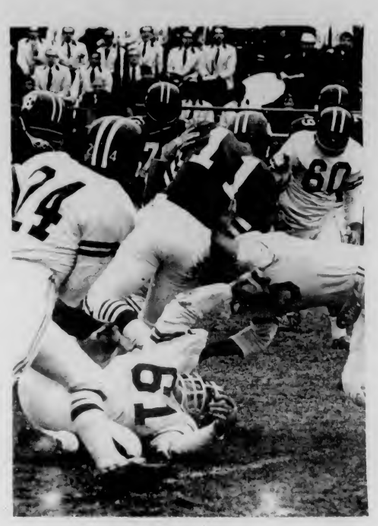
A bomb from Adams to Don Young which covered 56 yards gave the visitors a first down at the 12, but an errant Adams pass was gobbled up by Jordon in the end zone for a touchback.

UMass had another chance when John Farrely and Mark Toner caused and recovered a fumble, but the Holy Cross defensive line was just too overpowering to permit penetration.

Mowatt's passing moved the home town heroes 60 yards in eight plays to make it 34-7. A fourth-and-five play was the big one, as Mowatt got off a first down pass with Gray dragging him down. Jutras notched the score on a 12 yard gallop.

The Redmen offense finally put together a long drive early in the fourth period. Adams, despite constant pressure, moved the visitors upfield with the help of a pass interference call against Holy Cross.

A screen pass to Bruce Cochrane moved the ball into Crusader territory then a flip to Pat Flaherty and a nine-yard run by the sophomore tailback put the pigskin on the 29. Decembrele's running and an Adams to Young aerial moved UMass closer.



A fourth down play by Flaherty picked up a yard to keep the drive going. Parnell took a pass for a seven-yard gain to move to the home team's eight. Adams rolled to his right on third down and powered his way to pay dirt with three Crusaders clinging to him.

Holy Cross came back for another score with O'Neil back at the controls. A 46 yard bomb to Charlie Lynch was the key play. An option pass from halfback Tony D'Agata to Pete Stratton picked up the six-pointer. A two-point conversion attempt failed leaving it 40-14.

At 11:33 of the quarter, an Adams to Nick McGarry pass gave the Redmen their last tally. The play covered 55 yards as McGarry, angling to the right sideline, grabbed a pass, broke a tackle, and outdistanced his pursuers.

Adams was hurt on the next series of downs, and had to be helped off the field. It was the 10th time the Holy Cross defense racked him up in the backfield.

The last Crusader score came on a two-yard run by D'Agata that culminated a 35 yard, six play, Crusader march. McClowry's conversion made the final score, Holy Cross 47, UMass 20.

Classless Display Shown by H.C. Coach Boisture

BY PETER PASCARELLI
Assisrant Sports Editor

WORCESTER - Class is something some have and some don't. A lot of people showed they had it at the UMass-Holy Cross game Saturday. But one person didn't and Crusader head coach Tom Boisture's lack of class dulled an otherwise brilliant performance by his team.

Holy Cross defeated UMass easily and thoroughly 47-20. The Crusaders were in another class from the Redmen and this one was never close. You can talk all you want about the Cross' dominance but one statistic tells the story. UMass net yardage on the ground was minus 88.

The boys down the Pike are only 2-4-1, so that they were hungry. They were coming off a 47-0 defeat. UMass meanwhile, a good team when the season started, were reduced to a question-mark because of an unbelievable injury string that continued this week.

The Holy Cross material was pure class. Quarterback Mark Mowatt, a sophomore looked like a definite star for the future. End Bob Neary was as good as anyone UMass has or will face this year. The defensive line needs no further recognition. Minus 88 yards on the ground. Remember?

The Redmen had a few classy people. Quarterback Tim Admas deserved a Purple Heart for sticking out a long afternoon that saw him dropped for a loss of 108 yards while passing. But the junior had enough in him to come oack with a gutsy eight yard touchdown run in the last period and passing for 243 yards.

Steve Parnell, who was shaken up, ran 85 yards with a kickoff to temporarily bring the Redmen close. There were others, like John MacLean, Marty Scheralis, Don Young and Pat Flaherty who were some sort of brightness for UMass.

If Mr. Boisture of Holy Cross had not got his hand in, you would have left drunken and sunken Fitto Field with a feeling of defeat from a better team. You, however, thanks to Mr. Boisture, left a little bit disgusted, a little bitter.

You see Mr. Boisture was not satisfied with just winning. He wanted the big score. Maybe he was just frustrated after a long season. Maybe he wanted to show everyone he can coach great material to an impressive win. Maybe he is worried about his job.

But Mr. Boisture's decisions in the last minutes of Saturday's game were not very justified. He went for a two point conversion with his team leading 40-14. That shows class.

Then with four minutes left, his team leading by 26 points, this fine example of a college coach went for the first down on a fourth and five situation.

But Mr. Boisture, who all this time was playing such regulars as Phil O'Neil and Neary saved his classiest moves for last. He called a timeout with 44 seconds left to make sure to have enough time to score again. Having scored the 47th point, Mr. Boisture elected to protect his slim 47-20 lead by trying an onside kick, with 36 seconds left.

He tried to defend himself by pointing to Parnell's return and the fact that his team was hungry. UMass was hungry a week ago in Vermont, but that did not persuade UMass Vic Fusia from piling it up, with a big lead.

Fusia walked off the field quickly Saturday and did not move toward Boisture's direction for the customary handshake. Fusia has never done that before. Maybe he was disgusted. Maybe he was bitter.

Or maybe, when one has class, he doesn't want to shake hands with one who does not.

REDMAN RANTINGS - Speaking of class, the UMass band on its only road trip of the year, showed it well with a fine halftime show that brought an enthusiastic reception from the Holy Cross fans.... The band also was making a lot of noise, cheering wise, making some wonder why they shouldn't make every road encounter.....Injuries this week, include Nick Warnock with a shoulder injury, Ed Sarno, who in his first play in a month, reinjured his ankle and will be lost for the duration....Tackle Bill Sroka, who has improved with each passing week, suffered a leg injury.....Parnell and Adams were also shaken up....O,Neil did not start for the Crusaders but when he entered the game for the first time his hometown fans went wild... Steve Rogers made a fine one-handed save of a rare poor snap by John Dubzinski....Pierre Marchando was so anxious to get in the game that the sophomore guard came halfway across the field with his warmup jacket on....Jim Long looked good with four pass receptions.... John Decembrele had to be careful to avoid a clip on his clinching block on Parnell's return....It was the most points a Holy Cross team has scored since 1951....For the third week in a row, a referee threw a crunching block on a UMass player, this time Bruce Cochrane... Possibly the worst call of the year occurred in the first period when Adams, who was definitely moving his arm forward was hit and dropped the ball, a play that was ruled a fumble....In other action, New Hampshire may have ended Springfield College's Boardwalk Bowl (?) dreams with a comeback 17-10 win....Vermont crushed Middlebury 45-18, featuring the running of converted defensive end Harry Canning....Maine bombed Hofstra in the snows of Orono 42-7....Boston University who lost its last two quarterbacks and was forced to use halfback Bob Calascibetta at the helm defeated Rhode Island, 20-3....Rutgers upset Connecticut 27-15....And in a defensive dual, Army edged Boston College, 58-25.

Quote of the day

CHICAGO (AP) - "We've lost a right leg, a left leg, a shoulder and an arm. Now we have lost a heart." Chicago Bear head coach was referring to the loss of star running back Gale Sayers for the rest of the season. All ligaments of the inner side of his right knee and some of the cartilage were torn.

The Bears are currently tied for the lead of the Central Division of the Western Conference with Minnesota. Both teams have a 5-4 mark. Green Bay and Detroit are tied for third with 3-5-1 marks.

Yesterday's New England cross-country meet held at Franklin Park in Boston will be given an in-depth analysis in tomorrows edition of the "Collegian" by staff reporter Joel Fox.

Black Students Issue New Ultimatums, Demand Disarmament Of Campus Police

BY BILL DICKINSON
Senior Reporter

UMass black students have presented another ultimatum to President John W. Lederle and the administration: "We have given the administration 72 hours to disarm the campus police of all weapons."

Robert Henderson, chairman of the Student Afro-American Organization, made the announcement following an hour and a half sit-in and a three hour meeting with Lederle, Dean of Students William F. Field, Provost Oswald Tippo and other officials. The purpose of the meeting was to discuss the 21 demands presented to the administration Friday by black students.

He did not indicate what will happen if the demand is not met.

The demands were sparked by the beating of a black guest to the campus and his white host Thursday night.

Included in the demands are the dismissal of Campus Police Chief Alexander Blasko and another officer, the disarming of the campus police and sensitivity training for all officers.

Monday the black students rejected a public apology for the beating issued by the president's office because Lederle himself did not make the statement. The president was in Washington, D.C. attending a federal conference.

In rejecting the apology, Henderson said, "I doubt that Lederle even knew what was in that statement. . .We'll wait for the president."

A solidarity march and a noon rally outside the administration building had been planned for Tuesday. However, once the group of 150 reached the Whitmore lobby around noon, it began a sit-in until Lederle appeared to read the apology in person.

According to his office, Lederle was on his way back from Washington by plane, but had been forced to land in Providence, Rhode Island, and had to make his way to Amherst from there.

Stanley Kinard, a member of the executive committee of the Student Afro-American Organization, told the DAILY COLLEGIAN, "We won't talk to anybody but the president. We don't feel that he is respecting us or feeling the relevancy of our demands. If he did,

Students Leave UConn. Admin. Building

STORRS, Conn (AP) - More than 200 University of Connecticut students marched from a university administration building shortly before noon Tuesday after occupying the building in a 24-hour protest.

The protestors, including some faculty members, marched out shouting slogans and singing "We Shall Overcome" about 15 minutes after State Police Commissioner Leo J. Mulcahy asked them to leave the building and submit quietly to arrest.

Charles Brover, 29, an assistant professor of English and faculty adviser to the Students for a Democratic Society on campus, said the purpose of the protest was to gain "amnesty" for eight students and four faculty members.

The 12 face disciplinary action for allegedly taking part in a demonstration staged Oct. 3 against recruiters for Dow Chemical Co.

There were no arrests, however, and according to university President Homer Babbidge the inside of the building, Gulley Hall, suffered little damage.

State police reportedly assembled nearby at the Mansfield State Training Center and moved to the university campus, but they were not massed at the sit-in site. Mulcahy would not say how many troopers were involved.

Brover, who is one of the four faculty members facing disciplinary action, said he spent the night inside Gulley Hall with the protesters. He said the protesters left because "we didn't want to give our blood just to satisfy Homer Babbidge's ego."

Babbidge, who said he spent the night on the campus in the home economics building, said after the protest was over that he "could not bring myself now to think about" disciplinary action against the protesters.

SC Boosts Free Speech By Not Reviewing Ruling

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Supreme Court gave proponents of broad free speech rights a major victory today when it refused to review a ruling that anti-Vietnam demonstrators may set up shop in busy bus and rail terminals.

The major demonstration case was appealed to the court by the Port Authority in New York City, which operates the world's busiest bus terminal on Manhattan's West side.

The Authority wanted the high court to upset a decision by federal judges in New York City that peaceful protesters have the right to pass out leaflets and set up tables in the Authority bus terminal.

Authority officials said the interiors of busy terminals should be kept free of demonstrators who interfere with travelers anxious to be on their way as quickly and comfortably as possible.

The court turned the appeal down flatly, barring a hearing at which the Authority would have argued for reversal of the ruling by the U.S. Circuit Court in New York City.

The suit they brought resulted in the circuit court ruling last March that the terminal is an appropriate public place for peaceful political expression. Moreover, the judges said the Authority was obliged to protect the demonstrators from hostile crowds.

Clifford Accuses Saigon Defends LBJ In Bomb Halt

WASHINGTON (AP) - Secretary of Defense Clark M. Clifford accused Saigon Tuesday of balking in the "ninth inning" of Vietnam peace efforts and said the United States may have to continue negotiating alone.

The defense chief said President Johnson is discussing with the South Vietnamese their insistence on speaking in Paris as the No. 1 party for the allies, but he said the President faces a crucial decision.

"I think he will continue to confer with the Saigon government until he reaches the conclusion as to whether he is going to go with them or whether he shall go without them," Clifford told newsmen.

"But I believe that the decision will have to be made. We are still hopeful that it will be the former."

The Paris peace talks schedule has been left up in the air as a result of the South Vietnamese stand.

Originally the United States and South Vietnamese representatives were to have met with the North Vietnamese and with the Communist political organization in South Vietnam, the National Liberation Front, on Nov. 6.

Clifford was red-faced and obviously annoyed as he defended Johnson for proceeding with his Oct. 31 announcement of a bombing halt and peace breakthrough even though, as it turns out, South Vietnam has suddenly become reluctant.

"He had a deal with Hanoi in Paris," Clifford said. "He had worked on it for six months . . . I felt that he was committed, and he felt that he had to go ahead on his commitment."

Clifford said the switch in South Vietnamese attitude came on the very eve of Johnson's announcement that U.S. planes would stop bombing North Vietnamese territory on Nov. 1.

Despite a flurry of last-minute cables and diplomatic huddling, the Saigon government refused to change its stand and in fact, Clifford said, came up with "a whole new set of concerns and objections" about stopping the attacks.

Voice rising, finger jabbing the air, Clifford said Johnson "owed it to the American people" to go ahead nevertheless with his peace drive.

"He worked through 5-1/2 months to reach an agreement that he thought could be a major step toward peace, and then in the last out of the ninth inning, why, suddenly, they say 'No, we can't go along,' " Clifford said.

BU Law School Team To Simulate Court Case Involving Conscientious Objector

An unusual event will be presented tonight when the Third Year National Moot Court Team from the Boston University School of Law visits here. In simulated courtroom proceedings, the team will try a case which questions the legality of the United States' involvement in the war in Vietnam. This program should be of great interest to the student body because of its relevance to their lives.

The case involves the petition of a private in the United States Army. Prior to his being inducted, he had applied for classification as a conscientious objector because of his religious beliefs. This was denied by his local board. After completing basic training, he was assigned to duty in Vietnam. He then requested assignment to another unit and this was also denied. Thus having failed in resorting to pre-induction and military "remedies", he brought suit against the United States on the grounds that he had suffered a wrong which directly resulted in a violation of his legal rights.

Michael Faden, Harold Goodman, and William Macauley developed the case for the petitioner. It is presented in a six-point argument based on the Constitution and previous Supreme Court rulings. It attempts to show that the United States' involvement violates such treaties as the Geneva Accords of 1954, the United Nations Charter, and the SEATO agreement.

Their arguments will be weighted against those of their teammates who will be propounding the case against the petitioner. A verdict will be reached by the judges, Professors Cantor and Silver of the University of Massachusetts and Professor Monaghan of The Boston University School of Law.

Professor Monaghan, who graduated Summa Cum Laude from the University of Massachusetts in 1955, holds law degrees from Yale and Harvard.

He is a general counsel for the American Civil Liberties Union of Massachusetts.

Professor Isadore Silver, a member of the United States Supreme Court Bar, is presently an Associate Professor of Law and Environment. He also is a legal counsel for the American Civil Liberties Union of Massachusetts. His new book, "The President's Crime Commission" will be published this month by Avon Books.

Professor Cantor of the history department received his doctorate from Columbia. He has been a policy consultant in Washington, D.C. Lippincott has just published his new book, "Radicalism in American Foreign Policy."

This unique presentation will take place in SBA 120 this evening beginning at 8:00. It is open to the public at no charge.

he'd be here. What we want is his respect as black people and as a part of this university."

While Lederle was making his way to the University, the group held a discussion of its demands and answered questions from spectators about the demands.

Henderson told the group in the lobby, "This institution must be changed in a way that is relevant to all people who come here. . . The education that you get here is not relevant to anything."

At 1:30 Lederle came into the lobby and said, "Let me say it's a matter of great regret that I couldn't be here for the last two days." He explained that he had been in Washington at a federal conference on financial aid. However, he did add that he had been kept "completely informed" on the situation at the University.

Then he read the statement issued Monday.

In the statement he said, "I have directed our Dean of Student's Office to take every necessary action to identify those who carried out the assault. In addition, we are using the full investigative powers of the Commonwealth to apprehend the assailants. The offenders will be dealt with swiftly and severely."

After he was finished reading, one of the black protestors asked him what he meant by dealt with swiftly and severely.

He explained that the offenders would be brought before disciplinary authorities. When pressed to elaborate, he said, expulsion has been "customary" for such offenses - "that will be my recommendation."

Henderson then told the group, "Brothers and sisters, arise and go forth." They did.

About 30 minutes later, Lederle, six other administrators and 10 representatives of the black students conferred in the Trustees' meeting room at Whitmore for three hours. The purpose of the meeting was to discuss the 21 demands and the administrations reaction.

Phyllis Curtain Concert Success Dispite Problems

BY CHRIS McGAHAN
Staff Reporter

For a small group of music-lovers who braved the weather last night, their efforts were well rewarded. Phyllis Curtin, internationally famed soprano, braved formidable odds and won, presenting a concert of songs and arias in the Student Union Ballroom.

Not the least of her problems was the Ballroom itself, notoriously inappropriate for any musical event whatsoever (save, of course, After The Third World Raspberry), let alone an intimate chamber recital of this sort. Nevertheless, Miss Curtin was able to involve her listeners in the music, filling the hall with rich FORTES and delighting the audience with her magnificently controlled PIANNISSIMOS.

The temperature in the ballroom was on the chilly side, and the ineffective heating system added nothing but noise to the atmosphere. Fortunately the blowers were turned off during intermission and did not intrude into the concert again. Another less-than-pleasant side effect of the barn-like room was the annoyingly persistent echo, particularly during rests and at the close of numbers.

Another problem, which ordinarily would have called for the cancellation of the concert, was the absence of her regular accompanist. Snowed in at a Washington, D.C. airport, Ryan Edwards was unable to make travel arrangements to New England. But with brilliant aplomb and not a little

"I believe the President was absolutely right in not giving Saigon a veto over the plan."

At the White House, press secretary George Christian was asked whether Clifford was speaking for the President. He replied that Clifford was "expressing his views as he sees things."

The defense secretary's sharp remarks on the Washington-Saigon squabble highlighted a news conference in which he also:

-In effect warned Hanoi that recent artillery attacks across the demilitarized Zone are a violation of the general understanding the United States had when it stopped the bombing of North Vietnam.

-Said he has recommended to President-elect Richard M. Nixon that a new secretary of defense be appointed by mid-December to give the man a month's time to become oriented before taking over Jan. 20.

-Said he will go to Brussels Wednesday for a NATO ministers meeting whose main purpose "is to consider the impact of the Soviet incursion into Czechoslovakia upon NATO, what lessons we should draw therefrom and what steps we should take."

Although the opening Rossini CANZONETTI were a bit unsteady, the performers soon hit their stride and redeemed themselves admirably with a set of Schubert LEIDER, Suleika I and II. The dolorous mood created in "Die Liebe hat gelogen" was especially intense, but was unfortunately marred by the intrusion of ventilation noise at the end.

After intermission sand "Three Songs of Ophelia" by Richard Strauss. Here Miss Curtin's operatic experience was brought into good use as she displayed considerable dramatic insight and expression. The high point of the evening was Miss Curtin's rendition of Berlioz' "La Mort d'Ophelie." Her consummate control and artistry held the audience enthralled during her tragic narrative of Ophelia's death.

Noting that she wouldn't ask "even Mrs. Olevsky" to transpose the next selection at sight, as her regular accompanist does, Miss Curtin finished with Valdo Sciammarella's hauntingly beautiful "Cantigas de Amigo," settings of poems by Francisco Javier. Miss Curtin had premiered these songs in both Europe and America, Mrs. Olevsky displayed a special affinity for this accompaniment, written by a fellow Argentinian native.

Noting that twice in one day was enough for her voice, Miss Curtin regretfully declined any encores, as the two artists had not had time to prepare anything.

Welfare Mothers In Roxbury Demonstrate For More Clothing

BOSTON (AP) - Several hundred welfare mothers, angry over what they consider inadequate allowances for children's winter clothing, tipped over files and scattered papers in a Roxbury welfare office Tuesday, then charged screaming and singing into the department's main office downtown.

They caused such disruption that all but a handful of workers were sent home for the day. Both offices were closed.

Afterward the women trooped to the State House and invaded the office of Acting Gov. Francis W. Sargent, interrupting a conference. Sargent talked with several of their leaders, while the rest waited outside.

The lieutenant governor, acting for Gov. John A. Volpe who is in the Virgin Islands, told newsmen he promised the women he would discuss their complaints with state Welfare Commissioner Robert F. Ott.

Sargent also said he had been informed by Boston authorities that police protection in offices of the state Department of Public Welfare is the responsibility of the state superintendent of buildings, George A. Luciane, rather than local police.

He said he was told that Boston policemen stationed in welfare offices are off-duty men paid by the welfare department.

About 4 Welfare Department employees stayed away from their jobs in the Roxbury district office in protest against abuse by welfare recipients. Last Friday some 5 mothers ripped out telephones, ransacked the office and screamed demands at workers.

Catholic Bishops Refuse To Help Punished Priests

WASHINGTON (AP) - The nation's Catholic bishops turned aside Tuesday a plea by punished Washington area priests for intervention in their dispute with their cardinal over the church ban on birth control.

The leader of the dissenting priests said their plight appears hopeless.

The rebuff by the National Conference of Catholic Bishops came at a time when the church leaders were moving tentatively toward easing interpretation of the Pope's birth control ban so as to permit a choice of conscience for married couples.

But the bishops declined to take any step toward an effort to arbitrate the local controversy over the punishment of 40 priests by Patrick Cardinal O'Boyle for speaking out in favor of individual conscience.

Lawrence Cardinal Shehan of Baltimore, head of the bishops' arbitration panel, told the conference "the Washington priests have made a serious error in judgment" in not accepting local mediation of the dispute.

The Rev. John E. Corrigan, leader of the protesting priests, said, however, that Cardinal O'Boyle "has given no sign of good faith" in trying to reach a compromise.

Father Corrigan told a newsman, "Given Cardinal O'Boyle's intransigence up to this moment, the situation is hopeless unless the bishops act."

The bishops' press spokesman, the Most Rev. James P. Shannon of St. Paul, Minn., told a news briefing, "The conference is going to stay out of this."

The bishops maintained their tight secrecy on the proposed version of a pastoral letter on birth control to be adopted at their five-day conference.

The draft is expected to consider the role of personal conscience on birth control and therefore soften the long-time ban continued by Pope Paul VI in his controversial encyclical last summer.

Debate on the pastoral letter begins Wednesday.

Cardinal O'Boyle stripped dissenting priests in Washington of various church duties and cast leaders out of their rectories after they called for a choice of conscience for married couples.

About 200 priests marched on the bishops' hotel Monday night and staged a three-hour singing sit-in to deliver an appeal for intervention by the conference to try to find peace in the Washington dispute.

But Bishop Shannon said no mention of the priests' appeal was made at the conference.

Drum Is First Prof. To Answer 'Given The Last Chance To Speak'

"Given the last chance to speak before dying what would you say?"

This is the hypothetical question to be answered by three University of Massachusetts professors in a new student-sponsored project called the 11th Hour Lecture Series.

The lecturer is given the hypothetical situation of having one day to live and one last chance to be heard. "We see it as a situation in which a teacher will really say what he wants to say--to speak from the gut," said Ken Rosenthal, lecture committee member.

The series has been initiated by Maroon Key, UMass sophomore men's honorary society. The three faculty members have been chosen because of their rapport with the UMass student body.

They are Ryan Drum, assistant professor of botany, speaking tonight Jack Deaver, instructor in French and member of the comparative literature program, speaking Nov. 25; and G. Putham Barber, instructor of Sociology, speaking Dec. 16 All three lectures are 8 p.m. in the UMass Student Union Ballroom.

For An Education

UMass-the name is not really old but the tradition behind the name goes back over 2 hundred years. Traditions die hard and many parts of this tradition seem to be unchangeable. UMass, to many people, is a fall semester, a spring semester, and, if ones grades are poor, perhaps a summer session. It is a tradition and, unfortunately, as most traditions it is accepted as unchangeable. It is accepted as being the only possible way.

There are other ways to organize a school year. Many schools have adopted a "Four-One-Four" Program. By this plan the school year is divided into three parts: a fall semester with final exams before Christmas, a period of free study, and a spring semester from about the middle of February until late May. During the fall and spring semesters students take only four courses which would meet for a little longer than the present 150 minutes a week. The month, or mouth and a half of free study would probably be done in the student's major departmeat in coordination with a faculty advisor. The time could be spent in Amherst or on a world tour, as long as some results could be shown.

The idea of independent study is good. It would be a refreshing and exciting break from the usual lecture routine. The wheels of change seem to turn very slowly at the University of Massachusetts. If change is to come it must be pushed. The idea seems to be worth it -- can the students show that they have a desire and the drive for independent study? To do this they must first prove that they have the drive and desire to promote change.

Taxes will be deducted from each student's paycheck on the University Student Payroll for work performed after December 29, 1968. This action is necessary to comply with federal and state tax rulings.

Each student employed by the University must have an M-4 and a W-4 form on file. These forms will be available at the Cashiers Office in the Whitmore Administration Building on the November 15, 1968 payroll date. Additional forms may be obtained at the Placement and Financial Aid Office, Room 239, Whitmore Administration Building. All forms should be returned to the Placement and Financial Aid Services Office by November 27, 1968.

If, for any reason, these forms are not filed with Placement and Financial Aid, the maximum tax deduction will be taken.

INSIDE REPORT:

Nixon's Last Chance

BY ROWLAND EVANS AND ROBERT NOVAK

WASHINGTON - The inconclusive and disappointing nature of Richard M Nixon's hairline victory had its roots in the Nixon high command's refusal to heed a deadly serious warning issued fully a month before the election.

The warning came in a personal letter to John Mitchell, Nixon's authoritarian campaign manager, written by a Republican political technician skilled in the art of interpreting polling results. Noting that Nixon's national and state polls had been stuck at around 43 per cent for weeks, this technician suggested that Vice President Humphrey was in the process of picking up dissident Democrats (both Wallaceites and McCarthyites) and that Nixon must broaden his appeal or risk a cliffhanger on election night.

The letter was never even answered. Nor were other danger signals heeded during the month of October from such key industrial states as Connecticut, where Nixon had seemed well ahead on Labor Day. In vain, Connecticut Republican leaders tried to get word to Mitchell that Nixon had failed to move disgruntled Democrats who now were in danger of returning to Humphrey.

Warnings or no warnings, tough-minded John Mitchell was sticking to his strategy of combining the perimeter states of the South with the West and the more conservative industrial states. Any deviation from that script in the direction of wooing errant Democrats was regarded by Mitchell as foolishly romantic.

Indeed, during the last full week the campaign, Mitchell demonstrated the inflexibility of his strategy. During Nixon's visit to Michigan Oct. 29, Gov. George Romney himself thought he had talked Nixon into a stop at a Republican work project at 3500 Woodward Ave. in the heart of Detroit's black slums.

But in a last-minute schedule change, the stop was cancelled - on direct orders of M tchell. He was not about to tolerate a deviation from his strategy that might endanger Nixon's strength in the perimeter states. That the Michigan party leaders were both heartbroken and furious over the change of plans made no difference.

The Mitchell strategy paid off in one sense on election day. Nixon surpassed expectations in the perimeter states, capturing them all with the exception of Texas (where Humphrey's slim lead is still threatened at this writing) for 67 electoral votes, one-fourth of the 270 needed for election. Mitchell's no-nonsense hardheaded approach, it can be argued, has made his man President.

But there are limits to hardheadedness in the opinion of state party leaders, whose joy over the election returns is considerably more contained than that of the Nixon inner circle. In winning, Nixon never did breach that 43 per cent mark, a dismal failure in significantly stretching the boundaries of Republican loyalties.

Perhaps Nixon would have been unable to improve on his humiliatingly poor performance with Negro voters (possibly less than 10 per cent) even if Mitchell had countenanced such efforts as the Woodward Ave. appearance in Detroit. But there was plenty of opportunity for Nixon to gain ground among peace Democrats, blue-collar workers and other elements of what had seemed a crumbling Democratic coalition.

In fact, some state candidates did make successful assaults on normal Democratic strongholds that Nixon did not even attempt. For example, two liberal Republican Congressmen - Charles (Mac) Mathias in Maryland and Richard Schweiker in Pennsylvania - unseated incubent Democratic Senators while Nixon was losing these states.

Thus, the feeling is strong among major state party leaders that Nixon has muffed a golden opportunity that comes to a political party but once in a generation. Against a Democratic party that was tattered, demoralized only two months ago, Nixon was far too ready to coast to cautious victory.

Furthermore, these party leaders blame Nixon's campaign for the ludicrously poor Republican showing in picking up only four additional Congressional seats in a year of Democratic crisis. Since the party in the White House tends to lose seats at mid-term elections, the long-range outlook for a Republican Congress is bleak indeed.

Actually, Franklin D. Roosevelt did not really build his new Democratic coalition until after the election of 1932. Perhaps Nixon still can be midwife at the birth of a new-styled Republican party, but only if he adopts a bold political strategy and leaves a post-election version of Mitchell's perimeter strategy far behind. The prospects for that will be dealt with in another column.

UM Arab Student Group Supports Black Demands

To the Editor:

The Organization of Arab Students in the four-college area stands in full support of the black students and Afro-American society in their struggle for equality and freedom. We fully support their demands which are an expression of the will and determination of the black students to stand against discrimination and oppression, and to fight for their rights that have been denied them for ages. We feel that the struggle of the black students is a just one, for this university and this society has denied them their rights, and has abused and harassed them as they struggled to regain their rights.

We stand in full and strong support with the black students because we also share the same struggle, for our people are struggling against oppression and colonialism, and we as oppressed people whether in Africa, Asia or Latin America, know what it means to struggle for dignity and freedom.

Thus we stand, in spirit and deed if needed, with the black students, expressing at the same time the support of thousands of Arab students in different campuses who have joined their black brethren in an expression of solidarity and common struggle.

Equality's Extremes

To the editor:

This article is written with regard to what I read in the MDC extra edition last Friday concerning the 22 demands presented in an ultimatum to the university administration by 100 black students. It is directed to those people involved with presenting the demands.

First of all let me say that I sincerely hope the five people responsible for the outrageous beating of the black visitor and his white companion are caught, and not only expelled immediately, but brought to civil court on assault charges. I was greatly angered upon reading this news and I am sure most other students were also.

I present no question as to whether or not black students on campus have a legitimate reason to unite and protest against this disgusting incident. Let me cry protest with you. However, after reading the 22 demands presented to the administration as a result of this act, I am of the opinion that you people are being a bit unrealistic in some of your proposals, many of which are unrelated to the incident concerned. Furthermore, I can not help but feel that these demands were purposely constructed so as to make their fulfillment by the administration impossible, thus providing a "cause" (excuse?), though wholly artificial in origin, for further protests.

Your first demand is for a public apology from the administration for the beating incident. Now unless the five persons responsible for the beating were administration personnel, I see no reason why the administration should have to apologize for an act which they not only were not responsible for, but which they are indeed trying to prevent from happening.

Your second demand is for at least 15 black policemen. Do you really think the administration can all of a sudden hire 15 black policemen, just like that, and by 12 o'clock Monday even? Are you for real? Besides, what you're asking for is racial discrimination. You're not asking the administration to be non-discriminatory in selecting 15 more policemen, you're asking them to discriminate in favor of black policemen--to hire a black man because he is black and not in spite of it. I'm all for racial equality, but that's not what this is. You see, "equality" is when black-white, not when black white. Let's not replace white racism with black racism, because that's not right either.

Your third demand--"Compulsory meeting of ALL students to explain consequences of any racist behavior." Like man, I mean I don't know how long you've been here, but take it from me, at UMass you can't "compulsory" fifteen thousand students to do anything, much less attend a meeting to find out what they already know through intuition and reading the student handbook. Let's be reasonable in your demands. Can you imagine 15,000 students in the cage?

Your fourth demand--"Black curriculum with black teachers." Black curriculum O.K., but to ask specifically for black teachers is something called "discrimination". Let's not be hypocritical, either you want racial discrimination or you don't want it. Sixth demand--"Recruitment of out-of-state black students disregarding 5% rule". You may suggest the recruitment of more DISADVANTAGED students, but to specify skin color is again, my friends, discrimination. Demand #7--"Compulsory black-white encounters." Again, Umies don't believe in compulsory. Besides, how can you be a student here and not have black-white encounters already?

I really like your ninth demand--"No black student to flunk out this semester. Any black student who misses an exam or class because of participation in march is not to be penalized." I would like to see NO student, black, white, green or otherwise, flunk out. So wouldn't 15,000 other students on campus. But be serious please. How can you expect the administration to grant this to black students but not white students. Also, white students have never been excused from classes and exams to participate in a protest march, so to ask this privilege for black students specifically is likewise asking the administration to practice discrimination. You're being racist again.

Demand #16--"Any staff person who acts in an offensive manner toward any black student will be brought before a reviewing board. If found guilty, the person will be fired." I feel we should have a uniform rule which is without regard to the race of the offended person. Otherwise I cry discrimination. In demand #18 you ask for a special frosh orientation for black students. Did you vote for Wallace? He's for segregation too you know.

And finally, don't give the UMass administration any ultimatum. We already tried that last year.

In conclusion let me restate my abhorrance toward the beating and my hope for an immediate investigation of this incident. Concerning the demands, I hope the author(s) will look upon them objectively and discover that discrimination works in two opposite directions, and that the notion of equality does not exist at either end but in the middle.

Bill Such

Polish Ultimatium

To the editor:

As a member of a persecuted ethnic minority on this campus, it has become evident (due to recent progressive racial demonstrations on our campus) that the time has come for an ultimatum. As president of the Student Polish-American Organization, I have been asked to present this ultimatum to the entire campus community.

Our demands are not radical, in fact, they are not even without precedent. The demands are: 1.) Police: a minimum of 15 Polish policemen; and sensitivity training for all police. 2.) Compulsory meeting of all students to explain consequences of any discriminatory behavior. 3.) Polish curriculum with Polish teachers. 4.) Polish doctors in Infirmary and in Mental Health. 5.) Recruitment of out-of-state Polish students disregarding 5% rule. 6.) No Polish student to flunk out this semester. Any Polish student who misses an exam or class because of participation in marches is not to be penalized. 7.) Money from University for Polish arts festival. 8.) More Polish administrators and staff (counselors, heads of residence, food services, student personnel, etc.). 9.) Sensitivity training for professors. 10.) Rooms in the new Campus Center to be named for Polish heroes. 11.) Polish students will be involved in freshman orientation and Polish freshman will attend a Polish orientation. 12.) Clear explanation of sanctions to be taken against any dorm or fraternity which shows any form of discriminatory behavior (such as the telling of Pollock jokes).

The time has come for the minorities to be heard; we will not stand for discrimination. The movement has already been started by the Student Afro-American Organization; they have started the wheels turning. Now it is our opportunity for progress. We will not be silenced, we will not stand for favoritism. What comes to one must come to all; anything else would be nothing short of discrimination.

Prof Given Award For Botany Research

A study of the relationship between fungus and algae in a lichen undertaken by UMass botany professor Vernon Ahmadjian was cited by the Botanical Society of America for its "outstanding contributions to the fundamental aspects of botany."

Prof. Ahmadjian was named recipient of the 1968 New York Botanical Garden Award of $250 given annually by the society to a single individual for investigative research in the field of botany.

According to Dr. Ahmadjian, his study illustrates an aspect of symbiasis, or the interaction of living organisms. Fungus and algae live together within the lichen plant.

His research on lichens resulted in the publication of THE LICHEN SYMBIOSIS, a book by the Plaisdell Publishing Company. In 1963, he journeyed to the Antarctic to head a research program studying the lichen present in that environment.

A graduate of Clark University where he earned both his A.B. and M.A. degrees, he received his Ph. D. degree from Harvard University in 1960. He has published articles in professional journals including Science, Plant Biology, the Annual Review of Microbiology, and Scientific American.

Ray's Trial Postponed New Administration

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) - James Earl Ray won a postponement Tuesday until March 3 of his first-degree murder trial in last spring's assassination of the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. The defendant was reported hopeful of doing better when the Republican national administration takes over early next year.

The state vigorously but vainly opposed the continuance granted by Criminal Court Judge W. Preston Battle in favor of Ray, a 40-year-old escaped convict.

"He's been here four months or better and it appears to me he's trifling with the court, " said Asst. Dist. Atty. Gen. Robert K. Dwyer. He referred to Ray's return to Memphis after his capture June 8 in London, England. The defendant had been the target of the greatest manhunt in American history.

". . . The State of Tennessee is ready for trial," Dwyer continued. "We have something like 9 witnesses alerted nationally and in various parts of the world to come in here.

"What assurances are there that at the last moment the defendant might not come in and say, 'I don't want this gentleman here'."

Whereupon Dwyer nodded toward 6-feet-4 criminal lawyer Percy Foreman, who took over the defense only last Sunday night from Arthur Hanes, 52, former mayor of Birmingham, Ala.

"It's a unique case in the eyes of the world, but it's still a piece of business," added Dwyer, 45, a peppery, grey-haired prosecutor.

Hanes said he was fired because of Ray's insisence that the scheduled opening of the trial be delayed, hopeful that he would do better after the new administration takes office.

Hanes said he does not know the basis for Ray's hopes.

"All of this is a subterfuge," said Hanes. "James Earl Ray wanted a delay and we felt as his attorneys that now is the time to try the case. . . The climate seemed right."

Hanes told newsmen that Ray's brothers, Jerry and John Ray, had refused to cooperate with him, and declared, "They have been working against us. In addition to having to fight everybody else, we've had to fight them." The plural "we" referred to Hanes and his son, Arthur Jr., who was his father's assistant in the case.

UMASS Grad Challenges Anyone Debate Legal Aspects of Vietnam

John Medeiros, a graduate student in the School of Education at UMass , has challenged anyone, "student, professor, or lawyer," to a debate on the legal aspects of the war in Vietnam. Medeiros is a member of UMass-Concern, the organization sponsoring the debate. The debate will take place on the UMass campus in December. A preliminary meeting will be held in the Plymouth Room, S.U., 8:00 p.m., Nov. 21.

Medeiros' position is that the war violates the Constitution and his Constitutional rights. He said, "I don't believe I will get any response to my challenge. The vast majority of citizens either agree with me or have not got the facts or the courage to debate the matter in public."

Medeiros has studied the legal issues surrounding the war, and court procedures, for about two years and he filed a complaint against the United States, at the U.S. District Court in Boston, on March 15, 1968. Since that time the Government filed a motion to dismiss and Medeiros filed a brief, a motion for an injunction, and several other papers.

Medeiros believes that he has overcome the greatest obstacles to having such a case heard, and won. In its motion for dismissal the Government asserted that Medeiros had no legal "standing," that is, no cause to sue, and that the case presented a non-justiciable political question.

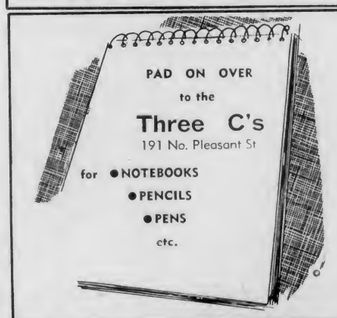
In a supplemental brief Medeiros argued that he has standing on the issue of his liability for service. He said he can prove that the war was not authorized by the Congress, and that he is being held liable for service to the President. This, Medeiros said, violates his protection from involuntary servitude guaranteed by the Thirteenth Amendment.

As far as the war is concerned, Medeiros does not ask the Court to rule on the legality of the war. Also, the existence of the war is recognized by the United States. The President made this clear in his State of the Union messages of 1966, 1967 and 1968. Medeiros is looking for other men who are draft eligible to join him in the complaint.

Yale Professor Will Deliver Address

Professor David R. Mayhew of Yale University will deliver an address this afternoon at 4:00 P.M. in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union. The subject of his talk will center on an analysis of last weeks Presidential and congressional elections.

Professor Mayhew is a Phi Beta Kappa graduate of Amherst College and received his doctorate at Harvard University. He is the recipient of a Woodrow Wilson Fellowship, the DeLancey K. Jay Prize for Ph. D. dissertation, and an American Political Science Association Congressional Fellowship. Before teaching at Yale University, Dr. Mayhew was a member of the government faculty here at the University of Massachusetts, from 1963 to 1967.



Professor Mayhew's talk is being sponsorrd by the Delta Lambda Chapter of Pi Sigma Alpha, the campus chapter of the National Political Science Honor Society. All interested faculty, graduate students, and undergraduates are invited to attend.

Joseph's Cloak' To Open in Hatch Saturday

Joseph's Cloak coffee house will open in the Hatch this Saturday, November 16. The coffee house is a joint endeavor between the Student Union Program Council and the class of '70 Executive Council. The name, "Joseph's Cloak", submitted by Howard Young, was chosen in the recent "name the coffee house" contest.

The physical set-up of the coffee house will be essentially "hatchy", with the addition of red checkered table cloths and lanterns on the tables. Food and drink will be served for a moderate price, and the admission fee will be 50¢

Leading the entertainment list are 'Pan and Ray Clayton', a husband and wife folk team. Last year 'Broadside', the leading New England folk magazine, voted them most popular on their poll. The Clayton's have just cut an album, and are presently touring the east coast. Randy East, a folk singer with a bobbity sing-a-long style, will be coming, as will 'Priscilla and San.' Priscilla formerly sang with the Ultimate Spinach; she and Sam will soon be featuring a children television program on channel 56.

For the final entertainment, a local folk singer will perform.

The coffee house will eventually become a weekly institution, with permanent dividers set un in the back part of the Hatch. This week's opening is going to be a kind of "come, see and if you like it" affair. Come have a cup of coffee, smoke a cigarette and have a good time.

MLK Teach-In Switched To N Commons

The teach-in originally planned by the Martin Luther King, Jr. Social Action Council for this Friday night has been re-scheduled from Mahar Auditorium to North Commons at 8:00 p.m. the same evening. The switch, says King Council Executive Secretary Gil Salk, is due to the limited space and cramped conditions of Mahar.

Holding the 'Night of Inquiry' in a dining commons will better provide the relaxed atmosphere essential to audience enjoyment and participation. The program's more serious discussions will be interspersed with periods of entertainment.

The happening will progress through the night, so drop in, confront the issues, do your thing.

Folk Society Plans Festival SW Commons

The Hello Friend Folk Society will hold a "Folk Festival" this Saturday, November 16 at 7:30 at Hampden Dining Commons (#7).

The society, a group of campus and non-campus individuals has performed several times already this year and plans several non-campus fests in the upcoming weeks.

All those who wish to perform or work with the society can call the Southwest Master's Office at 545-1550.

Northwestern Prof To Conduct "Mock Law Class" at Amherst

On November 14, 1968, at 7:30 p.m. in the Faculty Lounge, Converse Memorial Library, Amherst College, Professor David S. Ruder of Northwestern University School of Law will conduct a mock law class for those interested in law school.

Discussion will center around the case LIST v. FASHION PARK, INC. The case involves a claim that a corporate shareholder was defrauded when insiders of the corporation purchased his shares.

Professor Ruder will be available for questions following the evening meeting.

Professor Ruder received his B.A. degree from Williams College in 1951, and his J.D. degree from the University of Wisconsin Law School in 1957. He is a member of Phi Beta Kappa and Order of the Coif.

At Wisconsin he ranked first in his law class and was Editor in Chief of the WISCONSIN LAW REVIEW. He teaches in the area of Corporations and Securities Regulation, and has been a frequent contributor to legal periodicals. During 1965-66 he served as Associate Dean at Northwestern University School of Law.

UMass students interested in attending this class should get a copy of LIST v. FASHION PARK, INC, from Mrs. Brenda Thoma, Rm. 362 Whitmore Administration Building.

In addition, at 6:30 p.m. on the same evening at Amherst College, Faculty Lounge, Converse Memorial Library, a representative from Stanford Law School will conduct a group meeting. This meeting will be followed by individual interviews on Friday, November 15 at Amherst College. Register with Mrs. Thoma for both the evening meeting and individual interviews.

Problems of Novelist Topic of Discussion

An informal discussion on "The Problems of the Novelist" will be held in Memorial Hall Lounge at 7:00 p.m. on Thursday, November 14.

Taking part in the discussion will be three distinguished writers from UMass--Tamas Aczel, Theresa DeKerpely and Richard Kim. (Mr. Kim's latest novel, "The Innocent", has recently been published by Houghton-Mifflin), interested students and faculty are invited. There will be a coffee hour after the discussion, during which a brief organizational meeting of the Literary Society will take place.

Gray, Parnell Cited By M Club For Top Play

Tricky UNH Should Come Out Clawing; Warnock Out For Season

By MIKE CURRAN
Sports Editor

Linebacker Dennis Gray and versatile Steve Parnell were awarded Varsity M Club citations for their outstanding performances in the Holy Cross game. The awards were presented before a slim turnout of Redman fans at the M Club luncheon yesterday.

Gray, a junior from Salem, was termed by Coach Fusia as, "one of the most consistent performers on the squad." The 6' 2, 185 pounder is just starting to round into top form after suffering i fering an injury in the UConn game.

Parnell scored the first UMass touchdown on an 85 yard kickoff return. Later, the 6', 180 pound junior from Newton broke the Redman career kickoff record formerly held by Ken Kezer. Fusia termed Parnell, "the most versatile player on the team," and added that "he can play five positions."

Concerning the criticism of Holy Cross coach Tom Boisture's play-calling late in the game, Fusia shrewdly observed that, "47-20 is no worse than 7-6." A loss is a loss.

Looking back at the contest, Fusia saw the key plays as the 44 yard pass interception touchdown by Mike Jordan and the Crusader's touchdown with five seconds left in the first half. If these two scores had been averted, and they should have, it would have been a close ball game.

Freshmen Coach Dave Kelley, who scouted New Hampshire, gave a run down on how the Wildcats will shape up for next Saturday's contest at Alumni Stadium.

UNH, under first year coach Jim Root, will be out to beat UMass for the first time since 1962, when they won the Yankee Conference title. The Wildcats will have no problem getting psyched up for the Redmen, who have defeated them by scores of 48-2, 47-0, 46-0, 14-7 and 14-13 since 1962.

The Wildcats are led by quarterback Ed Walsh who has connected on 41 of 67 pass attempts and run 82 times for 286 yards. Fullback Mike Shaughnessy is the leading UNH runner.

Kelley said that New Hampshire likes to spice up its off-tackle offense with 'funny' plays such as the end-around, sally and flea flicker. They're also very unpredictable in their timing of these plays.

On defense the Wildcats are not as big as some other UMass opponents, but they hit just as hard.

REDMAN RANTINGS--Nick Warnock, who suffered a shoulder separation in the Holy Cross game, finished up his career third in number of receptions with 61. Ahead of him are Bob Meers with 82 and Tom Chambers with 70.

Warnock is also fourth in UMass annals in yards gained with 844. Milt Morin, presently of the Cleveland Browns, holds the mark with 1151 yards.

Sophomore Bill Sroka will not be available for duty in Saturday's game. This leaves one more hole for Fusia to fill.

Ski Team Set For Drills

Candidates for the 1968-69 Varsity Ski Team will meet with Coach Bill MacConnell at 7:00 p.m. Thursday, November 14 in Room 305, Holdsworth Hall, to organize the fall training schedule.

Returning from last year's squad are Co-Captains Dave Kamilla and Dick McHugh along with veteran racer Jim Garstang and three others with some racing experience.

The Redmen, champions of the New England Intercollege Ski Conference, finished last year with 77 wins and 2 losses. Five seniors, including Collin Garstand and Ned Kelley, the best ski racers this campus has ever seen, graduated last year. UMass needs much new talent for the coming season.

Amherst, second in the League last year, graduated only one letter man. With many returning veteran western racers and Cy Dunklee, a new and outstanding coach, Amherst will be almost unbeatable in the coming season.

The Redmen league champions have a rigorous dry land and on snow training schedule planned to cope with Amherst, Boston College, Boston University, Bently, Northeastern, Tufts and Worcester Polytechnic who participate in all meets. The schedule:

ON SNOW: TRAINING AND RACE SCHEDULE

Team practice, Thunder Mountain-Charlemont, Dec. 21-23; Christmas winter camp, Killington-Vermont, Dec. 29-Jan. 3; Team practice, Thunder Mountain-Charlemont, Jan. 16-17; Second winter camp, Killington-Vermont, Jan. 19-24; AIC and WPI meets, Middlebury Snow Bowl-Vermont, Jan. 25-26; Team practice, Thunder Mountain-Charlemont, Feb. 1-2, Bentley and Tufts meets, Cannon & Mittersill-New Hampshire Feb. 8-9; Amherst and UMass meets, Dartmouth Skiway-New Hampshire, Feb. 15-16; Team practice Thunder Mountain-Charlemont, Feb. 22-23; NU and NEISC meets, Wildcat & Tyrol Mountain-New Hampshire, Mar. 1-2; Boston University meet, Cranmore Mountain-New Hampshire, March 8.

New England Championships:

Redman Harriers Place Third

BOSTON-Led by a superlative effort from soph Ron Wayne, the UMass harriers placed third in the 56th annual New England cross-country championship at Franklin Park, Monday. The Redmen scored 111 points in placing third behind UConn (38) and Holy Cross (101).

Wayne was beaten only by Holy Cross junior Art Dulong whose time of 21:48 broke the course record. The UMass soph ran in the top quarter of the pack at the beginning of the 4.7 mile race but slowly moved up to the fifth position at the two mile mark of the race. He then made his move on the front runners over the last half of the race and caught them all except Dulong. Wayne crossed the finish line with a time of 22:25, eight seconds in front of third place finisher Craig McColl of UConn. Wayne bested his previous fastest time on the course by 27 seconds.

However, Wayne was not the only Redman to come up with a big performance in the big race. Second man Leo Duart and third man Marc Gelinas both turned in top performances in running their best times on the Franklin Park golf links. Duart, a sophomore, got off to a slow start but began moving up early cutting down the runners in front of him. Duart caught three UConn runners at the two mile mark and moved on to finish seventh in a fast time of 22:52. Gelinas, a senior, started in the middle of the group of runners until 3/5 of the race was run when he started picking up places and charged over the finish line in 23:20, for 14th place.

Senior co-captain Charlie Lang was the next Redman to finish. Running a hard, all out race all the way, Lang fought off two Springfield runners to finish 28th in the race in 23:35. Due to an illness Tom Derderian was not able to run an effective race, thus pressing into service Larry Paulson as fifth man. Paulson, another sophomore, turned in a good performance under the pressure placing 60th in 24:25. The sixth man for the Redmen was senior Diego Gerenzalez, who made the team's top seven this past week, placing 80th with a time of 24:53. Derderian finished the race as the Redmen's seventh man.

It was again a case of UConn having great strength in their top five runners that gave them the New England crown. They placed men in the 3rd, 5th, 9th, 10th and 11th positions to by far outscore the rest of the field. The lack of UConn depth was shown when their sixth man placed 91st.

The Little Redmen squad was also in action at Franklin Park, Monday. The frosh placed fifth in a field of 17 New England schools. UConn made its presence felt again when Scott Carter of the Huskie pups crossed the finish line well in front of the rest of the field to win in a time of 15:51, leading UConn to 3rd place.

Finishing first for UMass was Wayne Lucas who ran 16:27 for the 3.1 mile course. Lucas stayed up in the pack from the start and picked up places near the end of the competition. Second man for the Little Redmen was Steve Whicher who ran 16:57 in placing 35th in a field of over 120 starters. Placing third for the frosh harriers was 46th finisher Ron Swasey. He was followed by Al Mangan, 49th and Don Dunsky, 57th to complete the frosh point scorers. Sixth and seventh men were Don Brigham and Bruce Blackburn.

The frosh did make the top five as Coach O'Brien hoped. Holy Cross took top honors with 58 points, Cent. Conn. was second with 85, then UConn with 131, Northeastern 142 and UMass with 198.

NYAC Track Meet Folds

NEW YORK (AP) - The nation's oldest indoor track and field competition, the New York Athletic Club Meet, went out of business yesterday, apparently the victim of the black power struggle.

"We will not have a meet at Madison Square Garden this winter," said Ray Lumpp, NYAC athletic director. He declined to elaborate.

The new Madison Square Garden, scene of a riot last Feb. 16 during threat of a Negro boycott, confirmed that it had been notified by the NYAC that it was discontinuing sponsorship of the traditional event. The NYAC has been holding indoor track meets for 10 years.

Possible Negotiations Breakthrough Over Black Demands
Dean Field, Henderson Clarify Issues At Student Meeting

By BILL DICKINSON
Senior Reporter

Progress is apparently being made in negotiations between administrators and UMass black students.

Representatives of both groups will meet again today to discuss the 21 demands presented to the administration Friday.

New developments Wednesday were:

*The student Afro-American Organization released the University from its ultimatum demanding the disarming of University police by 3 p.m. Friday.

*President Lederle and other officials met with black representatives Wednesday for three and a half hours and reported that progress is being made.

*Robert Henderson, spokesman for the black students appeared before the Student Senate last night to clarify the groups stand on the disarming of the police and the other demands.

Following the afternoon meeting with President Lederle and other officials, Robert Henderson, chairman of the Student Afro-American Organization, announced, "...we have decided to release the University from the ultimatum issued Tuesday, because we realize more time is needed for this to be accomplished more effectively. However, we will not by any means compromise on our demands for the removal of all guns."

This action was made "since the gun issue involves not only the black students but the University at large, and the black students are sensitive to the feelings of the members of the University, and since we are primarily interested in the removal of the guns..." he said.

According to Henderson Wednesday's meeting "was primarily concerned with the gun issue."

Also attending the meeting were Col. John C. Marchant, chief of University security and two University police officers. They were present "in order to facilitate greater understanding" Henderson said.

No one present at the conference was willing to make any comment on what has been happening behind the closed doors of the Trustees' meeting room on the third floor of the Administration Building. However, the mood of the group seemed to be much more relaxed.

Wednesday night Henderson appeared before the Student Senate to explain the Afro-American group's position on disarming the police and their other demands.

The senate planned to deal with a bill concerning the police and firearms later in the meeting.

He was preceded by Dean of Students William F. Field who wanted to inform the student body of the administration's feelings.

"We are of course going to finally approve only those things that are for the good of all students on this campus and for the entire climate of the University," he said

In response to the feelings of some that the demands are "extreme" Field said, "if some of the 'power words' are removed from the demands such as 'compulsory,' 'immediate,' 'all,' 'black,' 'any person,' 'required,' the basic content of these demands immediately seem more reasonable.

"Let me assure you that many of these demands if phrased differently might easily fit concerns expressed in the current work of this senate, or in the desires or questions of many others at the University."

He continued, "We are not going to set up separate standards for any group...and our discussions with the Afro-Am group have revealed that this is their position."

Field was followed by Henderson who told the senators that he was there "to clarify any misconceptions."

Addressing himself first to the gun issue, he said, "We aren't asking for the guns to be completely removed." He said that the group definitely thought that the officers should be armed in situations where the lives of students and the officers themselves are in jeopardy. "We just don't want the guns used hastily," he said.

Henderson then cited situations where he thought that an officer might use his gun in the heat of emotion rather than as the result of "an objective scrutinization of the situation."

He said the black students wanted the guns "off the hips of the policemen and into the cars."

As support for his argument he cited Col. Marchant's statement that guns have only been drawn by the police twice in the six years that he has been director of security. In one instance the officer involved was reprimanded.

Henderson also commented "The mood now is law and order, and I can dig law and order. I think we need law and order."

He told the group that the disarming of the police in "routine, hum-drum" duties would benefit the entire University community, not only the black students.

"A peaceful alternative" must be found for dealing with the tension on campus," he said.

Next Henderson went over the list of 21 demands presented to the University last Friday.

He made the following clarifications of the demands:

"Compulsory meetings of all students to explain the consequences of any racist behavior" means that house meetings will be called to clarify and explain University judicial policy with regard to assaults and other infringements which might have racist connotations.

Recruiting of out-of-state students should be beyond the 5% quota for all races, but with more black representation than before. Preference should be given to Massachusetts residents, with an increase in the number of blacks, but the University has the facilities to handle more students in general and should.

Sensitivity training for all administrators, faculty, staff, student leaders and incoming freshmen is necessary because of the "lack of understanding" between both blacks and whites. It would provide "a frame of reference to more effectively deal with problems."

More money should be budgeted for the Afro-American group because when they last received funds they had only 80 members and they now have 200.

A black arts festival should be sponsored in the same spirit that the Distinguished Visitors Program and other groups present expressions of a culture.

Afro-Am should be represented on a reviewing board for the hiring of black personel to be sure that they're coming in with the idea of "working for the black people, not at their expense."

Henderson's Statement Dropping Gun Removal Ultimatum

In recent years, the carrying of firearms by police on campuses throughout the country has become a point of contention among students. This issue is by no means new to the campus of the University of Massachusetts. There have been in the past few months discussions in other student groups and petitions circulated on the campus on this very issue.

Since the gun issue involves not only the Black students but the University at large, and the Black students are sensitive to the feelings of the members of the University, and since we are primarily interested in the removal of the guns, we have decided to release the University from the ultimatum issued Tuesday, because we realize more time is needed for this to be accomplished more effectively. However, we will not by any means compromise on our demand for the removal of the guns.

Student Senate Votes to Disarm Police Then Moves to Reconsider Action

BY JAN CURLEY
Assistant Managing Editor

In action taken last night the Student Senate voted on S-13, a bill proposed by Senators Deverton Cochrane and Larry Marcus, 42-32, 2 abstentions to recommend to the President to disarm the campus police and then to reconsider the action next week when it will be determined what constitutes an emergency.

The bill states, "Moved to recommend to the President of the University that on-duty University Police be prohibited from carrying firearms on their person, except when such possession is required for special assignments which call for tight security measures or when such possession is deemed necessary in the event of an emergency."

Colonel John C. Marchant, in charge of University security who answered questions on the bill for the Student Senate, Marchant stressed that the campus police are carrying guns now because it is "the feeling of the police that one never knows what the next assignment will be and what the next moment might bring."

Marchant stated that there are three reasons why the police are carrying guns: to protect the lives of the students, to protect the officers and to apprehend a felon. The police officers who are new to the force have also received riot training.

In answer to the report from the student matters committee that the police keep the guns in the cruiser, he said that this would not be feasible in terms of time. "It would take too much time to check out the situation and then return to the cruiser for the guns if they were needed," he said.

He went on to cite that since he had come to the University in 1963, the police had drawn their weapons twice, and in one instance the officer had been reprimanded for his action.

When asked about the training of the officers and their selection, he said that any applicant takes a battery of tests given by the University Employment Agency, and they are screened by a reviewing board. In instances when a Negro is applying for a position, a Negro lieutenant from the State Police is called in to the Board.

In debate on the bill, Senator Cochrane expressed the majority opinion of the Student Matters Committee. He stated that the main point to be taken is that "of armed police is an insult to the intelligence and character of many of the University students." He said that there is a possibility of a com-

ATTACKERS BEWARE

Most girls who have been molested on campus have called in and made a report of their attacks. They've given some sort of description of their attackers (or their identities if known). The girls who do not want to make complaints such as these are doing themselves and everyone else a disservice.

Recent incidents were related to me by Officer Rogala, who pointed out that the "Peeping Tom," if not caught, will continue to get more and more agressive as time passes and may become a dangerous sex offender. He urged girls who have been attacked to look for some outstanding or specific characteristic in their attackers, such as a speech defect. If the offender has a car be sure to get the registration number if at all possible. Clothing descriptions and hair color do not give security much to go on considering the size of our campus. Above all, remember to call security immediately after an attack. Don't wait! Your attacker may be on to bigger and bolder attempts.

Most incidents this year have occurred near the President's Hill and have been exposures. There are now officers on foot patrol in this area and in other areas of high incidence. Also, Mr. Stafford Sheehan of Gorman House notified the police of the innaugration of an escorting service for girls walking up to Orchard Hill, as a safeguard to girls in that area.

But remember girls--Make sure your escort is a real Gorman escort and not a potential attacker!

WHO DO UMASS COEDS DRESS FOR?

75% of the men on this campus are convinced that it's a man's world and that woman prepares her wardrobe for his eyes alone. 75% of the girls disagree.

These figures were uncovered in a recent survey on campus fashion. The survey was undertaken to determine just how important the male opinion on fashion is to the average UMass coed. How many females conform to the male opinion rather than to a female opinion?

One result of my search was that the average girl does not make her every move according to the dictates of "Vogue" or "Bazaar" but rather dresses for the situation. The wide belts and "klunky" shoes that are so popular among the girls seem to be popular only among the girls. The male opinion is more for the total look of a girl which is more than just clothes.

I stopped people in the lobby of the Student Union one Tuesday afternoon and asked them what their favorite mode of dress was for girls.

The girls were divided between short dresses and pants suits. 88% thought that men like miniskirts, while only 50% said they wore them. In truth, 60% of the men preferred miniskirts on young ladies; with the others choosing pants suits or jeans and sweaters.

Both guys and girls (95% and 96%) agreed that long hair on girls is great. They also agreed that short shifts, simple, wool and shapely are good for dinner dates. Voting on certain pictures that I showed to everyone confirmed previous differences of opinion on knitted pants suits. Girls liked them a lot, and guys like them a lot less.

Amazingly, the number one choice on the boys' list was a long, low-cut velvet gown--in answer to the "What-should-your-date-wear" question. Even more amazing was the fact that only 22% of the girls wanted to wear that dress!

Individual comments were helpful, particularly from the brothers of Theta Chi fraternity. One brother stated that all of my questions were really dependent on how the girl herself looked. In other words, the clothes don't make the girl as much as the girl makes the look.

A girl from Leach House said that she dressed according to the situation, depending on where she was going and with whom. A tall girl told me that she was more comfortable in pants; perhaps comfort is a factor.

If you don't dress for the situation, don't worry. Every man I interviewed was girl-conscious before he was clothes conscious. So the average girl doesn't have to worry about campus fashion. All she has to be is her good-lookin' self and have long hair. For the average man.

ALAS POOR MARY - YOU SHOULD HAVE KNOWN BETTER

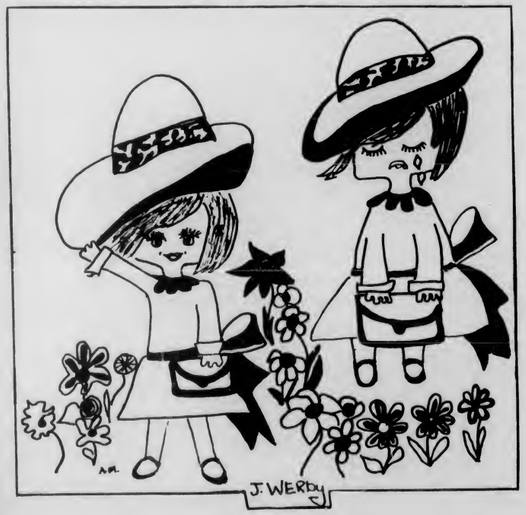
Marsha Gallo

This is the sad story, sad but true, of littl e Mary Messed-Up mind, who went to college to get an education and wound up getting disillusioned instead. Poor Mary, somehow everything happens to her. She grew up in the heart of Massachusetts in an intellectually stimulating factory city, went to the best public schools on split sessions, and was privileged to enjoy the genuine quality of Massachusetts geniality and general concern for mankind.

Setting out from her comfortable and secure home, she arrived at UMass, the exciting new world of her dreams, intellectual atmosphere, lasting relationships, and ultimately rich rewards for her. Filled with joy and grateful disbelief at having the opportunity to become a part of this healthy, progressive environment, she resolved to give to the school as much as or more than all it would surely give her. However, she found the debt to be one she could never repay.

Entering her dormitory, having found it somewhat dwarfed by a number of-skyscrapers, she found that she was assigned to a triple room, about the size of her pantry at home. Since she was the last one to arrive she also had the closet by the door, the top bunk and no key, as there were only two, already in the hands of her roommates, who looked up over their cigarettes and magazines long enought to mouth a "hi". Luckily Mary realized that in college life one must be willing to put oneself out for another.

She made friends right away, and started her dating life with a very nice freshman boy in one of her classes, by the name of Jack, whom she held to be the epitome of intelligence, attractiveness and good judgement. How elated she was when he asked her for their very first date. Even though on that date he walked as far in front of her as he could, carried the umbrella directly over his own head, grunted in answer to her polite conversation and growled when she was so forward as to ask him a question, Mary came to the conclusion that he was merely sensitive and could not be expected to respond to her trivialities, however sincere they might be. He must also be shy and did not want to appear too forward, as was certainly illustrated by the fact that he didn't have the nerve to ask her for another date right off that night but merely said, "well, I'll see you around," which was certainly a pleasant hint.



And the handsome young man did see her again, after apologizing in a two edged manner for his untoward behavior, which she assured him she was willing to accept as part of his personality. This apology instilled in her a trust for him which did not melt even when he picked her up for their second date and dragged her up the many flights of stairs to his poor bare room, even when he locked the door, turned on tapes of the Beatles to drown out she couldn't imagine what, and cornered her on the side of the room where the bed was. Alas, poor Mary really got messed up that night. But, she is more to be pitied than censured, etc.

Trusting soul, imagine her surprise when having invited him to her open house along with several of his drinking companions and her best friend, Mary crossed the room to change a record and oh, shame and misery, she saw her darling and her best friend locked in each other's arms.

Ah the pain, but Mary continued to bear her burden of trust, that is, until she bore it up to the University infirmary to obtain a Neo-Synephrine and some Robtussin, and the doctor insisted on giving her a pelvic examination, because he said her sniffles constituted a bladder infection.

Oh, friends, what more could happen to Mary Messed up mind? She buried herself in her studies and since she was having particular trouble with Entomology she often went to her lab instructor for aid, and he was so solicitous as to explain to her why such and such a professor was a dirty old man and how she needed to be protected from the big ugly world And Mary, poor trusting female, allowed him to protect her, with the practical point of view in mind that he must also be lenient in his grading of her. Their courtship bloomed, and Mary did not lose faith, even when she found the number of woodland field trips increasing, her number of woodland bugs not increasing.

Nor did she lose faith when she fixed her friend up with his friend and her friend narrowly escaped with her life, her sanity and other essentials barely intact. One must trust, she said, and she did until the day our fair young man went home and came back married. What's more he flunked poor Mary, and to this day Mary is convinced that she flunked because it was not bugs she found but rats.

SBA To Offer Unique Masters Program For Minorities

By JILL WALLACH

Dr. Wendell R. Smith, Dean of the UMass School of Business Administration, has announced that the University will offer a unique Master of Business Administration program designed specifically for blacks and members of other minority groups currently employed by businesses.

Program ABLE (Accelerated Business Leadership Education), the first of its type in the nation, will attempt to fulfill the growing need for minority group members in top management posts, according to Dean Smith. The program will begin in the summer of 1969 with 30 candidates chosen from all parts of the country.

The summer session will attempt to guage the potential of each candidate and to provide background material through intensive tutoring sessions and regular student-faculty meetings. Basic business courses will be offered during this initiation period. The students will then be admitted to the school's regular M.B.A. sequence. The curriculum throughout the course will be designed to fit the individual needs of candidates. Special tutoring and supplemental college courses will be introduced where needed.

"Our assumption," says Dean Smith, " is that many of the candidates will have had no formal business courses and may need some background work. We are committed to giving each of them the maximum opportunity for success through the cooperation of the University and the sponsoring firm."

Prerequisites for those wishing to enter this program are a college degree, employment by a corporation, and ability and interest to progress in their chosen field of interest. A major stipulation of the program is that the candidates must be chosen and sponsored by their employers for the total time it takes them to obtain the M.B.A. degree.

Completion of the program will take 15 - 21 months depending on the individual. Costs will vary depending on the circumstances of the student. For the unmarried student, all costs for the 15 month period would amount to approximately $4,800. For a married student with children, the cost to the sponsoring company would range from $6,450 to $8,200, depending on the type of accommodations that would be needed.

Dean Smith looks optimistically on the future success and need for this program. He has stated, "We believe that the nation's firms will think of this program as an investment in the future of Blacks, Puerto Ricans, American Indians and businessmen from other minority groups who have the potential to advance to top management positions with more training. This country has a great need for business leaders, and this program is designed to help candidates with the ability and interest to take an important step toward the top.

Businesses interested in the program can obtain more information by contacting the UMass School of Business Administration, Office of the Dean, Amherst, Mass., 01002

The University of Massachusetts School of Business Administration has launched Project ABLE (Accelerated Business Leadership Education), a unique graduate study program for members of minority groups currently employed by businesses. Project ABLE's planning committee includes, left to right: Harry T. Allan, professor of business law; business school Dean Wendell R. Smith; Thomas A. Morrison, associate professor of accounting and director of the Master of Business Administration program; Lawrence A. Johnson, assistant dean; and Arthur Elkins, associate professor of management.

A review board should be set up to which all students may present complaints about unfair treatment by faculty and staff.

The University should make clear to all dormitories, fraternities and other organizations the consequences of blatant racist behavior, e.g., suspension of open house privileges.

Henderson concluded by saying that the black students hope to create "an atmosphere of University community" with these demands. They feel that the University is now "not a cohesive unit."

pus police officer being shot, but the probability of this is so small it precludes their having guns.

For the minority, Senator Janice Kurkjian stated that there is a difference between the University and a community of comparable size. She said, "The majority of crimes are committed by non-University people." In arguing further for the campus police to retain their weapons, she said that the campus police never know when they may have to protect themselves or some student. She said, that "psychologically" it gives the police a feeling of security as well as "the girls, speaking for herself."

Senator Joseph Kilmartin cited the University of Michigan as an institution of comparable size that does not have a police force on campus. The population of the University of Michigan was approximately 26,000 when the "top administrator" now at the University from whom he obtained his information was there. He suggested that the police might be accompanied by German Shephards who would be trained for this type of work.

Senator Richard Verrochi clarified the three types of security men on campus. The fire and security and the watchmen do not carry guns. Only the 18 police officers, the chief and lieutenant are authorized to carry guns. He urged a "wait and see attitude", to find out what happens on the other campuses that have disarmed their police officers.

Senator Verrochi also said that the town police could not be called into the University in the event they are needed.

Student Senate President Paul Silverman, who handed over the chairing duties to vice-president Rich Hartwell in order to speak on the bill, refuted Verrochi's statement that town police could be called to the University.

Silverman also pointed out that police chief Alexander Blasko was conducting sensitivity training sessions "when just two or three weeks ago he was calling a Negro professor boy." He also challenged Col. Marchant's estimation of the number of students which constituted riot proportions, citing 50 or 60 rather than 200 as Marchant had said.

He said "It's just as dangerous to fire into the air as it is to fire at someone. You can still kill them." He advocated tear gas and calling for help and said, "Well-trained police don't need guns. It's just a panacea for poor training."

Other rocket and spacecraft experts tended to agree with the analysis.

One expert said conditions would be suitable, so far as the Soviets are concerned, for a launch about Dec. 8. A cosmonaut crew sent on a lunar voyage on that date probably would be back on earth before the Apollo 8 craft gets ready to lift off.

WASHINGTON (AP) - A leading american student of Soviet space projects suggested Wednesday that Russion cosmonauts may try to orbit the moon early in December, about two weeks ahead of the scheduled U.S. attempt.

The Russian goal, he said, would be reconnaissance and photography of the far side of the moon, which would be in sunlight at that time of the month.

The three U.S. Apollo 8 astronauts, set for a lunar trip launch Dec. 21, plan to inspect the face of the moon during some 10 orbits on Christmas eve and Christmas day. They want to study the locations and approaches to equatorial sites on which another Apollo team may attempt to make a landing next year.

The U.S. authority on Soviet space shots asked that his name be withheld because of the speculative nature of his remarks.

However, he said a Soviet manned survey of the back of the moon would strengthen the belief that the Russians are not ready yet to consider a lunar landing. If they were ready, they too would be studying landing sites on the moon's face rather than "waiting to use the pictures that we get," he said.

Daley Comments On HHH's Loss

CHICAGO (AP) - Mayor Richard J. Daley said Wednesday that street violence during the Democratic National Convention had nothing to do with Vice President Hubert H. Humphrey's election defeat. The mayor hinted that Humphrey might have won Illinois if he had campaigned harder in the state.

Daley, who heads the county Democratic organization said at a news conference: "We urged the vice president that Illinois was a pivotal state." He said that Downstate Democratic leaders invited Humphrey to make several visits to the area.

Humphrey campaigned only once in Illinois, speaking at a Chicago Stadium party rally the Friday before the election.

Richard M. Nixon, who lost Illinois in 1960 by less than 9,000 votes, was put over the top in the Nov. 5 election winning Illinois' 26 electoral votes. The unofficial vote count showed Nixon winning Illinois by 130,000 votes.

ATTACKERS BEWARE

Most girls who have been molested on campus have called in and made a report of their attacks. They've given some sort of description of their attackers (or their identities if known). The girls who do not want to make complaints such as these are doing themselves and everyone else a disservice.

Recent incidents were related to me by Officer Rogala, who pointed out that the "Peeping Tom," if not caught, will continue to get more and more agressive as time passes and may become a dangerous sex offender. He urged girls who have been attacked to look for some outstanding or specific characteristic in their attackers, such as a speech defect. If the offender has a car be sure to get the registration number if at all possible. Clothing descriptions and hair color do not give security much to go on considering the size of our campus. Above all, remember to call security im - mediately after an attack. Don't wait! Your attacker may be on to bigger and bolder attempts.

Most incidents this year have occurred near the President's Hill and have been exposures. There are now officers on foot patrol in this area and in other areas of high incidence. Also, Mr. Stafford Sheehan of Gorman House notified the police of the innauguration of an escorting service for girls walking up to Orchard Hill, as a safeguard to girls in that area.

But remember girls--Make sure your escort is a real Gorman escort and not a potential attacker!

WHO DO UMASS COEDS DRESS FOR?

75% of the men on this campus are convinced that it's a man's world and that woman prepares her wardrobe for his eyes alone. 75% of the girls disagree.

These figures were uncovered in a recent survey on campus fashion. The survey was undertaken to determine just how important the male opinion on fashion is to the average UMass coed. How many females conform to the male opinion rather than to a female opinion?

One result of my search was that the average girl does not make her every move according to the dictates of "Vogue" or "Bazaar" but rather dresses for the situation. The wide belts and "klunky" shoes that are so popular among the girls seem to be popular only among the girls. The male opinion is more for the total look of a girl which is more than just clothes.

I stopped people in the lobby of the Student Union one Tuesday afternoon and asked them what their favorite mode of dress was for girls.

The girls were divided between short dresses and pants suits. 88% thought that men like miniskirts, while only 50% said they wore them. In truth, 60% of the men preferred miniskirts on young ladies; with the others choosing pants suits or jeans and sweaters.

Both guys and girls (95% and 96%) agreed that long hair on girls is great. They also agreed that short shifts, simple, wool and shapely are good for dinner dates. Voting on certain pictures that I showed to everyone confirmed previous differences of opinion on knitted pants suits. Girls liked them a lot, and guys like them a lot less.

Amazingly, the number one choice on the boys' list was a long, low-cut velvet gown--in answer to the "What-should-your-date-wear" question. Even more amazing was the fact that only 22% of the girls wanted to wear that dress!

Individual comments were helpful, particularly from the brothers of Theta Chi fraternity. One brother stated that all of my questions were really dependent on how the girl herself looked. In other words, the clothes don't make the girl as much as the girl makes the look.

A girl from Leach House said that she dressed according to the situation, depending on where she was going and with whom. A tall girl told me that she was more comfortable in pants; perhaps comfort is a factor.

If you don't dress for the situation, don't worry. Every man I interviewed was girl-conscious before he was clothes conscious. So the average girl doesn't have to worry about campus fashion. All she has to be is her good-lookin' self and have long hair. For the average man.

ALAS POOR MARY - YOU SHOULD HAVE KNOWN BETTER

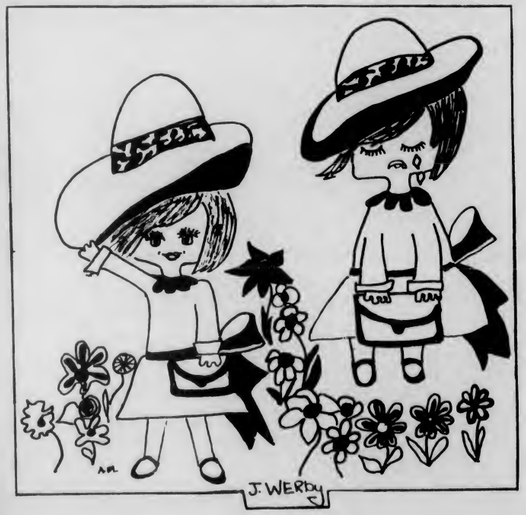
Marsha Gallo

This is the sad story, sad but true, of littl e Mary Messed-Up mind, who went to college to get an education and wound up getting disillusioned instead. Poor Mary, somehow everything happens to her. She grew up in the heart of Massachusetts in an intellectually stimulating factory city, went to the best public schools on split sessions, and was privileged to enjoy the genuine quality of Massachusetts geniality and general concern for mankind.

Setting out from her comfortable and secure home, she arrived at UMass, the exciting new world of her dreams, intellectual atmosphere, lasting relationships, and ultimately rich rewards for her. Filled with joy and grateful disbelief at having the opportunity to become a part of this healthy, progressive environment, she resolved to give to the school as much as or more than all it would surely give her. However, she found the debt to be one she could never repay.

Entering her dormitory, having found it somewhat dwarfed by a number of-skyscrapers, she found that she was assigned to a tripe room, about the size of her pantry at home. Since she was the last one to arrive she also had the closet by the door, the top bunk and no key, as there were only two, already in the hands of her roommates, who looked up over their cigarettes and magazines long enought to mouth a "hi". Luckily Mary realized that in college life one must be willing to put oneself out for another.

She made friends right away, and started her dating life with a very nice freshman boy in one of her classes, by the name of Jack, whom she held to be the epitome of intelligence, attractiveness and good judgement. How elated she was when he asked her for their very first date. Even though on that date he walked as far in front of her a s he could, carried the umbrella directly over his own head, grunted in answer to her polite conversation and growled when she was so forward as to ask him a question, Mary came to the conclusion that he was merely sensitive and could not be expected to respond to her trivialities, however sincere they might be. He must also be shy and did not want to appear too forward, as was certainly illustrated by the fact that he didn't have the nerve to ask her for another date right off that night but merely said, "well, I'll see you around," which was certainly a pleasant hint.



And the handsome young man did see her again, after apologizing in a two edged manner for his untoward behavior, which she assured him she was willing to accept as part of his personality. This apology instilled in her a trust for him which did not melt even when he picked her up for their second date and dragged her up the many flights of stairs to his poor bare room, even when he locked the door, turned on tapes of the Beatles to drown out she couldn't imagine what, and cornered her on the side of the room where the bed was. Alas, poor Mary really got messed up that night. But, she is more to be pitied than censured, etc.

Trusting soul, imagine her surprise when having invited him to her open house along with several of his drinking companions and her best friend, Mary crossed the room to change a record and oh, shame and misery, she saw her darling and her best friend locked in each other's arms.

Ah the pain, but Mary continued to bear her burden of trust, that is, until she bore it up to the University infirmary to obtain a Neo-Synephrine and some Robtussin, and the doctor insisted on giving her a pelvic examination, because he said her sniffles constituted a bladder infection.

Oh, friends, what more could happen to Mary Messed up mind? She buried herself in her studies and since she was having particular trouble with Entomology she often went to her lab instructor for aid, and he was so solicitous as to explain to her why such and such a professor was a dirty old man and how she needed to be protected from the big ugly world And Mary, poor trusting female, allowed him to protect her, with the practical point of view in mind that he must also be lenient in his grading of her. Their courtship bloomed, and Mary did not lose faith, even when she found the number of woodland field trips increasing, her number of woodland bugs not increasing.

Nor did she lose faith when she fixed her friend up with his friend and her friend narrowly escaped with her life, her sanity and other essentials barely intact. One must trust, she said, and she did until the day our fair young man went home and came back married. What's more he flunked poor Mary, and to this day Mary is convinced that she flunked because it was not bugs she found but rats.

SBA To Offer Unique Masters Program For Minorities

By JILL WALLACH

Dr. Wendell R. Smith, Dean of the UMass School of Business Administration, has announced that the University will offer a unique Master of Business Administration program designed specifically for blacks and members of other minority groups currently employed by businesses.

Program ABLE (Accelerated Business Leadership Education), the first of its type in the nation, will attempt to fulfill the growing need for minority group members in top management posts, according to Dean Smith. The program will begin in the summer of 1969 with 30 candidates chosen from all parts of the country.

The summer session will attempt to guage the potential of each candidate and to provide background material through intensive tutoring sessions and regular student-faculty meetings. Basic business courses will be offered during this initiation period. The students will then be admitted to the school's regular M.B.A. sequence. The curriculum throughout the course will be designed to fit the individual needs of candidates. Special tutoring and supplemental college courses will be introduced where needed.

"Our assumption," says Dean Smith, " is that many of the candidates will have had no formal business courses and may need some background work. We are committed to giving each of them the maximum opportunity for success through the cooperation of the University and the sponsoring firm."

Prerequisites for those wishing to enter this program are a college degree, employment by a corporation, and ability and interest to progress in their chosen field of interest. A major stipulation of the program is that the candidates must be chosen and sponsored by their employers for the total time it takes them to obtain the M.B.A. degree.

Completion of the program will take 15 - 21 months depending on the individual. Costs will vary depending on the circumstances of the student. For the unmarried student, all costs for the 15 month period would amount to approximately $4,800. For a married student with children, the cost to the sponsoring company would range from $6,450 to $8,200, depending on the type of accommodations that would be needed.

Dean Smith looks optimistically on the future success and need for this program. He has stated, "We believe that the nation's firms will think of this program as an investment in the future of Blacks, Puerto Ricans, American Indians and businessmen from other minority groups who have the potential to advance to top management positions with more training. This country has a great need for business leaders, and this program is designed to help candidates with the ability and interest to take an important step toward the top.

Businesses interested in the program can obtain more information by contacting the UMass School of Business Administration, Office of the Dean, Amherst, Mass., 01002

The University of Massachusetts School of Business Administration has launched Project ABLE (Accelerated Business Leadership Education), a unique graduate study program for members of minority groups currently employed by businesses. Project ABLE's planning committee includes, left to right: Harry T. Allan, professor of business law; business school Dean Wendell R. Smith; Thomas A. Morrison, associate professor of accounting and director of the Master of Business Administration program; Lawrence A. Johnson, assistant dean; and Arthur Elkins, associate professor of management.

WASHINGTON (AP) - A leading american student of Soviet space projects suggested Wednesday that Russion cosmonauts may try to orbit the moon early in December, about two weeks ahead of the scheduled U.S. attempt.

The Russian goal, he said, would be reconnaissance and photography of the far side of the moon, which would be in sunlight at that time of the month.

The three U.S. Apollo 8 astronauts, set for a lunar trip launch Dec. 21, plan to inspect the face of the moon during some 10 orbits on Christmas eve and Christmas day. They want to study the locations and approaches to equatorial sites on which another Apollo team may attempt to make a landing next year.

The U.S. authority on Soviet space shots asked that his name be withheld because of the speculative nature of his remarks.

However, he said a Soviet manned survey of the back of the moon would strengthen the belief that the Russians are not ready yet to consider a lunar landing. If they were ready, they too would be studying landing sites on the moon's face rather than "waiting to use the pictures that we get," he said.

Other rocket and spacecraft experts tended to agree with the analysis.

One expert said conditions would be suitable, so far as the Soviets are concerned, for a launch about Dec. 8. A cosmonaut crew sent on a lunar voyage on that date probably would be back on earth before the Apollo 8 craft gets ready to lift off.

Daley Comments On HHH's Loss

CHICAGO (AP) - Mayor Richard J. Daley said Wednesday that street violence during the Democratic National Convention had nothing to do with Vice President Hubert H. Humphrey's election defeat. The mayor hinted that Humphrey might have won Illinois if he had campaigned harder in the state.

Daley, who heads the county Democratic organization said at a news conference: "We urged the vice president that Illinois was a pivotal state." He said that Downstate Democratic leaders invited Humphrey to make several visits to the area.

Humphrey campaigned only once in Illinois, speaking at a Chicago Stadium party rally the Friday before the election.

Richard M. Nixon, who lost Illinois in 1960 by less than 9,000 votes, was put over the top in the Nov. 5 election winning Illinois' 26 electoral votes. The unofficial vote count showed Nixon winning Illinois by 130,000 votes.

A review board should be set up to which all students may present complaints about unfair treatment by faculty and staff.

The University should make clear to all dormitories, fraternities and other organizations the consequences of blatant racist behavior, e.g., suspension of open house privileges.

Henderson concluded by saying that the black students hope to create "an atmosphere of University community" with these demands. They feel that the University is now "not a cohesive unit."

pus police officer being shot, but the probability of this is so small it precludes their having guns.

For the minority, Senator Janice Kurkjian stated that there is a difference between the University and a community of comparable size. She said, "The majority of crimes are committed by non-University people." In arguing further for the campus police to retain their weapons, she said that the campus police never know when they may have to protect themselves or some student. She said, that "psychologically" it gives the police a feeling of security as well as "the girls, speaking for herself."

Senator Joseph Kilmartin cited the University of Michigan as an institution of comparable size that does not have a police force on campus. The population of the University of Michigan was approximately 26,000 when the "top administrator" now at the University from whom he obtained his information was there. He suggested that the police might be accompanied by German Shephards who would be trained for this type of work.

Senator Richard Verrochi clarified the three types of security men on campus. The fire and security and the watchmen do not carry guns. Only the 18 police officers, the chief and lieutenant are authorized to carry guns. He urged a "wait and see attitude", to find out what happens on the other campuses that have disarmed their police officers.

Senator Verrochi also said that the town police could not be called into the University in the event they are needed.

Student Senate President Paul Silverman, who handed over the chairing duties to vice-president Rich Hartwell in order to speak on the bill, refuted Verrochi's statement that town police could be called to the University.

Silverman also pointed out that police chief Alexander Blasko was conducting sensitivity training sessions "when just two or three weeks ago he was calling a Negro professor boy." He also challenged Col. Marchant's estimation of the number of students which constituted riot proportions, citing 50 or 60 rather than 200 as Marchant had said.

He said "It's just as dangerous to fire into the air as it is to fire at someone. You can still kill them." He advocated tear gas and calling for help and said, "Well-trained police don't need guns. It's just a panacea for poor training."

John Barth Publishes 'Lost In The Funhouse', New Collection Of Stories

The harried Author addresses his audience: "The reader! You, dogged, uninsultable, print-oriented bastard," We read on. Has the Author gone mad? The reader? Mad indeed! When the self sees its image reproduced to infinity in a Funhouse's opposite mirrors, it might turn away pleased by the illusion, or it might (if it has reason to suspect its own reality) linger and ask, "Which is 'I'?" This questioning-self-conscious, schizophrenic, and often grotesquely hilarious - is the essence of John Barth's new collection of 14 stories.

A writer operates just this side of some dangerous ground, a twilight zone where words, himself and his whole purpose for writing seem intangible, disembodied, even ridiculous. This time, instead of running from it, Barth operates (albeit as an oceanographer observes the depths from the safety of a bathoscaph) and the result - if a bit self-indulgent - is fascinating.

The stories follow no linear pattern (perhaps Barth's answer to McLuhan?) and each one can only be completely "read" in the context of the entire book. Stories play off against, and with, each other like words in a very tight poem, yet their complexities create a rich chaos strung together with symbol and metaphor.

In "Life Story," the rhetorician's practice of building, then bringing together, in high harangue, the essence of his tale, is ridiculed.

Though many of the stories are meant for tape - and we have to deal with print - the desired effect of a "disembodied Authorial Voice" can be achieved by just keeping the recorded voice in mind. In his experiments Barth develops the authorial voice itself and Ambrose M----------, a precocious child, who are embodied in the third main character, an exiled minstrel.

In the beginning was the half-self: a sperm wriggling its way through a "Night-Sea," towards a feared annihilation in the side of a great sphere. Ambrose is born, lives to 13; and then we have "Petition," a mysterious letter written by the sat-on, humiliated, mute half of siamese twins, who is connected by his stomach to his brother's back. Things fall apart.

Conflict of conscience

On a trip to the beach with his family, Ambrose (and the story) go wildly out of control. Completely humiliated, the Author can only explain what should be happening, but it becomes obvious that he and Ambrose are freaks: siamese twins who cannot live with or without each other - the narcissic fore, the uncertain aft. When Ambrose finally wanders off in the Funhouse's plywood maze - in itself an amazingly complex metaphor - the Author can only report lost Ambrose's alienated resolution.

There is a split. Narcissic Ambrose's possible cure is the third-person singular, but to no avail, since "his self objectified's the more enthralling." The Author in "Title" flounders in a frustrating self-consciousness. His language breaks down with the knowledge that he himself is fiction and can only find solace in the self-victory implied in self-defeat.

Undaunted Author forges on, this time clothing himself as Menelaus, but point of view overpowers him. Speeches are surrounded by as many as seven quotation marks, and we can sympathize with "Fagged" Telemauchus at story's end. The Author has lost himself in the mirror's infinite images. Mock epic of the soul

But paradoxically, there is a way out of Proteus' final disguise: "The absurd, unending possibility of love." In the final story, at least some things are resolved. Spoken becomes speaker - speaker, self. "Anonymida" is the ninth in a series of amphorae packed with an exiled minstrel's writing and set to sea from his lonely island. The minstrel succeeds in freeing himself from the burden of self-consciousness. In first person anonymous he asks of his writing, "Will anyone have learnt its name? Will everyone?" but realizes that a "nameless minstrel wrote it" and that is all that matters.

Lost in the Funhouse is a mock epic of the human soul. Joyce is here with his "omphalos" and fabricator father (in this case wicked). The journey-search of Odysseus is unmistakeable. Metaphor piles on metaphor and things get tremendously complex, but Barth never loses control in an exhilarating display of "passionate virtuosity."

'Student Power', The Night Of Inquiry' To Try To 'Humanize' The Institution

An experimental teach-in beginning this Friday at 8 P.M. and lasting until 7 A.M. Saturday will examine the role of the student in the university. "Student Power: The Night of Inquiry" will be concerned with mainly finding ways to "humanize" the institution.

According to Dave Aronson, publicity chairman, one topic to be discussed includes the fact that the university in the past four years has grown by 5,000 students to a student body of 16,000. The surge is expected to continue until the student body reaches 25,000 in the next five years. New buildings have been erected to feed, house, educate, and amuse the students. Aronson says: These physical assets have become the plants for an increasingly efficient production of diplomas--but is this the purpose of a university? Have these assets obscured the individuals they were meant to serve?"

The Martin Luther King Jr. Council, which is presenting the "Night of Inquiry", feels that involvement is a somewhat tenuous and fragile movement in a large university which may readily stifle individual initiative. Friday night will present to the student the chance to find out what he can do to change the institutions which govern his every activity. Aronson says "Student Power: Night of Inquiry" proposes not only to discuss (the usual term for inaction), but to discover methods and means for humanizing the university. We believe that this can be done by making the student aware of the resources and the channels open to him for constructive change.

Some specific questions to be discussed are: Who runs the Student Union? How does Afro-Am intend to relate the black freshmen to an alien, predominantly white environment? What are the privileges of WMUA and the COLLEGIAN, and what responsibilities are tied to these freedoms? The evening will also be concerned with discussing such problems as Where does the administration stand in respect to student demands? It is hoped that the answers to these problems will be revealed Friday as the faculty, administration, and students confront each other in a meaningful dialogue.

Aronson cautions, however, that "The Night of Inquiry" will not only be and exercise in intellectual and social problem-solving, but it also "intends to involve the whole student. To that end, a jug band, a rock group, a jazz group, and folk musicians will provide entertainment throughout the night. Also included are films and a light show. Refreshments will also be available."

"The Night of Inquiry" will be held at the North Dining Commons. As the publicity chairman says, "Drop in, learn something, do your own thing."

Harvard To Choose Twelve Newsmen As Nieman Fellows

(AP) - Three newsmen and three university officials were named by Harvard University Wednesday to select next year's Nieman Fellows in journalism.

The six-member committee will choose about 12 newsmen next spring to study at Harvard as Nieman Fellow during the 1969-70 academic year.

Named to the selection committee were:

Roy M. Fisher, editor of the Chicago Daily News, a Kansas State University graduate, and a Nieman Fellow in 1950-51.

Paul Ringler, associate editor of the Milwaukee Journal, an alumnus of the University of Wisconsin.

Davis Taylor, publisher of the Boston Globe and a member of Harvard's Board of Overseers.

William Liller, Willson professor of applied astronomy and master of Adams House at Harvard, a Harvard graduate who has a doctorate from the University of Michigan.

William M. Pinkerton, Harvard news officer, former member of the Associated Press' Washington staff, graduate of the University of Wisconsin and a Nieman Fellow in 1940-41.

Dwight E. Sargent, curator of Nieman Fellowships, former editorial page editor of the Portland, Maine, Press Herald and New York Herald Tribune, graduate of Colby College and a Nieman Fellow in 1950-51.

Applicants for fellowships must be under 40 and have at least three years of news experience. The deadline for applying is April 1. Five or six foreign journalists will be associated with the fellows in the program.

Next year's fellows will be the 32nd annual group. The fellowships were established in 1938 under a bequest from Agnes Wahl Nieman in memory of her husband, Lucius W. Nieman, founder of the Milwaukee Journal.

The program this year received a grant from the Ford Foundation and gifts from newspapers, magazines, companies and individuals.

Graduate School Enrollment High Despite Draft

The presidents of two major higher education associations said Sunday that the effect of the Government's elimination of draft deferments for graduate students had not been nearly as great as expected.

W. Clark Wescoe, president of the National Association of State Universities and Land Grant Colleges, and G. Tyler Miller, president of the American Association of State Colleges and Universities, said most graduate schools had experienced no more than a 10 per cent drop in enrollment as a result of the new draft regulations that went into effect at the beginning of this school year.

They noted, however, that draft calls had been considerable lower than normal this fall. They said that if calls rose substantially after the first of the year, the outlook for graduate schools would be uncertain.

Mr. Wescoe and Mr. Miller spoke at a press conference at the beginning of a three-day convention of their association at the Statler-Hilton Hotel here.

The National Association represents 100 major state universities and land-grant institutions. The American Association represents 236 four-year state liberal arts colleges.

Vietcong Urge U.S. To Talk Without Saigon Delegation

PARIS (AP) - The Viet Cong challenged the United States Wednesday to resume peace talks without South Vietnam as diplomats met over the tangle of Washington-Saigon relations.

"If Saigon does not send a delegation then the three parties-The National Liberation Front-NFL-North Vietnam and the United States-must meet without delay to find a solution on the basis of the program, put forward by the NLF," said Duong Dinh Thao, No. 2 man in the Viet Cong delegation.

There was no indication, however, that the United States was ready immediately to carry out Secretary of Defense Clark M. Clifford's threat Tuesday that the Americans would go it alone if President Nguyen Van Thieu of South Vietnam persisted in his boycott of the conference.

U.S. officials emphasized that the United States still expected a four-party peace conference and was working to get Saigon's participation. They said they expected a South Vietnamese delegation eventually, but set no deadline.

Thieu has announced he will boycott four-party talks unless two conditions are met:

-That Saigon head the allied delegation, relegating the United States to a subsidiary role.

-That the North Vietnamese and Viet Cong merge their delegations, thus effacing the self-proclaimed independent status of the front. Hanoi would head the Communist side.

"President Thieu suggested a two-sided meeting," Lam said, "and we are awaiting the reply of the interested parties."

Two interested parties - Hanoi and the NLF - have already rejected Thieu's demands. The third, the United States, is having top-level discussions with the South Vietnamese government in Saigon.

Though U.S. sources here would not comment on the substance of these Saigon talks, some allied diplomats were suggesting that South Vietnam would agree to send a delegation if Thieu was given an American pledge that Saigon:

-Had the right to speak for South Vietnam.

-Was conceded a vote on any arrangements made at eventual talks.

-And could walk out of the conference if it was dissatisfied with the course of negotiations.

Were this the case, these sources said, the division between Saigon and Washington may not be as deep as the statements of public officials make it seem. They were talking about an agreement within the next week or 10 days.

Damage Deaths Left In Wake of Third N.E. Storm This Week

Biting cold overspread New England Wednesday night as residents of the region still struggled to shake off the effects of the area's third major storm in less than a week.

The U.S. Weather Bureau predicted that temperatures would slip into the 20's over northern New England by dawn, and into the 30's over most southern sections. And forecasters said the mercury probably would not rise too far above these levels Thursday.

Meanwhile, the storm that thundered over the northeast Tuesday was reported trundling seaward toward Nova Scotia. In New England it left behind widespread damage and nine known storm-related deaths. Most of the latter were the result of either auto accidents or over-exertion.

The storm belted southern New England with waves of wind-driven rain, and northern New England received as much as a foot of new snow. Weathermen called it the region's worst blow in several years.

At its height, the storm hurled hurricane-force winds over 75 miles per hour over much of the region. And weathermen atop New Hampshire's 6,288-foot Mt. Washington said at one point that they had recorded gusts as high as 91 miles per hour.

The Atlantic Ocean ran amuck as the storm intensified. Mountainous breakers ripped over sea walls, tearing apart small boats and flooding low-lying areas. At Kennebunk Beach, Maine, breakers 20 to 30 feet high tossed boulders onto King's Highway and the lawns of summer cottages. Miles of sandy beaches were eaten away by the surf and rain.

Driving remained treacherous over much of northernmost New England through most of Wednesday, but by late in the day officials said conditions had improved greatly. Air and rail travel generally was back to normal again by Wednesday morning, and the Woods Hole, Martha's Vineyard and Nantucket Steamship Authority announced at midday Wednesday that it was resuming its scheduled runs to the islands off Cape Cod.

Flooding was extensive in low-lying coastal areas because of the storm, but no overall damage estimate was available. In Norwalk, Conn., one observer called flooding the worst since Hurricane Carol in 1954. Water ran as much as four feet deep in some of the streets of South Norwalk.

The Weather Bureau said Wednesday afternoon that except for the cold, conditions should remain relatively normal in the days immediately ahead. No further major storms are in sight, a spokesman reported.

Friday's 'Night of Inquiry' Examines Ways To Effect Administration Policy

Friday night November 15th at 8 p.m., the Martin Luther King Jr. Social Action Council is presenting an all-night teach-in at the North Dining Commons. The teach-in is called the Night of Inquiry: Student Power will examine the resources and channels open to the students to effect changes in the policies of the administration and the faculty at UMass.

Speakers from the administration will include the Assistant Dean of Students Mark Nofssinger, Special Assistant to the Provost Dallas Darland, and other administrators who deal with student affairs. Speakers for the faculty will include members of the Faculty Senate, and other faculty committees concerned with student-faculty relationships. The student speakers will include the class presidents, members of the Student Senate, SUG board, and other student goverment groups.

There will also be representatives from many campus political and social groups. There will be representatives from the Collegian, and WMUA. There will be representatives from such groups as Afro-Am, the King Council, and SDS to explain the policies of their groups with regard to university life.

The program also includes entertainment such as jazz, rock, and soul groups, a jug band, folk singers, and a light show. Refreshments such as sandwiches, coffee, and cookies will be available at a reasonable cost. Admission is free.

Czech Central Committee Meets To Approve Changes In Soviet's Party Reform Program

PRAGUE (AP) - Czechoslovakia's ruling Communist party Central Committee gathered Wednesday night for a full-dress session that Czechs and Slovaks feared would further curtail their freedom.

The Central Committee is opening a plenary session Thursday to approve changes in the party reform program forced by the Soviet-led occupation, now in its 13th week.

Recent cutbacks in the freedom of press and freedom to travel abroad prompted some Czechoslovaks to fear that the session would approve further concessions to demands for a return to orthodox communism now being voiced by a pro-Soviet faction of old guard Communists.

Despite a ban on demonstrations and appeals by leaders for calm, there was a growing prospect of weekend clashes between police and students and young workers threatening parades and sit-ins, especially if the party yields to the pro-Soviet elements.

The Communist party newspaper Rude Prave predicted the party leadership would settle accounts with the orthodox wing in order to avert a major political crisis.

"The November plenary meeting of the Central Committee will say what it has to say on the basic questions of responsibility and discipline of Communists and party unity," it said, "unless the present differences of opinion between liberals and conservatives are to result sooner or later in a serious internal party crisis that would really threaten the action capacity of the whole party."

One Czech source said the document up for committee approval, listing party tasks for the future, bore little resemblance to the one endorsed by district and regional branches of the party.

The informant said it was extensively rewritten to make concessions to Moscow and to insert large passages of criticism of the post-January reforms, especially of the press, radio and television.

Columbia Student To Lecture On Student Rebellion

The "Student Rebellion" at Columbia University will be described in a program at Smith College by a student who participated in it.

The student, Juan Gonzales, is a member of Students for a Democratic Society and the Strike Coordinating Committee at Columbia. These organizations took part in the demonstrations at the university last spring.

The event, sponsored by the Student Lecture Committee, is open to the public. It will be held at 4:30 p.m. in Wright Hall, Friday.

Gonzales will discuss the significance of the "Columbia Rebellion" and further developments of the situation.

Students were angered by Columbia's participation in defense research and the construction of a university gymnasium adjacent to a community park. They charged the administration with lack of response to what they saw as legal and peaceful means of protest. About 1,000 students seized and occupied five university buildings. When the buildings had been held for nearly a week, policemen were called onto the campus to remove the demonstrators.

Prof. Mayhew Gives His Analysis Of The Presidential Election

by PAULA CURRY
Staff Reporter

Professor David R. Mayhew of Yale University was at UMass yesterday to give an analysis of last week's Presidential and Congressional elections.

Speaking to a small crowd of faculty, graduate and undergraduate students in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union, Mayhew emphasized the "eerie similarity" of this year's election to that of 1960. The popular vote was again a close one and Prof. Mayhew said that the voting pattern was quite similar to the 1960 one. Nixon was a non-sectional winner just as Kennedy was.

The Northeast, he said, was again a Democratic stronghold; it was the only area to give Humphrey a clear majority. In Massachusetts, Humphrey got a slightly larger percentage of the vote than did Kennedy in 1960. An interesting fact, pointed out Mayhew, was that the rich suburbs around Boston had significant increases in their Democratic voting.

In reference to Congressional elections, Prof. Mayhew said that the most significant aspect was "how little happened". The turnover in both House and Senate was low, he said, "with no one having much of a coat-tail effect." He noted that there appeared to be much split-voting, and that in our present-day system, with all the candidates appearing on television, presenting their images to the public, there is not such a tendency on the voter's part to vote the straight Democratic or Republican ticket.

Mayhew said that the issues seemed to have little impact on the Congressional elections. In regard to the Vietnam war, there was no significant dove-hawk change in the House. And the problem of urban violence had "no discernible impact" on the Democrats, the party in control in most of the large cities where riots occurred. He cited evidence of Democratic gains in the cities of Chicago, Detroit, Cleveland and Newark.

Party change-overs in certain House and Senate seats were for the most part, "ambiguous." He said that many of the Republicans who replaced Democrats in the Senate had, when serving in the House, voted almost consistently with the Democrats. He added that some Republicans replaced conservative Democrats, so voting records of these seats will probably not change too much.

Mayhew said that change, if it comes, will be a change in "political style, not ideology." He things that perhaps the new Senate will vote for disclosure of senators' incomes. He attributes this to the replacing of several "old-style" senators with "reformers".

Mayhew said that although Nixon's popular vote was "dangerously low", he felt that because the President-elect is a moderate candidate he would not face too much popular trouble. He said, "The Democratic Party is really behind him."

The professor also had several comments to make about George Wallace. He said the third-party candidate got "a very impressive slice of the total vote." He noted that previous third parties, most specifically the Populist and Progressive parties have had an impact on the winning party and he feels that the same will hold true this year. He says that the Republican Party will try to get Independent Party support.

Mayhew said that, at the present, no one can be sure of what Nixon's policies will be. He did add, however, that he feels that Nixon will "switch symbols without switching policies."

Prof. Puder Unable To Appear

Professor David Ruder of the Northwestern University School of Law will be unable to appear in Amherst on either November 14 or 15. Professor Ruder has returned to Chicago, apparently called back because of a family emergency.

As a result of Professor Ruder's departure, no "sample class" will be held at Amherst College on November 14 and no interviews will be conducted on November 15. The program for Stanford University remains unchanged. For further information, call Brenda Thoma (545-2179).

Poverty In Our Society Is Subject Of Book Edited By Prof. Seligman

Poverty in our society is considered in all its manifestations in a new book edited by Professor Ben B. Seligman, director of the Labor Relations and Research Center and professor of economics at the University of Massachusetts. Entitled "Aspects of Poverty," the book is a collection of eight articles by distinguished writers concerned with this major social problem.

In his introduction, Prof. Seligman refutes those authors who have taken a purely statistical approach to the question of poverty in our society. "While a statistical portrait is clearly essential, it is quite inadequate to describe the nature of poverty in the modern age. One needs to examine the quality of the lives of the poor, especially as contrasted with the expectations and standards generated by an affluent society" he writes. With this in mind, he has compiled the collection of articles in the hope that they will "stimulate exploration of one of the most exacerbating social problems of the day."

In an effort to disparage the $3000 a year yardstick for poverty that had been established by the Council of Economic Advisers, Dr. Herman P. Miller proposed a more variable standard in his book, "Rich Man, Poor Man." The first article in "Aspects of Poverty" is an excerpt from that publication entitled "The Poor are Still Here." Dr. Miller is special assistant to the director of the Census Bureau.

Dr. Kenneth B. Clark, professor of psychology at the City University of New York and a founder of the New York antipoverty agency HARYOU (Harlem Youth Opportunities Unlimited), considers the question of the Negro ghetto as a pocket of poverty in his article "The Social Dynamics of the Ghetto," taken from his book "Dark Ghetto."

The specific problems of the aged poor and the children of the slums are considered in two separate articles. One, "Human Obsolence" by Dr. Jules Henry of Washington University in St. Louis, describes the plight of the elderly. The second, by Jeremy Larner, concerns the "Crisis in the Schools," and states that "children in the slums have little chance of reaping the harvest promised by education. They do badly in school because the school expects a poor performance."

Reason Has Prevailed

It should have happened five days ago. Appearing before the Student Senate last night, Dean Field and Robert Henderson answered many of the questions raised by students since last Friday's demonstration in Whitmore.

Some of the demands, which have alienated other students because they seemed so unreasonable as presented in the original list, were clarified by Henderson. Noticeably absent in his statement after the meeting with the administration Wed. afternoon and in his Senate speech last night, were such threatening words as, "demand, immediate, now, ultimatum, compulsory." Just the removal of these words from the demands and some needed clarification, made the entire list appear more reasonable.

For example, part of demand number two as presented to President Lederle Friday simply stated, we demand a minimum of 15 black policemen and take the guns away from police. The ultimatum given Lederle Tuesday said, "We give the administration 72 hours to disarm the campus police of all weapons." These statements, as presented, are clearly unreasonable. Using the threat of an ultimatum will not help their cause as the majority of students on this campus will not accept any solution brought about by threats.

However, due to the progress being made in the discussions, Henderson has modified this particular demand. In his statement released after the meeting with the administration, he said, "Since the gun issue involves not only the black students, but also the University at large, and the black students are sensitive to the feelings of the members of the University, and since we are primarily interested in the removal of guns, ... we realize MORE TIME IS NEEDED for this to be accomplished more effectively."

At the Senate meeting, Henderson clarified this point even further. He said in certain instances, ie, the transportation of large sums of money, the police officer should carry a gun. However, he went on to say, for the daily routine of dead Amherst life, guns should be kept in the car. This new demand is far more reasonable than the earlier one, "take guns away from police", and can be supported by a large number of ALL students on the campus.

Also, Henderson said last night that his group wants at least 15 black policemen on the campus force. At first it was believed he wanted 15 blacks on the 20 man police force. However, last night he said the group wants at least 15 blacks on the 70-man campus security force. This demand can now be interpreted as meaning more black personnel on campus, a point which any rational person would call just.

Obviously progress is being made in the discussions in Whitmore. It is apparent that the black students have won the respect of the administration. However, and maybe more important, the administration has won the respect of the black students.

The black students must now realize that the administration has no intention of giving them the brushoff. The administration is concerned, and it doesn't take threats to make them concerned. However, the administration, as Dean Field said last night, cannot set up separate standards for any group. It must work with all students to establish standards for every student. Bobby Henderson and the other members of the Afro-American orgainization apparently realize this now, for last night Bobby Henderson spoke not only as a black leader, but also as a student leader.

"Shall We Agree Right Now To Replace That Bridge?"

Possibilities For Nixon

When Richard Nixon was elected President, many people assumed that when he took over the office, there would be many policy changes. In light of the President-elect's most recent statements, however, this would not appear to be the case. He has stated that the actions of the Johnson Administration in the next few months would be continued in his own term of office.

This decision not only makes for a more efficient transfer of power, but allows the President-elect to use many intelligent people associated with the present administration, as well as that of President Kennedy's. These people can give a Nixon Administration a broader view in policy making, both a conservative and a liberal one, something often lacking in past administrations. There is little doubt that if Richard Nixon is to be an effective leader, he will probably have to be more liberal than many people have envisioned him, as being.

One of President-elect Nixon's less publicized actions since his election has been his decision to forgo an elaborate inauguration. His reasoning was based on his belief that a celebration in Washington would be a mockery with our men fighting in Vietnam. Although the action in itself may be of little significance, it may prove Mr. Nixon's grim determination to end the fiasco in Asia.

All in all perhaps Richard Nixon won't be as bad for this country as his opponents in the election had felt he would be. Perhaps he will be effective in curing our cities' ills. Perhaps, as Walter Lippmann has stated, he will end the war in Vietnam at all costs because he desires to win a second term in office. Perhaps his narrow mandate in the election will bring more liberal influences into his administration. Let us all hope that all this becomes reality, for like it or not, Richard M. Nixon will be President, barring the unforseen, for the next four years.

Special Report:

DEMOCRACY, CHICAGO - STYLE

BY ROWLAND EVANS AND ROBERT NOVAK

CHICAGO--As the 45th Precinct of the 24th Ward inside Chicago's West Side Negro ghetto opened its polling place at the James Johnson School election day, the voting was clearly going to be dominated and directed by one man: the Democratic precinct captain.

Although the legal status of a precinct captain is merely the passive one of poll-watcher, this Democratic functionary traditionally runs Chicago's voting precincts. It was not the only violation of law in the 45th Precinct on Tuesday. Indeed, the voting there was a travesty on democracy, solely an instrument enabling the Democratic precinct captain to meet his vote quota.

Democratic officials here bar newsmen from polling places, a prudent decision considering what goes on. However, we obtained poll-watcher's credentials, permitting us to observe democracy, Chicago-style, in several polling places on the black West Side. What we saw showed that lurid Republican charges levelled for years have not been exaggerated.

In the 45th Precinct, for example, . voter registration was meaningless. A nod from the Democratic precinct captain allowed an unregistered voter to vote by merely signing an affidavit. Whether he might vote in another precinct as well would be impossible to determine.

Even more remarkable was what happened inside the voting booth. Without asking whether the voter wanted help, the election judge--an attractive young lady in a bright red dress--entered the booth with every voter and instructed him to pull the Democratic straight-party lever, breaking the state law.

Once the curtain had closed and the voter was alone inside the booth, the judge would hover just outside so that the vote was anything but secret. If the voter tarried more than 30 seconds and thus appeared to be splitting his ticket, the judge would reach inside to tap him on the shoulder or even re-enter the booth with him.

Nobody was permitted close to the four-minute maximum time in the booth. When one voter had spent more than a minute inside, the precinct captain shouted across the room to the judge: "Come on, get her out of there."

When we questioned the precinct captain about these irregularities, he was enraged: "You white folks show up here on election day and try to run things. All the people here is of the same color and they all want to vote Democratic--nothing else. The judges just show them how to vote straight Democratic. Now, you sit down and shut up."

Such activity by judges is no less illegal than the conduct of the assistant Democratic precinct captain, who roamed about the polling place wearing Humphrey buttons--still another violation.

The assistant captain would usher certain voters into the school, then retire outside while they voted. When each left, the assistant captain would hand him what looked like a white chit. Without variation, the voters carrying chits would walk halfway down the block into an alley.

The outrages of the 45th Precinct did not vary greatly from what we observed elsewhere on the West Side Tuesday. Moreover, they echoed reports of irregularities from hundreds of precincts which poured into the headquarters of Operation Eagle Eye, the voter-security operation run by the county Republican organization.

Operation Eagle Eye compensates for the fact that oversight is not exercised by the moribund Republican party in Chicago's black ghettoes. "Republican" election judges are but paid auxiliaries of Major Richard J. Daley's Democratic organization. In the 45th Precinct we saw a "Republican" judge silently watch the Democratic election judge tell voters to pull the Democratic lever.

Operation Eagle Eye, with 5,000 volunteers Tuesday, has reduced outright vote theft here and inhibited Democratic precinct captains. But Eagle Eye cannot man every precinct (the ones we visited had no Eagle Eye observers), and sometimes Eagle Eye volunteers are intimidated by precinct captains.

Campus Comment

Conservative Protests

To The Editor:

Inevitably, most if not all of the demands set forth by the black students on this campus will be accepted. They will be accepted not because they are essentially just (as they surely are) but because the white power structure perceives, as black student leaders do not, their relative meaninglessness. They will be acceded to gradually at precisely those points when administrative intransigence might stimulate the development of even more critical and meaningful confrontations.

And when all of the present demands are met, there will be others. If the black leaders can not formulate additional demands, the power structure will. This is because the intelligent and implicitly racist power structure in America sees clearly the possibility of retaining the fundamental, the causative forces of inequity by channeling the wrath of the oppressed towards the more obvious and immediately irritating manifestations of this inequity. Hence, any number of unfortunate symptoms may be cured while the basic disease is allowed to persist, to fester, creating additional symptoms.

We have been told by black as well as white leaders that discussion regarding the ideological orientation of a movement serves only to subvert that movement by suggesting goals impossible to achieve. Within this context, concentration upon the nature and consequences of capitalism and imperialism is considered ill-advised, even dangerous, because it mitigates against direct confrontation with immediate issues. At the core of this argument lies the apparent belief that theory and action are somehow mutually exclusive.

To be sure, there have always been those who have subverted legitimate social and political movements by retreating to a comfortable philosophy, by engulfing the unwary within a debilitating ideological mist, by calling for confrontations they could never hope to win-while savoring the delicious joys of imminent destruction. We have names for these people. We call them escapists, misguided revistonists, dogmatists, sophisticated masochists, counter-revolutionaries, etc.

But the most fundamentally counter-revolutionary characteristic of a leader is his willingness to discard ideology while leading his people on a holy crusade against inequities, the causes of which he has chosen to ignore-in the process subordinating the development of radical awareness to a supreme and momentarily satisfying pragmatism.

It does not take a great deal of perception to understand that the black power or "liberation" movements of today, or the civil-rights movements of yesterday represent non-radical or, in my view, anti-radical approaches. Indeed, the more intelligent black leaders would not deny this for a moment. Their all-consuming desire is for "a piece of the action," a larger "slice of the cake." and after centuries of the most systematic oppression, who can blame them?

As the argument goes, only when the black man in America has achieved his full measure of equality, only when he too may savor the delights of the affluent society, will he perceive the essential corruption of these delights-somehow radicalizing himself process.

Bearded Men

To The Editor:

It is obvious that the time has come for minority groups to be heard. As a member of one such minority I am compelled to decry the injustices heaped on members of my group. I now present a list of 15 reasonable and just demands:

At least 15 bearded policemen.
Courses in the curriculum relating to beards ex. Great Bearded Men.
More bearded administrators, teachers, heads of residents.
Sensitivity training for girls.
Any girl who refuses to date a bearded student be expelled.
Sanctions against organizations that discriminate against bearded students especially sororities.
Bearded students be allowed to live any where on campus especially in girls dormitories.
No on campus recruiters from Shick, Gillette and Remington.
Rooms in new campus center be named after great bearded men Ex. Santa Claus.
Smith Brother's cough drops be given free at the Dining Commons.
The time has come for justice, equity, and equality to prevail. These demands must be met by Feb. 30, 1969. We bearded students refuse to be discriminated against.

Polish Rebuttal

To the Editor:

If there is one thing that Mr. Milinowsky's letter of the 13th shows it is complete ignorance as to its consequences. The type of anger being directed at the system, in the Afro-American society's presence at Whitmore takes a long time to build up! It takes living and going to school in the slums, or being close to others who've had to go through it. But its origins are old, the feelings are already there, and they are hard to erase. But they are very easily strengthened, and it only takes one ignorant remark to revive hate, or racism of any kind. And I'm afraid Mr. Milinowsky has made far too many such remarks.

Unfortunately, though I almost hate to admit it at this point, I was raised in a Polish American home- I am a Polish-American, at least if you want to put me in a little box and put a tag on me. But it is the people to whom the tag means more than the person who keep the hatred going, and the fear, and the prejudice. I would like to ask Mr. Milinowsky if he has ever been concerned enough to think about the far-reaching effects of his letter-to-the-editor. There's more to talking about a serious campus issue in the newspaper than a childish paralleling of statements for the sake of trying to be cool.

There are some people who become angry when somebody else seems to them to be getting something for nothing. Most of the time its because they want something for nothing themselves. It's very easy to criticize something you don't understand. I'll admit that there is much about the black students on campus that I don't understand. But I won't make fun of their demands. I can't make judgements like that. I have never lived as a Black American.

It takes a lot more than toying around with jokes to solve the problems on this campus. And being flip about a serious matter is very characteristic of ignorance. There is racism growing on this campus, and making jokes is not going to stop it. If Mr. Milinowsky feels that the Afro-American society is doing something wrong, then let him find out what they are doing and why, and do a little thinking about something other than how to make jokes in bad taste. Then he might be able to see what the effects of his letter could be. I don't expect he'll much like what he sees.

Who Invited SDS?

To The Editor:

Once again the University has been treated to the attentions of the local SDS group. We in Southwest were treated to their chants of "The election is a hoax!" last Thursday morning at 12:20 a.m. This group, admittedly vocal, behaves rather strangely, but consistently. That is, they are able to see all these alleged faults in our society, but are unable to come up with alternatives to the situation.

Their anti-ROTC activities are supposedly aimed at the "military-industrial complex which controls this country." How? Even neglecting the at-best tenuous connection, they conveniently ignore the fact that this complex has done a fair job. One finds it difficult to believe that flower-power can guard our shores, or that love beads are acceptable on the international markets.

They would have us disarm our campus police, asking, "Who are those guns aimed at?", a statement as ungrammatical as it is illogical. When was the last time a cop pointed a gun at YOU on campus? Would they have us disarm all police? Have guns outlawed and only outlaws will have them. This state's strict handgun laws haven't prevented the executions of various people in the Boston area nor are they so effective as to prevent any determined student from obtaining an illegal weapon. Upper-classmen will recall the shooting at T-6 two years ago. How would a cop have defended himself if present and unarmed?

They are down on the presidential election, yet others of their like found it necessary to run a pig as their candidate. They offer only chants instead of reasonable solutions to the problems which they see.

There can be little doubt of the feeling which the vast majority of students have towards this organization. Visits to Southwest have brought definite reaction in the form of some rather caustic comments on the participants' genesis, parentage, personal habits and eventual destination. If this group seems familiar, it is because they greatly resemble SDA, which found it convenient to move off-campus when threatened with RSO and/or Student Senate investigation.

It is true that SDS elicits response from the rest of us apathetic people, but listen to the response. Three cheers for SDS? Listen again.

SDS, who invited you?

PETER D. DISCENZA

SDS Rationale

To the Editor:

The letter and article of Messrs. Duen and Shepherd contain a great deal of interesting thoughts about which I should like to comment. In fact there are so many interesting thoughts contained in their writings that I shall only be able to touch on a few of their statements in this letter. I would also like to take this opportunity to challenge one or both of these gentlemen to public debate.

Mr. Duen obviously has not read the SDS position paper on ROTC and he is thus unable to deal with anything but the surface of the matter, that is, with the demonstrations. Demonstrations do not however occur in vacuums. Generally speaking they reflect the beliefs and emotions of the demonstrators. If Mr. Duen wants to discuss SDS seriously he should make some attempt to understand the intellectual and political issues involved. Furthermore Mr. Duen displays an incredible naivete when he suggest that SDS protest the war "in Hanoi or in the streets of Havana which is only ten minutes away by hijacked jet." His sense of politics is matched only by his sense of geography. He goes on to point out that there is no dissent allowed in Russia, Cuba or Hanoi (his words "no anti-Russian protests in Russia, no anti-Cuban protests in Cuba reveal his own uncritical jingoism). Even if his allegations were true, that would be no reason for supression in this country. Mr. Duen seems to be totally unaware of the fact that the vast majority of New Left is just as opposed to Soviet imperialism as it is to American imperialism. Mr. Duen may see a Russian behind every communist; more sophisticated minds recognize the growing revolutionary socialist movement in the third world as a legitimate response to social and economic oppression.

Mr. Shepherd's letter suffers from many of the same faults as Mr. Duen's article. He is more concerned with the excrement left in the wastepaper basket of the president of Columbia than he is with the University's policy to the blacks of the surrounding area. Putting excrement in a wastebasket is merely disgusting and silly; building a segregated gym which will use up valuable park space is not only disgusting but also immoral.

Nixon Plans Major Shakeup Of White House Staff System

NEW YORK (AP) - Richard M. Nixon made it clear Wednesday he plans a major shakeup of the traditional White House staff system. And a top aide indicated the president-elect intends to be a more "activist" president than Dwight D. Eisenhower.

Nixon announced through a spokesman the appointment of a second assistant to the president H.R. "Bob" Haldeman, 42, a Los Angeles advertising executive, who will handle general administrative matters and Nixon's daily schedule.

Haldeman, a chief of staff for Nixon during the campaign, told newsmen there'll be only three or four jobs comparable to his, all of them 'generalists" involved in general planning rather than details.

"We don't want specific people locked into specific boxes," Haldeman told a briefing session at the Hotel Pierre, where the Nixon camp is working out the details of the transition of power Jan. 2.

There won't be a press secretary or appointments secretary as such in the Nixon administration, he said. There was speculation, for example, that Herbert G. Klein, Nixon's communications chief during the campaign, would become an assistant to the president, with Ron Ziegler, the traveling press secretary in the campaign, serving as a special assistant doing the detail work with the press.

Beneath the three or four assistants to the president, Haldeman said, there will be several special assistants assigned to specific areas of responsibility.

The staff will be smaller than in other recent administrations, Haldeman said, and will certainly be one of the youngest.

With this kind of organization, Haldeman indicated in answer to questions, the president-elect will be a more activist president than Eisenhower, whom he served as vice president.

"I think," he said, "he'll be very much in it from the beginning."

The preliminary planning for the White House staff was done during the campaign, Haldeman said, and the details are still being worked out. The first assistant named, on Tuesday, was Bryce N. Harlow, 52, a White House aide in the Eisenhower Administration.

"We've spent a lot of time on a review of the White House staff," Haldeman said. "We've talked to a number of people who held the posts in past and present administrations and we feel there are a lot of ways we can improve the White House staff structure."

"Live and Love Completely", Says Drum In Eleventh Hour Series Lecture In SU

By Patt Francis

"The greatest gift life has given to me, and not just existence, is to be able to look into the mirror of the soul and decide that it's not so bad." So said Dr. Ryan Drum, the first speaker in the Maroon Keys' 11th Hour Series, speaking before an overflow crowd in the Student Union Ballroom.

Drum, in his hypothetical last chance to speak before dying, took his audience on a bus ride to Bondsville, Mass., Hazardville, Conn. and back again.

In Bondsville, site of a recent fire that destroyed the entire town, Drum related that he was taunted by children because of his hair and beard, and seemed in danger of being molested by the screaming demons playing in the school yard. He decided to assert himself, and so pulled out his movie camera, announced that he was going to make a movie of the kids as they ran away from him. The children were quieted by what Drum referred to as "exploitation for personal gratification," and Drum escaped unscathed.

Further down the road, near the factory compex that had burned, Drum encountered Mr. Businessman. "It was amazing how much pleasure the businessman got out of the whole thing. The factory complex was more important than the people whose lives were ruined by the fire."

Drum and his companions boarded their bus and went to the seashore at Hazardville, and then decided to go to the atomic reactor plant about ten miles away. Since their bus driver had had an accident, they had to hitch a ride from one of the local policemen, by convincing him that it was absolutely essential for them to be at the reactor for an experiment.

Having seen the reactor, Drum and his companions had the bus driver take them home. But the driver got lost.

And Drum told his audience "Old people are lost, and they're taking you and I with them. Given a little license, they lose all sense of direction."

He said that we have to decide how important it is to die by program, who'll be there, how many flowers. "You'll wonder why you never did all the things you wanted to do. And that's what this journey was all about: immersion to an invironment to see what we could do with the material at hand. It is not necessary to destroy, but circumvent, and circumlocute."

DR. RYAN DRUM delivered the first speech in the Maroon Keys "Eleventh Hour Series."

And that, said Drum, is "something we fail to realize. Everything we do is arbitrary. We act as if everything we do is irreversible. As long as human beings' life is viable, there are always choices."

"One of the first things to do is to assert the right to live and love completely. Make it possible for you, through your own health, strength, and awareness to go your own way.

"You are you, and as long as that exists it's inviolate. That inner satisfaction is always there. The ultimate responsibility of the University is to provide you with tools to be yourself and to enjoy that self, . .to know that everything you do is a success. There is no failure. . .And that you are the most important thing to you."

Social Action for Squares

Knitting a sweater for your boyfriend, socks for your father, baby clothes for a friend? Since these may leave you with extra yarn why not use this yarn to help the poor people of Springfield? If you donate a foot square (12" by 12") we can make Afghans for ghetto dwellers who face a long, cold, cheerless Christmas season.

Just use medium large needles (8, 9, or 10) and a stockinette stitch. What could be easier and really do so much! A box will be set up outside the Martin Luther King, Jr. Social Action Council office in Hampshire House Room 207 for your donations.

The number of radical left organizations on college and university campuses has almost doubled in the last three years, but the percentage of activists among the nation's students has remained unchanged, a study of American institutions of higher learning indicates.

But while membership in the left movement amounts to only 2 percent of the total enrollment of 6.7 million, the impact of this minority on the reform of campus administration was found to be substantial. An additional 8 to 10 percent are considered strongly sympathetic to the "movement for social change" and "capable of temporary activation depending on the issues," the report said.

But even on American policy in Vietnam, the issue found to be of the greatest concern, active protesters averaged only about 5 percent of the students of the 860 campuses surveyed.

MINORITY STATUS

"Despite its minority status, however, the radical student movement is having a very substantial impact, most importantly in recent months, on the nature of campus governance," college and university administrators across the country said.

In an analysis of extensive questionnaires and comparisons with similar surveys in 1965, the researchers concluded:

"If the movement can be sustained, and if ethical responsibility can prevail along with the great freedom sought by the students, the potential of the movement in time for the renewal of American life fairly staggers the imagination."

The study, based on the opinions of deans of students at 860 accredited four-year colleges and universities, was carried out by the Educational Testing Service in Princeton, N.J., one of the nation's leading nongovernmental, nonprofit test and research agencies, which prepares such national examinations as the College Board tests.

The survey was conducted by Richard E. Peterson, a research psychologist for the Educational Testing Service.

KEY FINDINGS

The survey's key findings include:

Next to Vietnam, the issues most frequently protested during the last academic year were, in this order, dormitory rules, civil rights, and student participation in college government. In 1965, the leading issues were civil rights, campus food and Vietnam, in that order.

Issues pertaining to instruction, faculty and freedom of expression rarely evoked organized student activism. Where such issues arose, it was predominantly over inflexibility of the curriculum and quality of instruction.

Civil rights activism among college students has declined significantly in the last three years, with white student activists leaving the prosecution of the "on-going civil rights revolution" to Negro activists.

While no such demands were recorded in 1965, Negro students are now insisting that their colleges provide "educational experiences consistent with their new self-conception," often through the study of Negro culture.

Activism is more prevalent at the large public and independent universities than at smaller institutions, and it is least pronounced at sectarian and such career-oriented colleges as teachers colleges.

INTERPRETATION OFFERED

In his interpretation of the findings, Dr. Peterson said:

"Citizens outside the academic world tend to be hostile, abhorring particularly the students' occasional recourse to violence and destruction.

"Given the present mood of the country, a tactic of violence most certainly risks an overpowering backlash. On the other hand, a tactic of relentless pressure on many fronts to expose, modify, or eliminate unjust social patterns -- politicizing people in the process -- holds for this observer great promise."

The study found that 38 percent of the institutions surveyed had Vietnam demonstrations on their campuses last year, while 34 percent had protests over dormitory regulations and 29 percent over local, off-campus civil rights issues.

Protests for greater student participation in academic policy-making were reported at 27 percent of the institutions, and at one out of four colleges there were protests about the draft and the presence of military recruiters. One of five campuses reported demonstrations over recruiting by governmental or industrial recruiters, such as Dow Chemical.

Close Martin Luther King School

BOSTON (AP) - The Martin Luther King School, which opened this week after being closed for a week because of student disorders, will be closed again School Superintendent William H. Ohrenberger said Wednesday.

Ohrenberger said classes are suspended indefinitely at the request of the Boston Teachers Union and the advisory council of the King - Timilty Coalition, a neighborhood organization.

Ohrenberger said the action is in the "best interests of restoring a workable and healthy educational situation to the school."

The school was closed last week when its Negro principal, John Joyce, resigned, saying he couldn't keep order. Joyce was appointed a few weeks earlier as the first Negro principal of the school at the insistence of parents and militant black groups in the school district in Roxbury.

Amherst Announces Opening Of First Employment Agency

Two local business women announce the opening of Amherst's first employment agency. Recently licensed by the state to conduct the Amherst Employment Service, Incorporated at 65 University Drive are Maralee G. Thibault of Leverett, member of the WHMP Northampton sales staff, and Faith Trueax of Amherst, owner of the Amherst Secretarial Service. The two services will share newly constructed offices in the Hamilton Newell business complex.

Mrs. Thibault, president-treasurer of the corporation, who writes under the name of Maralee G. Davis, at one time wrote for the Amherst Journal Record, was a reporter for the Greenfield Recorder Gazette, and has written for WHYN-Springfield and WTTT-Amherst. At one time she conducted her own real estate agency, and formerly was collegian sec. She will continue in her position at WHMP.

Mrs. Trueax is secretary of the corporation. Prior to establishing the Amherst Secretarial Service, Mrs. Trueax was with Headquarters 8th Airforce Operations Plans. She has served as office manager for Phillips and Cherbo advertising agency in Chicago, was with the Office of Dean of Arts and Sciences at Oklahoma State University, is a former executive secretary with Mobil Oil's mid-western headquarters in Chicago, and served in the U. S. Army Personnel office at Rossford Ordinance Depot, Toledo, Ohio. She travelled widely in the far east with the Red Cross Hospital Service during the Korean war, and has also worked for Manpower and Kelley Girls.

'Change of Attitude' Alters David O'Brien's Sentence to Probation for Three Years

BOSTON (AP) - David P. O'Brien, 21, of Cambridge, the first draft card burner to take his case to the Supreme Court, only to lose an appeal and begin a six-year federal prison term, had his sentence revoked Wednesday for a "change of attitude."

The disposition by U.S. District Judge Andrew A. Caffrey placed O'Brien on probation for three years, provided he accepts civilian work in a hospital in lieu of military service.

O'Brien, who burned his draft card publicly in 1966 on the steps of the South Boston District Court, served two months of his sentence. He had been free for two years pending the outcome of the appeal.

Several FBI agents were in the crowd which viewed O'Brien's act during a demonstration.

The U.S. Supreme Court, in an opinion written by Chief Justice Earl Warren, upheld his conviction last May. O'Brien claimed his prosecution infringed on his right of free speech under the First Amendment.

O'Brien's appeal was aimed at overturning the 1965 federal law making it a crime to burn a draft card.

Asst. U.S. Atty. John Wall objected to Judge Caffrey's change of disposition Wednesday.

"If the court now suspends sentence and grants probation conditional upon civilian work in a hospital, why could not other registrants disregard entirely all the regulations and rules of the Selective Service System, go on trial hoping to be found not guilty, and, if convicted, then say, OK, I'm willing to do civilian work instead of military service" Wall asked.

Wall was the prosecutor who won a U.S. District Court conviction of Dr. Benjamin Spock and three others on charges of conspiring to aid youths to avoid the draft. That case is under appeal.

Education Loan Available For Former Peace Corps Volunteers

Establishment of a higher education loan fund for returned Peace Corps Volunteers was announced today by Peace Corps Director Jack Vaughn.

The fund, started with private money raised by members of the Peace Corps' National advisory Council, makes a half million dollars available in loans to former Volunteers. Each may borrow up to $7,500.

"Volunteers come home enriched by their overseas experiences, with the potential to make positive, substantive contributions to our institutions of higher learning," say Vaughn.

Former Volunteers are eligible up to two years after completion of Peace Corps service. Eligibility is extended for returned Volunteers who enter the military or who are employed by the Peace Corps after completion of Volunteer service.

Loan repayment at maximum interest rates of seven per cent need not begin until nine months after a former Volunteer completes his education. Borrowers are eligible for interest subsidy by the U. S. Office of Education which will pay all interest on the loan during college if the annual income of the returned Volunteer and his immediate family does not exceed $15,000.

Public Skating At Orr Rink Starts Nov. 20

Amherst College will open Orr Rink, its indoor ice skating facility, for public skating periods beginning Wednesday, November 20. The Rink will be open from 8 to 10 p.m. that evening and on each succeeding Wednesday evening throughout the winter season.

Public skating will also be available on Saturdays and Sundays, from 3 to 5 p.m. and 8 to 10 p.m., beginning November 23, with the exception of Saturday afternoon, November 30.

The Rink will also be open to the public every afternoon throughout the Thanksgiving recess, beginning Wednesday, November 27, from 3 to 5 p.m. (again with the exception of November 30 mentioned above). Public Skating will also be held Wednesday and Saturday evenings of the Thanksgiving recess from 8 to 10 p.m.

Why does a perfect size 7 look perfect only 21 days every month?

It has nothing to do with calories. It's a special female weight gain... caused by temporary water-weight build-up. Oh, you know... that uncomfortable full feeling that sneaks up on you the week before your menstrual period. This fluid retention not only plays havoc with your looks but how you feel as well. (It puts pressure on delicate nerves and tissues, which can lead to pre-menstrual cramps and headaches, leaves emotions on edge.)

That's why so many women take PAMPRIN®. It gently relieves water-weight gain to help prevent pre-menstrual puffiness, tension, and pressure-caused cramps.

Gun Control Act of 1968 Requires Registration of Firearms, Weapons

Victor Fezio, Chief, Special Investigator, Alcohol and Tobacco Tax Division, Internal Revenue Service, JFK Building, Boston, stated today that the initial response for compliance on the part of owners of certain firearms or destructive devices with the registration requirement of the recently enacted Gun Control Act of 1968 was a definite indication of the willingness of the public to cooperate with the Federal authorities charged with the responsibility of enforcing this new gun control law.

Fezio pointed out that inquiries being recieved in his office indicated that there is an apparent misunderstanding on the part of many people, particularly former servicemen, regarding the registration of weapons formally classified as "DEWATS" (Deactivated War Trophies). Weapons of this type are subject to the requirements of the gun control law and must be registered.

There is no charge or fee in connection with the registration of any of the weapons or destructive devices and applications are available at all Internal Revenue Service offices throughout the state.

As a special service to the public, offices of the Alcohol and Tobacco Tax Division, Internal Revenue Service, located in Boston, Lowell, Worcester, Springfield and New Bedford will be open on Saturdays, November 9, 16, 23, and 30 and also on Sunday, December 1, 1968 for the sole purpose of assisting people in filing registration forms.

Cornell Philosopher To Lecture Friday

Cornell University Professor of Philosophy Max Black will speak at the University of Massachusetts Friday, Nov. 15, at 4 p.m. in the Student Union Colonial Lounge as part of a lecture series sponsored by the UMass department of philosophy.

Organized around the topic "Experience and Theory," the series includes a correlated seminar for four-college graduate students and faculty for the academic year 1968-69.

The core of the program consists of visits by seven distinguished philosophers who will give a public address and meet once with the seminar.

'The Swamp Dwellers' Shown Tonight in Mahar, Depicts African Life Resisting Modern Civilization

Tonight at 8 p.m., in Mahar Auditorium, there will be a showing, under the auspices of the Fine Arts Council, of the film THE SWAMP DWELLERS. This is a filmed version of the play "The Swamp Dwellers" by Wole Soyinka. Soyinka, a Nigerian playwright, is one of the foremost modern African writers. Three of his plays were perfomed last winter in New York theatres.

Wole Soyinka was born in 1935 in the Yoruba region of Western Nigeria and educated both in Nigeria and in England. He has become well known as poet, playwright, and producer-director of various Nigerian drama groups. He has published seven plays, a novel, and a volume of poetry.

His early plays (among them "The Swamp Dwellers") are distinguished by their poetic evocation of traditional African life and of the problems encountered as modern civilization impinges on the African village.

Increasingly, however, Soyinka has become politically involved and has turned in his plays to social criticism, culminating in his satiric portrayal of an African dictator in his last play, "Kongi's Harvest", which was performed last winter.

Soyinka was Director of the School of Drama at the University of Ibadan at the outbreak of the Nigerian civil war, but his outspoken criticism of his country's political leadership resulted in his being imprisoned. No news has been recieved from him for some time. Officially he is still being held in prison, though there are rumors that he is no longer alive.

The film, performed by African actors, is open to the public free of charge.

New Hampshire Seeks Conference Title Here Saturday

After Five Year Draught Wildcats Hungry With Walsh and Shaughnessy Leading Attack

New Hampshire, with only a win needed to cinch at least a tie for the Yankee Conference Title, arrives in town this Saturday. The Wildcats, who won the title outright in 1962, will finish first this year if they can get by the Redmen and Rhode Island upsets Connecticut.

Wildcat Head Coach Jim Root, following in the footsteps of Joe Yukica, has built a spirited ball club which has enthused the whole Durham campus. New Hampshire has only lossed to Dartmouth at Hanover in the season opener and to Vermont at Burlington in a stunning last minute upset.

UNH made the mistake of taking victory for granted at Burlington, but there's no chance of them being over confident against UMass. The Redmen have beaten the Wildcats for five straight years now, although the last two games have been sqeakers.

Saturday there is no doubt that the boy's from Durham will be giving it 100% to beat the perennial Big Brother of the conference. They may go down to defeat but there are not too many shrewd observers who will bet on that happening.

Ed Walsh a 5' 10", 170 pound

Senior from South Boston High, is the Wildcat leader. Walsh isn't a flashy quarterback, but he has completed 61% of his passes, mostly from run-pass options. When he decides to run he does alright, too. So far this season, he's picked up 286 yards on the ground.

Fullback Mike Shaughnessy is New Hampshire's top ground gainer. His 591 yards in 121 carries puts him third behind Connecticut's Vin Clements and Maine's Bob Hamilton. All three boys are Sophomores which isn't good for UMass fans.

Shaughnessy and Walsh are joined in the Wildcat backfield by halfbacks Bill Phillips and Bob Rudolph. Phillips was all Yankee Conference last season, but this year has been hampered by injuries.

Walsh's top receivers are ends Bob Robichaud and Cal Wallingford. Both are adept at blocking then sliding into the flat.

The offensive line which carries the burden of UNH's off-tackle offense is made up of tackles Cliff McDonald and John Koshko, guards Charles Lepisto and Bill Smagulo and center Dan Drewniak. McDonald, a 6' 2" 205 pound Sophomore, was cited as the Yankee Conference Sophomore of the Week for his outstanding blocking against Springfield last Saturday.

Defensively, the Wildcats are small but experienced. Captain Vince Martino, a hard nosed defensive tackle is their best player. Greg Kolinsky, Al Witteman, and Bret Bernier are the others in the front four.

Linebackers Harry Koulouherss and Jim Ramsey, and middle guard Ed Savage are the keys to the UNH defense. They move around a lot and have been known to throw an occasional blitz.

Chip Carey, Rent Regis, Roger Weibusch, and Kurt Vollherbst make up the Wildcat defensive backfield.

Vollherbst is also the New Hampshire place kicker, perhaps the best in the conference

EASY ED---UNH Quarterback Ed Walsh, 17, carries ball against UMass last year at Durham. He should provide the Redmen with plenty of opposition this Saturday.

Wayne Finishes Second in x Country Meet

Ron Wayne, UMass' top harrier who placed second in the New England championship Monday, thought that's where he would be at the race's end.

"I thought I'd get second," said Wayne, "Actually, I didn't have a race plan, I wanted to stay up with the leaders and as soon as I felt good I wanted to go but I couldn't because I was sick so I hung on to McColl (of UConn who placed third) and put all out with a half mile to go, to beat him."

Despite being sick, Wayne ran the 4.7 mile course in 22:25 and was bested only by a record breaking performance by Art Dulong of Holy Cross. "I am pleased with my time," the UMass soph said, "I figured I could run 22:20 but 22:25 was good because I was sick."

The turning point of the season for Wayne was the Northeastern duel meet in early October. "After Paul Hoss was hurt I decided to be a front runner, not to hold back in the pack; that win gave me confidence." He has been a front runner ever since.

Wayne attributes much of his success to his coach, Ken O'Brien The confidence was gained by the preparation by the coach," continued Wayne, "He gave us good workouts. I tried to do everything the coach has said." Wayne added that the atmosphere on the team helps his running. "Everyone likes to run, you can run with anybody on the team. You have to want to do something bad enough like getting up at 6:30 in the morning to run while everyone is sleeping," concluded the hard working runner.

Wayne was also the Yankee Conference champ this year as he ran away from the pack after the first mile of the race. When asked if he had a strategy for the conference meet, especially against U-Conn's John Vitale who had beaten him once during the year, Wayne answered, "I don't make out definite strategy before the race I make strategy when I see how things are shaping up. I just ran and didn't worry about anybody in the conference. After about 3/4 of a mile when I just saw Connecticut with me I just broke away hoping to break them up and no one caught me."

The UMass harrier is looking forward to New York's two big meets, the IC4A's on Nov. 18, and the NCAA on Nov. 25. It's good experience. Being inexperienced on the varsity I want to do well, I have a good chance to place in the top 15. My goal is the top ten. There's no pressure because I'm not well known." He feels the team will do better as a unit in New York because Tom Derderian who was ill last Monday should have recovered by next week.

Wayne is looking forward to a good winter season in the mile and two mile but he is now concentrating on running well Monday and qualifying for the NCAA's (top 50 qualify).

The cross-country team goes against New Hampshire in their last duel meet of the season tomorrow at home. Wayne said that if the race is not canceled due to bad conditions, he doesn't feel UMass should have much trouble with UNH. "We have beaten them twice this season already (Yan-Con and New Eng.). We should get our top five in front of their second man." The top UNH runner is Ev Dunklee who placed 7th in the conference and 20th in the New Englands.

RECORD SETTER WITH RUNNERS UP--Art Dulong, center, of Holy Cross, who set record of 21 minutes, 48 seconds in the New England Intercollegiate Cross Country race at Franklin Park in Boston, Cats orange with runnerup Craig McColl, left, 3rd place winner, from the University of Connecticut, and Ronald Wayne of the University of Massachusetts, who finished second.

Yale Again Leads NE Football Poll

(AP) Yale and Harvard continue to dominate the Associated Press weekly New England college football poll as they roll on unbeaten toward their showdown clash Nov. 23 in Cambridge. The Elis, 7-0 this season and boasting the nation's longest major college winning streak of 15 games, were a near-unanimous choice once again in this week's balloting among sports writers and sportscasters in the six-state region. They got 17 of the 18 first place votes and were named second on the other ballot for 179 points.

The Crimson, also 7-0, got the lone dissenting first place vote and all 17 other second place selections for a solid second with 163 points.

Boston College got the majority of third place votes-11-but the Eagles were left off one ballot altogether and that hurt as Boston University slipped past them into third place. The Terriers, who got only six third place votes but more support the rest of the way, wound up with 128 points to BC's 127

Card's Ace Gibson NL MVP

MATSUYAMA, Japan AP - When Bob Gibson, the St. Louis Cardinal pitching ace, learned Wednesday he had added the National League Most Valuable Player Award to the Cy Young Award he was stunned.

"You're kidding," was Gibson's first reaction. Then he added "It's great. It's just great, because pitchers don't usually win MVP awards. I've got to thank everyone on the team. The whole team helped me have a good year."

Orland Cepeda, the 1967 winner who did not get a single vote this time, was among the first to congratulate the 33-year-old right-hander who set a league record with a 1.12 earned run average while compiling a 22-9 record.

Gibson, Cepeda and the other Cardinals were in this city on Shikoku, the smallest Japanese main island 4 miles southwest of Tokyo, for another step on their 18-game good will exhibition tour.

Gibson's sweep of National League honors matched Denny McLain's success in the American League where the 31-game winner from Detroit also took both the MVP and Cy Young awards. McLain won both unanimously and Gibson got all the votes for the Cy Young Award, limited to pitchers. He received 14 firsts in the MVP competition to six for outfielder Pete Rose of Cincinnati. Until this year only Don Newcombe in 1956 and Sandy Koufax in 1963, both Dodgers, had won both the MVP and Cy Young.

Gibson's sensational year included one stretch of 15 straight victories. He also pitched 13 shutouts and completed 28 of 34 starts while erasing Grover Cleveland Alexander's earned run mark of 1.22 set in 1915 with the Philadelphia Phillies.

The voting was done by a 2-man committee of baseball writers, two from each league city, and points were distributed on the basis of 14 for first, nine for second, etc., down to one for 10th.

Rose, who nosed out Matty Alou of Pittsburgh for the batting title, .335 to .332 by going 7-for-15 in his last three games, was no lower than fourth on any ballet. Gibson got one seventh. In points, Gibson had a 242-25 edge over Rose with Willie McCovey, San Francisco's slugging first baseman, at 135, and Curt Flood, the Cardinals' fleet center fielder, at 116.

Hill Assaults Prompt Student Mobilization

By ANN GARDING
Staff Reporter

Student Security patrols, an escort service, and temporary new lighting facilities have resulted from student concern for the safety of women on the Hill. Three reported assaults and many unreported incidents on girls walking in the Hill area at night served as the catlyst for the growing interest of UMass students in remeding this problem. is to act as a deterrent" and not "as a vigilante force." Sheehan plans that the force will be in action until Christmas, as few attempts are reported during the winter months. The patrols will always be moving and will be on the paths in order to be easily distinguishable from attackers.

Staff Sheehan, senator from Gorman, told the MDC, "Many misconceptions have arisen because facts about situations have been ambiguous.

Not all attacks on girls are sexual. Only one sexual assault has been reported to date, most of the incidents have concerned physical assaults. Sargeant Cavanaugh of the UMass police dept. termed this problem a perennial one, with no easy solutions.

Because the number of attacks were rising with three being reported to the police in one week, measures have been taken to increase the protection for female students.

The reasons for the assaults, explained Sheehan, include inadequate lighting which has been the major contributor to the attacks. "In some places the lighting is non-existent." At present, security consists of a cruiser patrolling the "danger areas". On their patrols, campus security patrolmen can't leave their dormitory beats and therefor are ineffective.

The most dangerous spots on campus according to Sheehan are the walk from the North Commons up to Orchard Hill, President's drive, Curry Hicks Cage and the tunnel leading to the Southwest complex.

The first action to be taken was by Gorman Staff Sheehan and Susan Bacon who visited the house and presented the immediacy of the problem. The following steps were decided upon.

There would be a patrol of the problem areas from 7 p.m. to 1 a.m. The patrols would work in pairs. "Their main purpose

Lederle, Students See Progress Demands To Be Clarified, Monday

BY JAN CURLEY
Assistant Managing Editor

Emerging from his second three-and-a-half hour meeting in two days with the Afro-American Organization yesterday afternoon, President John W. Lederle said, "The conference was profitable and both sides are learning. Monday we will issue a detailed summary of the demands."

President Lederle said the group had discussed two main issues in their meeting. The first demand talked about was that Chief Alexander P. Blaske and Officer Peter W. Sienkiewicz be fired. The third name which originally appeared on the list, Lt. Daniel Schwartz, was removed by the black leaders and an apology was made to him by them.

"At this time no formal charges had been filed against either officer," Lederle said. The University has certain legal proceedings to go through in this event. He said, "We will accept the charges, if they are made, and go through the procedures."

Afro-American leader, Robert Henderson said, "No comment," when asked by reporters if charges would be pressed.

The ninth demand, regarding black students flunking out at the end of the semester, was also clarified. President Lederle said that the demand included all freshmen at the University. In some instances, a student's failing was not due to the individual but caused by "circumstances," he said. He went on to say that freshmen are given sympathetic treatment and special arrangements are made if they do flunk out.

During the past week the President said he has been receiving more letters than usual from people concerned about the Collegiate Committee for the Education of Negro Students (CCENS) program. He said, "These students are qualified for a University education, but they may have been handicapped in high school."

"I believe the group is highly qualified and should come here to benefit from the peoples' University," he said, "and they will be a credit to the state."

Henderson said that there was a misunderstanding of this demand that "no CCENS student should flunk out." "We don't want the faculty to modify their grades," he said. He urged that they "bear in mind a longer period of adjustment may be needed by these students because most come from inadequate educational institutions."

President Lederle said that as a rule professors "are somewhat easier on first year students and this is only normal." He went on to say, "In the end, as our black friends have been telling us, they will cut the mustard."

Henderson stressed, "We don't want a dual grading system after this period of adjustment. "After this adjustment period is over, the black students will meet the standards of the other students", he said. He declined to specify the length of the adjustment period.

Asked to comment on the Student Senate's action Wednesday night in which they voted to disarm the campus police and then to reconsider the action next week, Henderson said, "It was a well thought out decision."

President Lederle said the administration had not thought that far aheadand "we will study the matter to determine what will be the best way to handle the situation at the University."

He went on to say that if it becomes a "big enough issue, the Board of Trustees may hear about it. But if a good case is presented, it could be handled administratively."

Lederle clarified the issue that this recommendation of the Student Senate was not for total disarmament and that in some instances, the police would carry their guns, such as to transport large sums of money. The guns will be kept in the police cruisers, and the action was essentially to get the guns off the hips of the police officers.

President Lederle said he did not foresee any Cage meeting. He said they would rely on written prose and the dialogue between students, "which is all part of a good education." If a Cage meeting is necessary such as the one last winter which grew out of the Dow demonstration, he said, "I will go through with it."

There will be no further action until next Monday when the President will meet with the group again at 1:30 p.m. and a document will be issued on the demands.

Farm Federation Urges UMass To Save NASA Sight For Farm

By JOHN HICKEY
News Editor

On Wednesday, delegates to the convocation of the Massachusetts Farm Bureau Federation urged UMass not to locate a NASA-sponsored research project on university-owned land on South Deerfield. The land was originally purchased as the relocation site for the UMass School of Agriculture farm.

The Farm Bureau Federation objected to the diversion of any portion of this land, which they termed "some of the finest farm land in the Connecticut Valley," to any use other than for the UMass farm.

The land in question is a 350-acre tract owned for two years by the University. An appropriation for its purchase was made initially by the General Court in 1962. Recently funds have been appropriated for the first building for the School of Agriculture and bids will be taken [illegible] bear Tess Spielman of the School of Agriculture said that the school is proceeding with its plans for relocating the farm in South Deerfield.

Dr. Kenneth G. Picha, dean of the School of Engineering, explained that the School of Engineering is currently working in several fields with the support of a NASA research contract. Studies are being done with plasma, speech and sound, and sound propagation.

The work in sound propagation requires equipment located in an environment shielded from radio and television waves. Dr. Picha said that this equipment could conceivably be located in Hadley, in South Deerfield, or even on the roof of one of the present campus buildings. The location will be decided on the scientific merit of the sites.

If equipment is located in South Deerfield, it won't occupy about a twenty-foot square area of flat-plate arrays, equipment described by Dean Picha as similar to rabbit ears used for television reception. The instruments would be used in studies concerning communications between satellites and space vehicles and ground stations.

UMass Director of Planning Jackson Littlefield pointed out that the land parcel is a third the size of the UMass campus. "There certainly would be room for both," Littlefield commented. Both Littlefield and Picha stressed that the location of the project equipment is an internal university matter and is being solved within the usual channels. The possibility of locating engineering equipment on the South Deerfield land apparently presents no real problem for those immediately concerned.

Moral Objection To Viet War Weighed In SBA Mock Trial

BY JOYCE VAN HALL
Staff Reporter

A mock trial was presented in SBA 120 Wednesday night by the BU Law School National Moot Court Team involving the case of a conscientious objector.

The simulated Supreme Court trial focused on the petition of an army private to be released from assignment to Viet Nam. The plea was made on religious grounds. During the course of the case the whole legality of the was was questioned. Normal appeal procedure was followed, with no witnesses or jury, and the focus was on the legal subject built by both sides. There was extensive cross-examination of the lawyers by all three judges.

The case of the defendant, George Ivan Joseph, was basically that before induction, Joseph had applied for classification as a conscientious objector; this request was denied. He was assigned to duty in Vietnam after completing basic training and then requested assignment to another military unit. This, too, was denied. After having resorted to all "pre-induction and military remedies", Joseph refused to report to his assigned duty station and filed suit against the United States. A court-martial was convened but post-poned until after decision on the suit.

The case rested on six major points: 1) Did the petitioner have standing (immediate cause) to sue? 2) Did the political question doctrine bar the Court from granting the relief requested? 3) Could the Executive order petitioner to report to Vietnam? 4) Was the conflict in Vietnam a "war" within the meaning of the Constitution? 5) If the United States was waging an "aggressive war" in Vietnam, in violation of the Treaty of London, could the petitioner rely on the Nuremberg Principles? and 6) Did the free exercise of religion clause of the First Amendment require that conscientious objectors to a particular war be released from participation in that war?

Michael Faden, Harold Goodman, and William Macaw ydeveloped the case for the petioner. Their arguments were weighted against those of their teammates on the side of the respondant, the United States.

After hearing the case, the three judges retired for a period of five minutes. They then returned to the court room and declared that it was not their duty to decide the case as it would actually be decided in their opinion in court, but rather it was their task tochoose the best speaker of the evening and best oral argument made by a team. Harold Goodman, for the petitioner, was named best speaker. The attorneys for the government were declared the best team.

The lawyers for the petitioner said in a DAILY COLLEGIAN interview that they felt their weakest argument to be the fact that the petitioner did not run an outright risk of losing $10,000 (a requirement for a case to be heard in the Supreme Court). They alleged that the petitioner stood the risk of deprivation of liberty, and that that was worth $10,000.

The student attorneys for the government felt that their strongest argument lay in the fact that the courts are not really supposed to be involved in policy decisions.

U.S. Action Against Soviets Urged in Fac. Senate Meeting

The fifth meeting of the Graduate Student Senate will be held Monday night Nov. 18 at 8:30 p.m. in the Commonwealth Room of the Student Union.

Old business on the GSS agenda includes the proposal to support a letter campaign to encourage the United States government to make stronger moves against the Russian in occupation of Czechoslovakia, proposals to support the development of the University of Massachusetts Federal Credit Union, the topic of the cut in National Science Foundation funds earmarked for the University, and a discussion of the pass-fail grading system.

This business was held over from the last Senate meeting when it failed to draw a quorum.

Announced new business includes the nomination of a GSS representative to the subboard for the Distinguished Teachers Award of the University Affairs Committee.

President Thomas Minogue has announced that he also expects that a resolution regarding the recent incidents involving the university's black community will be introduced. Minogue has also announced that he will call on Sen. James Thompson of the government department to report on discussions concerning graduate student representation on some committees of the Faculty Senate.

Also on the agenda are committee reports and announcements.

Frosh Curfew Questioned By Scrolls

For the past four weeks, the Scrolls have been circulating rationales for the female student opinion about abolishing second semester curfew. Tonight, these petitions were handed over to Staff Sheehan, Senator from Gorman, for an analysis before being submitted to the Student Affairs subcommittee on freshmen women's curfews.

This joint student-faculty committee reviews most University policy change proposals before presentation to the Board of Trustees.

Another event, associated with the movement to abolish the second semester freshmen women's curfews, was a Senate bill proposed by Vice President Hartwell at the 6:30 Executive Committee meeting. This measure requested that house judiciaries be more lenient toward those females not complying with the curfew next semester. The bill was committed to the S.G.A. Committee for study.

Nato Pact Meeting Sees Defence Realignment

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) - The United States led the North Atlantic Treaty Organization Thursday toward a power buildup to meet any new Soviet thrusts in Europe, suggesting the allies prepare a response "modest enough, to show restraint, yet vigorous enough to demonstrate concern."

At the same time, a NATO nuclear defense committee accepted a U.S. report proposing the use of "demonstrative" nuclear explosions to warn aggressors. The idea would be for the allies to fire nuclear weapons in their own territory, under tight control, without damaging anything.

Secretary of State Dean Rusk and Defense Secretary Clark M. Clifford initiated a double-purpose joint exercise in the first of three days of meetings here of NATO's defense, foreign and finance ministers.

The U.S. Cabinet officers sought to organize a collective allied response to the Soviet invasion of Czechoslovakia and to prepare for any further Russian advances deeper into Europe.

They also reassured the 14 other NATO nations that President-elect Richard M. Nixon's administration will align U.S. power with Europe just as its predecessors had done.

"There are no party divisions at home over U.S policy in respect to NATO," Rusk said. "Our commitment to Europe has not depended, does not and will not depend on which political party is in office in Washington."

Rusk called the Soviet move into Czechoslovakia last August "a brutal act" and said it flowed from "a strange doctrine" in the Kremlin which gives the Soviet Union the claimed right to intervene in the affairs of fellow Socialist states.

The secretary added that the invasion casts "serious doubts" on the restraint of Soviet leaders. In turn, he said, these doubts spawn new fears, anxieties and tensions throughout Western Europe.

"The situation is worse today than it was the last time we met in the North Atlantic Council," Rusk asserted. That was in Reykjavik, Iceland, last June.

Rusk called on his colleagues to avoid pointless debate about the nature of the Soviet threat in its latest form-instead to recognize that things are tougher now than before.

A majority of the allied ministers, meeting as the Defense Planning Committee of NATO, undertook to beef up their national force contributions to counter the strategic gains made when Russia advanced into Czechoslovakia. They did so after hearing some plain talk suggesting the Americans feel they have been carrying an unduly large share of the NATO defense lead.

As usual, France stayed out of all military discussions, in line with President Charles de Gaulle's withdrawal from NATO's military system. On the sidelines of the talks in NATO's new headquarters in a Brussels suburb, a whole series of bilateral and group discussion was taking place.

The work began with a meeting of the 12-nation Nuclear Defense Affairs Committee of the Alliance to consider several reports on nuclear strategy and tactics.

Night of Awareness Keys Student Interest in Life

Juan Gonzales, a leader of the Columbia Student Protest last year, will participate in an experimental teach-in tonight in North Dining Commons.

At 8 p.m. the Martin Luther King Jr. Social Action Council will present "Student Power: A Night of Inquiry." The purpose of the teach-in is to examine the resources and channels open to students to effect changes in the policies of the administration. Participants will be concerned with finding ways to "humanize" the institution.

Speakers from the administration will include the Assistant Dean of Students Mark Nofssinger, Special Assistant to the Provost Dallas Darland, Dean Wagner, John Childs and Jim Collins, assistant Northeast area coordinator.

Speakers for the faculty will include Al Winder from the School of Nursing, members of the Faculty Senate, and other faculty committees concerned with student-faculty relationships.

The student speakers will include the class presidents, Wayne Thomas, Steve Weissmann, Joe Tobacco, and Ernie Lepore; Pres. Paul Silverman and members of the Student Senate; members of the Student Union Government board; and other student government groups.

There will also be representatives from campus political and social groups. Bob Henderson, William Smith, and Didi Eastman will represent the Afro-Am. Society, Gil Salk and Ron Hardy of MLK will be present and members of SDS will also participate. Also present will be Elaine D'Amico, President of Panhellenic and Mike Driscoll, president of IFC. Jack Dean, Editor of MDC, Dan Weir of WMUA and Bart Kaplan, editor of Mother of Voices will also be in the program.

Entertainment will highlight the first part of the evening, from 8 to 10. The Petroleum Jelly Jug Band, Pete Ward, Rick Feldman and several other groups will perform. Also featured will be a light show.

At 10 the teach-in will begin, with various speakers and panels and student power will be discussed in all of its aspects. Campus groups will explain their policies with regard to University life.

Specific questions to be discussed are: Who runs the Student Union? How does Afro-Am intend to relate the Black freshmen to the University? What role does WMUA and the Daily Collegian play. Where does the administration stand in respect to student demands?

NY Teachers Strike Snarls Traffic; No End in Sight

NEW YORK (AP) - An estimateo 2,000 demonstrators blocked traffic on busy Fifth Avenue Thursday, in loud support of striking teachers who have tied up the city's 1.1-million-pupil public school system for 33 classroom days.

The city's smartest thoroughfare was blocked for more than an hour. With the heavy traffic diverted, it took some two hours to bring the midtown Manhattan area back to a semblance of normal.

The street rally spread from the West 55th Street offices of Republican Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller, where the demonstrators demanded that he call a special session of the state legislature to deal with the school crisis. The governor is vacationing in Portugal.

Peace talks in the strike of 55,000 members of the AFL-CIO United Federation of Teachers —UFA-remained on the agenda at Gracie Mansion, residence of Mayor John V. Lindsay.

In Albany, also, a joint legislative committee on the education law sought some solution of its own for the deadlock.

The result of the Albany meeting was formation of a six-member fact-finding panel to interview the main figures in the school strike. It is to report back to the full committee next week.

The predominantly white UFT struck the city's 900 public schools originally in a demand for the reinstatement of 79 union members ousted from the Negro and Puerto Rican Ocean Hill-Brownsville experimentally decentralized school district in Brooklyn.

The racially bitter issue of decentralization of local schools since has become a roadblock to settlement of the walkout.

Schools Announce New Approach To Medical Education

BY SUE SPATICK
Staff Reporter

Major changes are about to occur in the teaching methods of American medical schools, according to a study sponsored by the Association of American Medical Colleges. The recommendations were endorsed by the association Tuesday at its annual meeting in Houston.

Some of the major points of the study are:

-Medical schools must increase their output of physicians.

-Increased numbers of students should be admitted from geographical areas and from economic and ethnic groups inadequately represented today.

The medical student's training must be individualized to fit varied rates of achievement, educational backgrounds and career goals.

Medical school curriculums should be developed by interdepartmental groups that include students.

The medical schools must now assume a responsibility for education and research in the organization and delivery of health services.

There is some disagreement among experts on the matter of actually how deep these changes really are. Do they represent merely a reshuffling of old ideas or will they really bring sweeping changes to medical education?

Dr. Robert Benson executive director of the association takes a positive viewpoint.

"It is my own opinion that quite a lot of change has taken place and there's more right around the corner," he said recently during an interview at his office in Washington.

Today, more people are demanding more and better medical care than ever before. Costs are rising rapidly. The charity clinic patient is growing more and more unhappy with his status and many of his doctors are, too. Shortages loom in the ranks of every type of health professional.

Meanwhile medical science is in the midst of a vast, restless flowering of knowledge unequaled in all past history.

Medica l schools today have to train doctors who will be able to cope with all the unforeseeable changes ahead. The educators face internal pressures from a crop of students who appear to be brighter, more socially conscious and more restive than students of past generations.

"They have a very sharply critical attitude toward the profession," said a professor at one of the nation's great medical schools on the West Coast. "They are relentless in their attack on us."

The association's survey showed that 20 American medical schools are already using new curriculas drafted with future trends in mind, at 67 others, similar changes are being planned.

Among the changes most noticeable to date is an earlier contact between medical student and medical patient.

In the traditional four-year medical school course, the first two years called the pre-clinical years - are spent digesting facts, methods and theories. As medical science has blossomed since World War II, almost every department in almost every school had added more facts, but has seldom dropped anything.

During the first half of the program, there is virtually no direct confrontation with sick people or any responsibility for their treatment. Not until the clinical years-the third and fourth in the traditional course - does the student begin to have any responsibility for patients and to apply his heavy load of science to their problems.

This arrangement has been widely criticized on several grounds. For example, the sequence forces the student to learn a mass of disembodied facts without applying them to his needs as a doctor.

Some educators also believe the long deferment of the students' basic objective-to help sick people tends to erode the idealism with which most medical students enter training. Critics have called the two main divisions of the medical school course the "cynical and pre-cynical years."

The survey by the medical school association showed that almost all schools today give their students some contact with patients before the final two years. Most introduce the student to the patient in the first year. There is great variation s in the way and the degree to which this is done.

At the new Pennsylvania State University College of Medicine, which welcomed its second class only about a month ago, contact between student and patient often comes within the first week.

The core of the system is a panel of 1,500 local families cared for by four medical school faculty members in a partnership practice.

"Within the first several weeks of school we take each student out to the home of a family assigned to him," said Dr. Thomas L. Leaman, chairman of the Department of Family and Community Medicine at the college.

The families are chosen carefully by the doctors to give the medical student contact with some educationally useful health problems - diabetes, for example, or leukemia. The families agree in advance to take part in this project in medical education.

UConn Violence Avoided By President's Message

STORRS, Conn. (AP) - The atmosphere of protest at the University of Connecticut threatened to boil over into another confrontation early Thursday before the university president calmed demonstrators during a three hour question-answer session.

A group of demonstrators had forced the doors of a locked administration building, and some members of the group talked of seizing the building Wednesday night, before University President Homer Babbidge Jr. met with the protestors shortly after midnight.

Two days earlier the protestors occupied another administration building where Babbidge has his office. They stayed for 27 hours and barricaded the front door.

Early Thursday Babbidge fielded angry questions dealing with the university's policy on letting outside corporations and government agencies hold job recruiting sessions on campus.

High among the protest issues is the university decision to proceed with disciplinary hearings in the case of 12 students and faculty members who took part in an Oct. 3 protest which interrupted a job interview being held by a Dow Chemical Co., recruiter.

When Babbidge met early Thursday with about 600 persons, including some who back the administration policy, he told them to wait for decisions by faculty and student conduct committees. He said the protestors' demand for amnesty for the 12 demonstrators would not be granted.

"Some of you are asking me to sell proven processes down the river, " Babbidge said, "I'm not going to do it."

Babbidge explained that he called in the state police Tuesday morning, to deal with the takeover of Gulley Hall, when the university's normal operations were affected.

State Police Commissioner Leo Mulcahy's appearance at the door of Gulley Hall to warn that the group of about 200 protestors was about to be arrested was followed by an orderly exodus from the building.

Dwight Ends Dorm Gov't With "System of Trust"

By ED SLOAN
Staff Reporter

From the outside it looks like any other red brick, homestyle, traditional girl dormitory in the Quad. However, Dwight House differs quite a bit from most UMass dorms on the inside. This dormitory considers itself a "community," as one Dwight House resident put it.

About two weeks ago, Dwight's girls called a meeting and decided to change the basic nature of their dorm's government. They "re-sented" the old concept of government by a system whereby true authority rests in the hands of a small group. It was this very small percentage of residents who controlled all the goings-on and the judiciary which cast the decisions which affected the whole dorm, the dissenters claimed.

It was decided by a majority of residents that Dwight should dissolve authority by this "elite" and transform itself into a community run by all its residents. In this community everything would revolve around individual responsibility, governed only by an honor system. There would no longer be punitive measures taken against a girl by the judiciary if she failed to meet the curfew deadline.

Dwight House now is run mainly on the principle of trust, individual responsibility and concern for one another. But other dorms have criticized the "Dwight experiment" as being too extreme and idealistic. It appears to some as being anarchistic. However, Dwight's girls deny this charge.

They say that what they are doing is not self-government at all, (the term government suggests a bad connotation) but a system that works.

Boston Teachers Threaten Strike Over MLK School Disorders

BOSTON AP - Boston School Teachers are considering a strike unless the School Committee resolves the disciplines situation at the Martin Luther King School, closed for the second time in two weeks because of student rampaging.

Louis Vangel, executive secretary of the Boston Teachers Union said that 500 teachers had voted to authorize the union to call an emergency meeting at any time. He said this would force closing of all schools.

The school was closed early last week when the black principal, John Joyce, resigned saying he couldn't maintain order.

The school reopened Tuesday, but was closed the next day when rebellious black students set fires in wastebaskets and strewed books.

The building of a cabinet, President-elect Nixon's chief pre-New Year chore, several political observers feel, will illustrate Nixon's ability to attract people whose political beliefs lie to the left of his own. This, they reason, may well illustrate the success which the new president will have in uniting the nation.

Mentioned as possible cabinet members are N.Y. Governor Nelson Rockefeller, Defense, Former Penn Governor William Scranton, States, and roving diplomat McGeorge Bundy, United Nations.

Yale To Go Co-Ed Next Year, Female Class To Be Half Frosh

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP) - After years of discussion, Yale College decided Thursday to become coeducational starting in September 1969.

The college faculty gave final approval for admission of 500 women as undergraduates at Yale next fall.

The proposal was presented to the faculty by Yale President Kingman Brewster Jr. It had been approved Saturday by the Yale Corporation, the university's governing board of trustees.

Half the 500 young women are to be admitted next fall as freshmen under the plan, and the other 250 are to be admitted to the upper classes as transfer students.

The freshmen girls will live together in one of the residential colleges now occupied by men, while the upperclass women will live in homes and apartments near the campus, a university spokesman said.

According to the spokesman, Yale hopes eventually to admit some 1,500 women undergraduates.

But this, he said, would require new facilities, programs and personnel and a minimum increase of $55 million in the present endowment.

Approval of coeducation at Yale came less than a week after the end of a student-organized, week-long experiment in coeducation.

"Coed Week," as the experiment was known brought more than 700 young women to Yale from colleges throughout the northeast. While on the campus they attended classes and lectures with Yale students.

Vassar College was invited to study the possibility of affiliating with Yale, but the Vassar trustees rejected abandoning their Poughkeepsie, N.Y., campus.

Yale now has about 8,000 students, including graduate and professional students. Some of the graduate students are women.

The faculty first registered its official approval of undergraduate coeducation at Yale in April 1962. In March 1966, the Corporation considered the establishment of an independent coordinate college for women.

Schirra Claims U.S. Lead In Space Exploration

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) - The United States, far from trailing the Russians in the space race, is capable of landing two men on the moon and using the knowledge it gleans from the feat to conquer new objectives, the Apollo 7 astronauts said Thursday.

Navy Capt. Walter M. Schirra Jr., who commanded the Apollo 7 flight, and his fellow astronauts, Air Force Lt. Col. Donn F. Eisele and civilian Walter B. Cunningham, said the United States is ahead in the race for the moon and must continue to stay ahead.

Speaking to more than 50 newspaper executives attending the annual Associated Press Managing Editors Association Convention here, Schirra said American citizens-and the news medi-must realize that the Americans and Russians have different objectives in space.

He likened the Russian orbit of the moon "from 1,000 miles away" as a modern day example of "the cow jumping over the moon."

"This country intends to land two men on the moon and bring them back," he said.

"We can do it and we don't intend to just jumpover the moon."

Asked what would follow a successful moon landing, Schirra said, "You develop a means of transportation and then you use it. We've developed a means of transportation. It's damned expensive, but someday it will be useful.

"We can explore areas of the earth that have never been seen before," he said, adding that "large operating space stations" also can be a reality soon.

He said the weightlessness of space opens up countless possibilities in conquering problems and hastening scientific development.

As examples, he cited the possibility of mixing aluminum and lead into an alloy or making lenses without grinding.

"This can't be done on earth," he said. "There are many things we can do in earth orbit, I believe, that will benefit us."

Schirra, during a news conference, also said the possibility of moon tours for civilians "is not out of the question. We're approaching it faster than I would have predicted."

APHA Elects New Head

Negro Named Health Office Prexy

By GENE SCHROEDER
Associated Press Writer

DETROIT (AP) - The first Negro to be named president-elect of the American Public Health Association (APHA) says he will work to reduce the health gap between white and black cittzens.

Dr. Paul Cornely, who will take office a year from now, said in an interview Thursday he also hopes to see a national health policy adopted.

"Ours is one of the few countries in the world that does not have a national health policy," he said. "We hope to help formulate one." Cornely was elected at the APHA's 96th annual meeting in Detroit.

Discussing the health gap between white and black Americans, Corneiy said the infant mortality rate among Negro children is about twice that for white infants, and black males have the lowest longevity of any group in the nation.

The 62-year-old physician, longtime leader in public health efforts, said he is concerned about the health of other minority groups as well-American Indians, Puerto Ricans, Spanish'Americans, and poor whites.

But the task involves more than just the problem of public health, Cornely asserted, asking:

"What is the use of teaching someone about health care and then sending him back to a slum area with no job, with no adequate food and into a housing situation which is lousy. We have to look at both personal health care and environmental health-care." The problems of the black and the poor are important, he said, but all human beings are of concern to the association.

Cornely, currently in charge of the Howard University Department of Preventive Medicine and Public Health, will be the first black physician to head any public health or medical organization, except for the predominantly Negro National Medical Association.

Spanish Club Lists Activities; Summer Seminar Planned

This year, under the leadership of Mrs. Nina Galvin, the Spanish Club is sponsoring many activities. The next formal meeting will be held in the Emerson House lounge on Wednesday, November 20, at 7:00. A group of students who participated in the Romance Language Department's 1968 Summer Seminar will show slides and discuss their experiences in Spain last summer.

The Seminar is open to all qualified students who have taken at least three years of college Spanish. There is an opportunity to earn 6 semester credits in seminars and courses in literature and history and an art course to be taught at the Prado Museum.

The Seminar this coming summer will be held from June 19 to August 4. The application deadline is February 1, 1969. Further information may be obtained from the program director, Miss Blanche DePuy in Bartlett 283, 5-2887.

As a direct result of the interest generated by the Spanish club last year, a Spanish corridor is now in existence in Emerson House. A small, but enthusiastic group of girls have been taking part in this expanding program. Each Monday and Thursday the club sponsors a Spanish table at South dining commons from 11:00 to 1:00. No special proficiency in Spanish is necessary; many just come to listen. Tuesdays an informal meeting is held in the Date Room of Emerson House from 3:00 to 5:00.

Following this, there is a Spanish Dinner Table held in the dining commons from 5:00 to 6:00.

On Thursdays, from 3:30 to 4:30 students may drop into the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union for informal conversation and refreshment.

The club also sponsors a series of Spanish meals. The girls are learning to prepare the native dishes from various Latin American countries. Other activites include the annual Christmas party complete with pinata and Spanish carols; and serving refreshments in conjunction with the Spanish guest lecturer series.

School of Education Offers New Courses

A listing of next semester's course offerings at The School of Education, many of them new and unique, are now available there at the secretary's office.

Since undergraduate courses will be offered on a first come, first served basis, students are urged to sign up for them now at the School's counseling center.

The self-initiated courses that have been organized by five or more students must be signed up for by Dec. 3.

Undergraduates should also remember that they are eligible to take graduate courses in education.

Any interested student, regardless of whether or not he is an education major, may feel free to interview any faculty member. The School of Education is eager to have its new and exciting ideas made known to as many people as possible.

Also: Any student who has ideas or suggestions that he feels do not fall into any of the 28 faculty committees (see a listing in School of Ed. lounge) may put them in the suggestion box, also in the lounge.

Geologist to Lecture At Amherst College

AMHERST, Mass - - Sheldon Judson, Knox Taylor Professor of Geology at Princeton University, will deliver a public lecture, "Geology and Classical Archeology," on Monday, November 18, at Amherst College. The address, one of the series sponsored by the Four-College Geology Departments, will be given in the Converse Assembly Room, beginning at 8 p.m.

A member of Princeton's faculty since 1955, Professor Judson graduated from that institution in 1940 and received his master's and doctoral degrees from Harvard. His studies in the area of "Sciences and Pre-History," the use of sciences and scientific methods in broadening man's knowledge of the dim past, have taken him to many parts of the world. He is co-author of the widely used textbook, PHYSICAL GEOLOGY, which is now in its third edition. He is also an associate editor of AMERICAN SCIENTIST magazine.

Tonight's The "Night"

WASHINGTON - Despite partial violations by Hanoi of its agreement to respect the demilitarized zone (DMZ), evidence now available from captured documents and other intelligence sources hints that Communist military deescalation may go much faster than seemed possible last spring after the limited bomb-halt took effect.

In fact, there are strong indications that the military reverses suffered by both North Vietnamese troops and the Communish Vietcong have pushed the enemy into a new phase of protracted warfare.

That puts Hanoi's goal of victory several years away instead of several months, and the realization of this is already having a severe morale effect on both the Vietcong military units in the South and on the Communist political structure in the countryside.

For example, in the southernmost part of South Vietnam, the oldest stronghold of the Communists, one battalion of Vietcong troops has recently been disbanded. The surprising explanation (made available to U.S. intelligence by a captured document): the war is going to be temporarily phased out; sell your property and "take a long trip."

Along the same lines, sons of Vietcong political agents are again being sent north to Hanoi for training. The implication: they won't be needed in the South for a long time.

The basic reason for this is the agreement between Hanoi and President Johnson to get down to serious negotiations in Paris. The word that Hanoi has agreed with Washington not to shell large cities and not to use the DMZ as a springboard for military attacks on the South (violated this week by 16 rounds fired out of the DMZ) means to the embattled Vietcong far in the south that Hanoi really does want a long breathing spell.

Whether the Vietcong now feels it is being sold out, even if only temporarily, or whether it understands that North Vietnam has no other choice, the inevitable result is a loss of morale.

Although the statistics gathered by overzealous U. S. officials in Vietnam have always been somewhat suspect, there is reason today to believe that this loss of morale accounts for the unprecedented numbers of Vietcong now claimed by the U. S. to be giving themselves up in the field. Last month, for example, 2,350 South Vietnamese under the control of the Communists voluntarily turned themselves in. In the same period, more than 1,000 political operatives within the Communist hamlet and village apparatus were either killed, captured, or gave themselves up.

These figures are the highest since the summer of 1967, but no one here will draw the obvious conclusion until Hanoi has proved it will live up to the spirit of its agreement with President Johnson. That means watching enemy infiltration of regular North Vietnamese army units down the Ho Chi Minh Trail to see how much, if any, increase there may be.

As of today, this infiltration rate (despite Richard Nixon's last-minute campaign charge) has not increased, and this is highly significant for the future. Without an immediate and substantial increase in infiltration, U. S. experts now estimate there can be no serious enemy offensive at the earliest until next spring.

Thus, the theory that the enemy wants to put the war in mothballs for a good long period looks better each day that goes by without large reinforcements moving from north to south. And each day that passes without this reinforcement is a further indication to the Vietcong in the South that Hanoi has in fact decided on a fairly swift deescalation, thus deepening morale problems for the local Communist cadres.

"He Really Shrinks On You, Doesn't He?"

SPECIAL REPORT:

Hanoi De-escalates

BY ROWLAND EVANS AND ROBERT NOVAK

On a campus of 16,000, students may easily become trapped in the mire of day-to-day existence, their sphere of contact touching solely on academics and the relief of weekend socializing. Too often they may lose sight of their purpose here, their responsibilities to community, university, and themselves.

But the blame cannot simply be placed on the students. In an institution the size of UMass, the individual often has trouble finding a constructive outlet for his energies.

How does one achieve the sense of personal satisfaction which comes from doing his own, however insignificant, thing to change the system? And more important, before one determines any worthwhile course of action, how does he gain a knowlege of that system in which he lives and of the openings which it provides for him?

Last spring's confrontation following the Dow Chemical demonstration evinced temporary hope of meaningful face-to-face contact between a group of students and an administration which they felt to be an estranged, disembodied entity lurking on the sinister upper floors of Whitmore Hall. Unfortunately, the resulting meeting in the Cage left much to be desired. The complaints treated had already been well publicized by the campus news media, and little was actually accomplished.

With all its limitations, however, the confrontation served some useful purpose: In the assemblage of faculty, administration and students we saw the day of closed-door sessions ushered out, and the advent of an era of open discussion. And no volume of editorials, letters, convocation speeches or private meetings can substitute for the large-scale interaction of mature minds defining and solving problems in a free exchange of ideas.

There is a great deal of understandable confusion concerning the role of the student in the university, as well as that of the university in a rapidly changing and increasingly complex world. The student reaches out, groping in search of a way to shape his living environment and make his voice heard in decision-making policies. A power elite may justifyably ignore an apathetic campus, but must be receptive to a student body that rationally airs its views and seeks judicious solutions through intelligent tripartite dissection of pertinent issues.

The University of Massachusetts will be as lethargic or responsive as the students wish to make it. "Night of Inquiry," grown out of the inadequacies of that confrontation last spring, is the King Council's attempt to relate students in an effective way to the system. The program has been set up to try and outline the problems, present various opinions, and discover what means there are to work for profitable change in all facets of academic, political and social involvement.

Activism need not be a dirty word. The door is open: walk through find out where you stand and what you can do to make hourself heard. In the wake of September's Day of Awareness and the past week's confrontation between the University's black community and the administration, we might be able to make this a Night of Decision. Tonight from 8 p.m. to 7 a.m. in the North Dining Commons, the questions will be set forth and diagnosed and the avenues open for individual action will be elucidated. The rest is up to us.

"Miles of Messages" Planned for Vietnam

An interesting project is being undertaken this Christmas season by a West Coast newspaper. The Daily Review of Hayward, California, is soliciting letters to send to American servicemen in Vietnam through it "Miles of Messages" campaign.

According to a committee spokesman, President Johnson has been asked to write a letter, along with each presidential candidate, every U.S. Senator, Congressman, and Governor, and innumerable other prominent personalities. The campaign is also aimed at private citizens, and is being carried out through newspapers, the national wire services, and television.

The goal, states committee co-chairman Jim Monk, is "a Christmas greeting six miles long, 29 inches wide, and weighing almost two tons." That's a lot of mail.

Whatever our feelings on the war may be, we must remember that those who are fighting in Vietnam are not necessarily there by choice. Hence it might be worth our while to send a short letter just to show that we do know what is happening.

Incongrous as it may seem, one of the best things we can do this Christmas is to send a message of peace to our soldiers in Vietnam. The address is: Miles of Messages to Vietnam, P.O. Box 4198, Hayward, California, 94544.

Campus Comment

A Matter of Taste

To the Editor:

The publication of Mr. Milinowsky's letter "Polish Ultimatum" disturbed me as a matter of taste on both his part and the Daily Collegian's. The letter in itself was amusing, but taken in context with the black student's recent demands, it shows one of the worst types of cynicism existing on campus.

Mr. Milinowsky doesn't seem to mind making a joke at the expense of other people's genuine concern. There is a vast difference between this innuendo form of humor and genuine satire. If satire was meant, Mr. Milinowsky should keep in mind that satire is constructive criticism where his letter was simply snarling.

Perhaps, though, this type of attitude is becoming vogue in a country which prefers "law and order" to moral justice, social conformity to social conscience.

John D. Morrison '69

A Movement For All

To the Editor:

In the letter entitled Polish Ultimatum, Moe Milinowsky wrote: "We will not stand for favoritism. What come to one must come to all". For this wisdom I commend the author.

This was the principle upon which America was founded, but unfortunately doesn't practice. The blacks in our society have come to realize the injustices in the "system". They are seeking to change not only their plight but also the plight of other oppressed and poor groups. This is a movement for all of us so I welcome the suggestion that the blacks join the Polish in seeking equality. But first recall Mr. Milinowsky's words: "What come to one must come to all".

Thus it seems clear that a precondition for such a Black-Polish movement would be equality between the blacks and the Polish. This, I feel, would necessitate the following:

1) doubling the Polish unemployment as compared to the rest of society
2) destroying any remnants of a Polish culture
3) impoverishing enough Polish so that they will account for one-fourth of the poor
4) making an Amos and Andy series with Polish characters
5) creating special schools for the Polish where they will be given inferior educations by disinterested teachers
6) increasing Polish youth unemployment to 25%
7) rescinding all diplomas given to Polish graduates from UMass if they exceed the graduate rate of Blacks
8) relocating all Polish people to slum districts where they will also pay higher prices
9) rewriting history books either admonishing the U.S. of or not even mentioning any discriminatory action (like slavery) against Polish
10) increasing the Polish high school drop-out rate
11) rewriting the U.S. Constitution so that Polish people only equal 3/5 of a white
12) redefining Polish people as "property"
13) lowering the living conditions of Polish so that their infant mortality rate will equal that of blacks
14) issuing three rats to every new infant born to a Polish family so that as the child matures he will always have a pet to play with
15) quoting passages from the Bible concerning Polish inferiority to instill racism in the hearts of Americans if these points fail to accomplish it
16) painting all Polish people black so that whites can identify more easily those he will take his hang-ups out on

You cry for equality. If you could live it, it's all yours.

George Medelinskas

We've Missed the Point

To the editor:

It seems unfortunate that so many students have missed the most relevent (to white students) aspect of the recent black demands to the administration. The thing that we whites should be uptight about is that WE didn't make these demands first.

UMass students have been complaining about campus police, flunk-out rates among freshmen, and similar points, for years. The important fact is that we never had the nerve to band together and confront the administration with white power, and we are, to some extent, ashamed to see those whom we've been feeling sorry for, or even superior to, doing a job in a matter of days or weeks when we've been procrastinating for years.

It is obvious that we cannot expect ALL whites to agree with all of the black demands, but let's examine closely the one which seems to rub most of us the wrong way - the one which demands that no CCENS students may flunk out first semester. Black or white, that's YOU, man! You should have been knocking at the door of President Lederle or Provost Tippo or your Student Senate in your freshman year, making the same demand. But where were you? Griping about an imaginary percentage that profs "must" flunk out each semester. Crap.

The black students are standing up for their own, but at the same time they are showing us our disorganization, or apathy, our fear. Black Power is an example of Student Power - and YOU are Student Power.

Want to know how that works? The King Council is sponsoring an all-night teach-in on Student Power Friday night. People will talk about Student Power as it applies to you. I.F.C. and Pan-Hel will join class officers, student senators, administrators, faculty members, black students, S.D.S. and others to talk about the different things Student Power is, can be, and can do.

I've said it before on leaflets and through other pulicity, but it is more relevent now than ever before. This is your world - stay on top of it! It's rolling fast, and if you don't, it may roll over you. You owe it to yourself to keep informed. Your elected and appointed leaders will be at the North Common at 8 p.m. Friday. Will you?

Peace,
Gil Salk

Comments Called Inappropriate

To the Editor:

In aswer to the Polish Ultimatum" at a time when tension seems to be mounting between the various sectors of this academic community, I can hardly find either the campus comments of your paper or yet the very wise comments of the "President" of the Polish Association appropriate let alone relevant.

I am suprised that your paper stoops so low as to discredit the credentials of this academic community by printing such material. I certainly hope that you will be more responsible next time, but meanwhile I feel too touched to let this pass by unchallenged.

Having enslaved their black counterparts for such a long period of time and still continuing to suppress them in many walks of American life, the white American society could hardly be expected to be the source of such remarks. I have always heard of blasphemy, but being indifferent to conventional religion I had never really encountered it; I now strongly believe that Malinowsky has brought me to grips with it.

Some of us feel that some of the demands on the draft paper could not be answered overnight but the fact still remains that there is need for change in various aspects of this University, and those who feel more affected by these inadequacies, I believe are better equipped to react and speak on their behalf. As a fellow sufferer who has experienced inhuman treatment in the Republic of South Africa, Rhodesia and even here in the United States, I am now in a position to understand the struggle of American blacks - a struggle which seems endless unless the white majority in this country ceases to feel the same way that Mr. Malinowsky feels.

As a possible leader of tomorrow's Africa, I would like to make it abundantly clear that people like Malinowsky and such would not be tolerated. They certainly do more harm than good to any society; they make a comedy out of a very serious problem in America today.

Surely I cannot find anybody better suited to present demands by black people than blacks themselves. All walks of life in this and other discriminatory societies of the world have used similar methods of supression and one of these is: When applying for employment or some such thing there is a general agreement that one's race, color or creed not be included in the questions asked but most of you as much as I do that when you come for an interview (at which time your fate is really

The principle behind and in front of Renault automobiles.

THE FRONT ENGINE, FRONT-WHEEL DRIVE RENAULT 16. THE REAR ENGINE, REAR-WHEEL DRIVE RENAULT 10.

The basic principle behind the Renault 10 and in front of the Renault 16 is exactly the same: The engine has weight. Put it where it'll do the most good. Over the drive wheels.

It's only common sense. When you have the weight of the engine bearing down on the drive wheels, they get a much better grip on the road. Why other cars still have an empty trunk over the drive wheels, we will never understand.

When we make a car with rear-wheel drive, we put the engine in the rear. When we make a car with front-wheel drive, we put the engine up front.

And since we don't put the engine and drive wheels on opposite ends of the car, we don't have to connect them with a bulging, heavy drive shaft. So there's no dead weight to steal power (and gas).

And no extra bulk to steal leg room.

Despite a difference in price (the Renault 10 is $1775* and the Renault 16 is $2445*), they both have many other things in common.

Both cars are gas scrimpers. The Renault 10 can get 35 m.p.g. The Renault 16 can get 28.

Both come with sealed liquid cooling systems, virtually eliminating the bother of anti-freeze.

Both come with wet cylinder sleeves, 4 doors, 4-wheel independent suspension, and a 5 main-bearing engine.

In short, both come with very much the same kind of thinking. Behind. In front. Inside and out.

decided), you do not wear a mask and any authority could decide to give you or deny you a job on the basis of your physical makeup. I have been through, "the apartment has been rented" type of discrimination already and the most painful thing about it is that the same apartment will be advertised in the papers for the following 6 months.

This type of discrimination is just as painful (if not more) as all other forms of bigotry. I am inclined to believe that a "blind" system of this type tends to be too similar to the lottery system and such a system might always favor the lucky non-Polish Americans, don't you think? You must appreciate the fact that your unsatisfied sector of the community is still resorting to "democratic" means to get their demands through; they are still prepared to sit down and reason with you (an unreasonable man). Some of us have ceased to believe in this because our enemies (Ian Smith, Voster, etc.) have reached a point of no return in their attempts to suppress Blacks. When more Wallaces, are created then you might well see the duplication of the Southern African Scene of racial hatred(I mean real hatred) here.

Although I feel that I am mainly talking on my behalf, I do believe and would not be hesitant to say that this opinion is shared by most enslaved and struggling peoples of the world. A better understanding of the developing nations of Asia, Africa and Latin America and the giant (and generally suppressing) powers of the world would be generated by a feeling of recognition of each others' problems instead of mockery.

I hope that we can start right here in this international aggregate (however loosely tied) of an academic community to work towards a compromise. Let's not joke about an unfunny situation.

Appeal to Understanding

To the Editor:

Mr. H. Khalid, in answer to Mr. Selby's article of October 23, gave a totally one sided picture of the problems facing Palestinians in the Near East. To attempt to refute each of his arguments would be ridiculous, for I think that neither side, Zionist nor Arab, can be truly labeled martyr or aggressor exclusively.

I am a Zionist, but I refuse to label or libel the Arab people, for to do so would be to dehumanize them. The problems in the Near East are so complex, that only a deep understanding of individual human needs will begin to solve them; humanity and compassion are at a premium.

Therefore, I suggest that both sides cease their name calling, and attempt to face the issues realistically. The State of Israel is a reality, but so are the problems of the Palestinian Arabs. Until both are realized and taken into consideration at the same time, neither side will have any satisfaction.

M. Bernstein

"A Broken Record"

To the Editor:

Mr. Khalid's vitriolic display of impressive indignation is an everturning broken record that makes peace in the Middle East impossible since it equates it with Arab emasculation. It's a record that shouts, but cannot hear.

Mr. Khalid will continue to pound his chest in bravado even if it takes the last drop of Israeli and Arab blood. While he projects and daydreams in ever escalating and self-hypnotic language, we pray that saner folk who are the cannon fodder of his mouthing may yet reach a modus vivendi, some accomodation that is not equated with self-compromise.

Talk on Mr. Khalid. Your mirror is impressed; only people are dying.

Note From Vietnam

To the Editor:

I am writing this letter to you to find out if any of you would like to write someone over here who may not receive any letters from home. I'm from Gardner, Mass. myself that is why I am writing to you. I've been over here almost two years and know how the guys feel when they don't get any mail, so maybe you can help out in this respect.

Any of you who care to write can address your letters to me and I will pass them amongst the guys who need them the most. We have enough trouble just fighting the war, so this could be a way to help us also. I know that a letter would make a lot of the guys feel better, so if you'd like to help you can. We'd really like to hear from you.

SDS Is Innocent

To the Editor:

This letter is in response to Mr. Discenza's berating of SDS for the obstreperous 12:20 a.m. demonstration in Southwest last Thursday.

Alas, the blame must be shifted, for the bacchanalia was created by the peaceful citizens of the Killing floor, who were merely celebrating joyously their secession from the United States of America.

As a duly empowered representative of the Killingfloor, I humbly bid you accept this infant nation's apologies. Surely you can understand the exuberance of attaining independence and freedom.

Matter of fact, why don't you come on over for a piece of Secession cake? Don't forget your passport!

Two Questions

To the editor:

There is a growing concern over prices in the Student Union. Although the nation is experiencing an inflation, there are two observable facts that cannot be understood. First, food prices in the Hatch have gone so high as to be comparable to Howard Johnson's. And students eating there literally go fed. Some of us don't have the muscles to lose a pound.

Secondly, the Student Union Book Store is doing as much business as any other book store in the country. But the Student book store is not supposed to make profit.

May we have an explanation from the Student Senate as to why there is such a business in the Union and where the profits go?

Edward Malenga

To the editor:

The people on Boyden Field were hesitant and uneasy. SDS did not seem so impressive anymore. Flickering eyes and nervous laughter and long, tangled hair. Shabby jackets and worn dungarees. Their carefree, rambling walk around the drill field, with an American flag stretched out before them, seemed as insincere and empty as the symbols of peace they wore hung around their necks or on armbands. They were frightened.

I felt very sad as I watched the marching rows of blue and green uniforms, and the tiny band of frightened, empty people that wandered aimlessly among them. I pitied us all, because those blue-green rows are so necessary to save us from ourselves. The cadets didn't have the answer. Nor did the sad, funny people carrying the flag. Perhaps inside we are all bewildered and afraid.

The SDS members who sat on the grass had a baby with them. A beautiful baby with sand-colored hair. A man gave the child a toy gun and motioned toward the green-uniforms. The baby's hands grasped the little gun, pointed it toward the field, and it spurted imaginary death at the cadets. The people around the child laughed softly and someone applauded.

In that moment I felt that maybe - we no longer have a nation . . .

Fare Thee Well

To the editor:

Come January lets stop the give-away. Why should the U.S., that is, why should We underwrite the purchase of military and other non-edible equipment by nations who don't know where their next meal is coming from unless we give them that too? The only way guns can cure hunger is to use them on the healthier, meatier people and then let the weaker, more needy eat them.

What a young child needs and what it wants while standing, starving in front of a toy store are quite often not the same. The toys glittering in the light catch their hearts. Their stomachs are forgotten temporarily. Sylster Uncle Sam doesn't realize that he is spoiling them. Even silver bullets don't glitter in the dark. Not only are there spoils of war, there are spoils of armaments, too. The most important is people. Pick any country on Uncle Sam's Christmas list. They need what he's been giving them like they need an international locusts' convention. The Peace Corps is the best constructive answer so far, but it is not much of an answer. It should be greatly expounded upon.

One out of every seven people in N.Y. City is on welfare. Why should these people be supported by the other six. Welfare is as constructive in building and rebuilding lives as polio. The recently organized Massachusetts Welfare Rights Organization (M.W.R.O.) will not accept charity at any price: They arrogantly will accept it only at their price. They have harrassed welfare clerks and recently ransacked the Boston office. I hope that their denta l bills are all paid so that their bite will be sure to be effective next time (tomorrow) they snap. It is forseeable that they will be soon asking for advances on their grandchildrens' receipts.

Hopefully Mr. Nixon's administration will not be an exception to the usual Republican rapport with big business. Hopefully the placating present policy will be halted for a more favorable constructive program. The recent Democratic giveaway is hopefully at an end. The threads aren't about to be cut. There weren't any strings. There was nothing accomplished towards bringing about the promised equality. Come January, come!

South Vietnam Fears Johnson Will Yield Key Points In Peace Talks

Fighting continues as again no progress is made in the Paris peace talks.

By SUSAN SCHMEHL
Fine Arts Staff

Associated Press Writer

PARIS (AP) - South Vietnam is worried that President Johnson might yield to Hanoi on key points to achieve a peace-making breakthrough before his term expires, a ranking Saigon diplomat said Thursday.

Pham Dang Lam, former South Vietnamese foreign minister and now his government's chief observer at the peace talks, told a reporter Saigon was forming this impression. He called it "a cause for anxiety."

"If the only preoccupation of the U.S. government is to find something acceptable for the other side within the next two months, then we are very worried indeed," Lam added. The U.S. delegation had no comment on Lam's statement.

The tone of the Saigon envoy's declaration confirmed the position of U.S. sources that there had been no progress in U.S. efforts to convince South Vietnam to end its boycott of the peace talks.

The point of dispute is still the same - Saigon's refusal to attend a peace conference where the insurgent Viet Cong has equal footing with the South Vietnamese government.

President Nguyen Van Thieu of South Vietnam has laid down two conditions for Saigon's participation: the Viet Cong must be absorbed within a Hanoi-led delegation and Saigon must lead the allied side.

Hanoi and the National Liberation Front the Viet Cong's political directorate, have scorned Thieu's proposals.

Unique Discs Discovered

Five recordings of performances by the late cellist Emanuel Feuermann have been discovered.

Few recordings were left by the great cellist, who died in 1942 at the untimely age of 39. The discovery was made through efforts by Smith College Assistant Professor Seymour W. Itzkoff.

The privately made recordings on glass discs were of performances by Feuermann in 1940 and 1941 with the National Orchestral Association in Carnegie Hall. They were obtained through efforts with and the cooperation of the late Mary Flagler Carey, former president of the National Orchestral Association.

The interpretations of the works performed are described as "unique." The recordings are of the D'Albert Concerto in C, Bloch's "Schelomo," Dvorak's B minor Concerto, his "Waldesruhe" and Rondo and Reicha's Cello Concerto (Op. 4, No. 1).

Tapes of the records have been added to a complete collection being gathered for the Feuermann library at radio station WFCR in Amherst, Mass. The station serves Smith College, Amherst College, the University of Massachusetts, and the newly-founded Hampshire College, and Mount Holyoke College.

Dr. John Pierce To Lecture Monday

One of the developers of the satellite communication system will speak at the University of Massachusetts Monday, Nov.18, as part of the Electrical Engineering Seminar Series.

Dr. John Pierce, executive director of research at Bell Telephone Laboratories, will lecture on "The Value of Invention or Analysis Isn't Enough" in the Engineering Auditorium at 3:30 p. m.

The author of 12 technical books and hundreds of papers and articles, he has also published a number of science fiction stories under the name J. J. Coupling. He has won prizes and awards in the area of communication technology and six institutions have presented him with honorary doctorates.

Dr. Pierce is a member of the National Academy of Sciences, the National Academy of Engineering, the Institute of Electrical and Electronics Engineers, and a Fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences.

A series of broadcasts originating from WFCR and presented by Itzkoff over the National Educational Radio Network on "The Art of Emanuel Feuermann" received and Armstrong Foundation F.M. Award from Columbia University in 1967.

The classic drama of love cast against the sinister aspects of war, "Dr. Zhivago" is a tremendous film with much emotional and sensory impact. Pasternak's dendritic novel is scaled down a bit and the Lara-Zhivago love theme is highly stressed in both the music and photography of the movie.

The poet-doctor Zhivago is a man victimized by his times. A gentle and loving man, he simply does not fit into the massive Communist overthrow of traditional Russia. As a freethinking artist, he remains dissatisfied with the Communist doctrines practiced and finds solace in the rhythm and symmetry of his poems, and his love for Lara.

The film is a moving and fully beautiful experience. At times it can overwhelm you with its fantastic photography and subtle interplay of music. This portrayal of a man dubbed an idealist by his times, is brought close and you can almost feel within you the chill and the warmth of his life.

Rachel, Rachel

"I'm in the exact middle of my life and from here on it's downhill all the way." So lives Rachel, a thirty-five year old grammar school teacher. With her mother, she remains in the same town, house, and room since her childhood. An empty organism afraid of truly living and experiencing life, she hides away in her secure little shelter.

Desperately craving human contact and love, Rachel exists in a quasi-world of fantasy. Her friend Calla felt that "everytime we've had ice cream you've always ordered vanilla. Rachel, there is more than one flavor." Urged on by Calla, she attempts to find some meaning in religious escape. However, she fails at this endeavor and returns to cower at home, making sandwiches and coffee for her mother's weekly bridge night with "the girls."

Then, into her cloistered world and summer vacation comes a visitor. This brief superficial encounter makes Rachel realize for the first time that her body can feel, can touch, and in essense be alive. She tastes a new flavor and her dormant senses awake.

"Rachel, Rachel" is a rather hardhitting look at spinsterhood and more precisely at an empty life that finds some direction.

Fall Festival For "Squares"

On Saturday, November 16, the University of Massachusetts Heymakers Square Dance Club will sponsor the Fall Festival. There will be two callers, Henry Cosimini of the Town and Country Square Dance Club of Southwick and Heymakers and George Haile who has called for clubs in Guam and Alabama and at the Westover Air Force Base while in the Air Force. Be sure to bring your Century Books for new signatures.

The square dance will be held at the Farley 4-H Lodge (near the UMass Alumni Stadium) University Drive, Amherst.

All western square dancers are cordially invited for a fun-filled evening of square dancing at the Fall Festival.

Faults of College Boards Seen Yet Change in Policy Avoided

NEW YORK (CPS)--The College Entrance Examination Board appears ready to concede that its admissions testing program is geared primarily to serving institutions of higher education and that, as a result, an imbalance exists between this service and the individual needs of students who want to continue their education beyond high school.

But the board does not seem prepared to make any radical departures in its basic program of aptitude and achievement tests, without which few students can be admitted to colleges and universities.

Its emphasis more likely will be on offering additional services to help students make more enlightened judgments about themselves and the educational institutions they might attend.

That was the impression left at the board's annual meeting by its president, Richard Pearson, and by the chairman of its commission on tests. The 21-member commission was appointed in 1967 to conduct a "broad review" of the theory and practice of the College Board's testing program.

It was charged with gathering "evidence of the need for change" and deciding what new examinations might be needed in the future.

So far the commission has been unable to reconcile widely divergent views among its members. But Mr. Pearson, in his annual report to the College Board, said his own understanding of the commission's intention was that "it looks for new tests and inventories that would give students a better understanding of themselves than the Board's traditional tests do, and also for better informational publications and computer-assigned guidance to give students a better basis for choice and decision" about colleges.

Seeing this as a "long-term effort of program development," Mr. Pearson went on to voice his "assumption at the present time...that much, though perhaps not all, of this developmental work will go on OUTSIDE the admissions testing program."

But some members of the tests commission, at least, have been greatly impressed by demands for fundamental realignments within the testing program itself, and it is on this point perhaps more than any other that the commission is stalemated..

David V. Tiedman, chairman of the commission, believes it will ultimately call for some "evolutionary" changes in board activities rather than "revolutionary" approaches to testing.

Neither he nor the commission's vice-chairman, B. Alden Thresher, were able to say in a "progress report," however, that the commission had resolved its differences over such basic questions as whether the board should continue the testing program more or less as it stands.

Mr. Thresher said there was a "wide diversity" of opinion on the commission, ranging from bland contentment at one end to fulminating discontent at the other."

He said the group had shown a willingness "to contemplate and seriously consider a variety of innovative and experimental proposals which go far beyond the board's present, conventional programs." Some of these ideas or so "radical," Mr. Thresher added, that they could be introduced only gradually.

But an indication of how a radical approach might be resisted came from another commission member, John B. Carroll, who commented in an interview that "We're probably going to keep quite a lot of the current procedures."

Describing himself as "generally conservative," Mr. Carroll said that although he could go along with the idea that students need to be given more information about colleges, he would not favor "precipitous" changes in the board's established testing program without careful research.

Hills South HiLo's Play Against UNH Champs

Leading Scorer- Rick Frederics of the Hills South Hi-Lo's established an all time high record by scoring 135 points during intramural football this fall.

Hill South Hi Lo's, the campus intramural football champions, will play the Alacia, campus champions from the University of New Hampshire, tomorrow morning, weather permitting, at 10 a.m. on the Intramural Field.

This extramural football game has been played since 1960. UMass has been the winner in the last two years. Last year Mu Delta travelled to New Hampshire and defeated Gidds House by a score of 18-12. In the eight year history of the game, UMass has won four times and UNH four times.

Hayes Stars for San Diego

SAN DIEGO (AP) - Few teams in the National Basketball Association could cheer about a record of six wins in 13 games. But it's a genuine happening for the San Diego Rockets.

The Rockets w a only 15 times in their freshman season and the difference this year, of course, is Elgin Hayes, college basketball's player of the year in 1967-1968.

"Hayes," said Coach Jack Mc Mahen Thursday, "has got to be the cinch Rookie of the Year in the NBA."

The 6-foot-9 1/2 former Houston star scored the current NBA season high of 54 points Wednesday as the Rockets snapped a four-fame losing streak and defeated Detroit, 122-120.

It was the fourth time in six days that Hayes played the entire 48 minutes, and he was exhausted at the end. He grabbed 22 rebounds and blocked several shots to complement his offensive fireworks.

"I felt woozy," said Hayes after his 17-point fourth quarter. "I was unsteady, I could have gone down because it was a tremendous grind. I'm glad I can help the team."

McMahen defends his strategy of keeping Hayes in the game.

"In this league you go with your best hand. Elgin's my big horse. When you have one like him you use him all you can."

The Rockets have been "clobbered," as McMahen put it, only twice in the early season. The games were against the Los Angeles Lakers and Wilt Chamberlain and the Boston Celtics of Bill Russell.

The young Rocket center was outplayed in both games, which was not entirely unexpected by McMahen or Hayes.

"Hayes is coming around," said McMahen. "But until he knows the people around the league he's going to get burned on occasion."

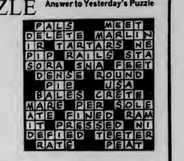
Running on abbreviated home courses both the varsity and freshman cross-country teams ran to victory against the University of New Hampshire yesterday. The varsity closed out their winning dual meet season with a one-sided 20-38 win while the frosh evened-off their record with a convincing 25-34 triumph.

Again Ron Wayne of UMass led the field of runners as he ran 25: 53 for the slightly shortened course. The course was changed due to the snow and slippery conditions on some of the hills. Wayne topped teammate Leo Duart who placed second in a time of 24:18.

Third place honors were copped by UNH's Ev Dunklee who nosed out Redman senior Charlie Lang by two seconds. Dunklee was clocked in 24:31. Following Lang and finishing in the top seven for the Redman harriers were Tom Derderian, fifth in 25: 01, Larry Paulson, eighth in 25:23 and seniors Marc Gelinas and Djego Gonzalez ninth and tenth, respectively.

Varsity and Frosh Harriers Triumph On Snow Covered Course Against UNH

The frosh registered their fifth victory by placing five men in the top eight finishers. The race, which was over a half mile, was won by Don Pregent of the Wildcat's frosh barely outrunning the Little Redman's Don Dunsky, 14:36-14:38. Pete Fletcher of UNH got third but was followed over the finish line by three UMass runners, Wayne Lucas, Don Brigham, and Steve Whicher. UMass placed another contingent of runners in eighth through 11th spots to sew up the victory. Al Mangan was eighth, Bruce Blackburn ninth, Ron Swasey tenth and John Morse 11th.



The varsity finished their dual meet season with an impressive 8-2 record despite injuries and illnesses to key runners during the year. The only losses were against New England champ UConn and eastern powerhouse Harvard. The frosh ran up an even 5-5 mark and developed into a strong team as the season progressed.

Fusia To Juggle Line ups; Grasso To See Some Action

BY PETER PASCARELLI
Assistant Sports Editor

An injury-crippled UMass football team, in the midst of its worst season since the late '50's, hopes to salvage a piece of the Yankee Conference title when the Redmen meet New Hampshire at Alumni Stadium, tomorrow. The kickoff will be at 1:30.

UMass will be without the services this week of Ed Sarno, Nick Warnock, Bill Sroka and Randy Robinson, in addition to Tim Driscoll, Mike Marchev, and Fred Hupprich, all of whom were lost for the season earlier.

An indication of how this season has gone for the Redmen is the following incident. Robinson, who has been sidelined the last two weeks by an ankle injury suffered in the Connecticut game, was ready for action in Monday practice sessions. However, Tuesday the standout senior linebacker slipped on some ice and aggravated the injury enough to shelve him again this week.

UMass head coach Vic Fusia, could only say of the incident, "It's not bad enough that we are getting hurt on the field, we are getting hurt everywhere."

UMass can tie for a Conference crown this week, if two conditions are met. The Redmen must defeat the Wildcats, a team that has lost only twice this year and then hope that Rhode Island can upset Connecticut down at Kingston.

Fusia has been forced this week, as every week, to juggle his personnel due to injuries. On offense, the UMass mentor will start either Jim Long or Don Young at Warnock's split end spot. The offensive line will see changes also with Jim Nangle being started at tackle along with Dick Donlin, and Mike Cooney, who has played most of the year at tackle being moved to guard along with Bruce Fulton.

Nick McGarry will start at right end with the backfield which started the past few weeks remaining in tact. The offense may get some additional help from the return of wingback Jerry Grasso. The junior, who has been injured the past few weeks is expected to see some limited action tomorrow.

Defensively, UMass must fill one hole left by Sroka's absence, and it is a big one. The sophomore has improved with each passing week. Fusia is, as of now, undecided about a replacement.

In this season of negative firsts, another was achieved this week. Tomorrow's game will be the first played at Alumni Stadium with snow on the ground. The field and stands have been thoroughly cleared of the snowfall, although there will probably be snow along the sidelines.

Fusia is not hesitant about seeing the importance of this game. "It is our biggest game," said the coach, "a game that means practically everything. Our main objective when the season started was to win the Conference title and a win tomorrow could give us a share of that title."

New Hampshire is a team that Fusia respects. "They play good solid football," said the coach.

New Hampshire is primarily a running team but also throws 12 to 14 passes a game. Fusia added, "Their passes are called in good situations and have proven very effective."

The Wildcats have in Ed Walsh, a quarterback who can both run and pass. He has completed 61 per cent of his passes, tops in the Yankee Conference.

UMass has been somewhat hampered by not being able to practice outside this week. Thursday evening was the first outdoor practice session of the week. However, Fusia said, "We are in good enough shape and everyone else in the Northeast, except for those fortunate enough to have field houses, is in the same situation."

Fusia sees the key to any success this week in the cutting down of the number of mistakes. Last week Fusia said, "Our defenses were not really pushed around, but the big play ate us up."

The coach said, however, "We know this game means a lot, and New Hampshire is a team we can beat. One thing I won't worry about is morale. It is still amazingly good."

The chill winds of winter froze the Great One this week. Snows fell on his favorite haunts, making him think of winter things, like basketball.

But the Indian still is thinking of football. He helped a beleagured crew shovel out snowy Alumni Stadium. He cleaned the chilled turf. He prepared himself for another game.

But one thought hovered over the ancient mind of our leader. Next week is UMass-B. C. and a precedent breaking pick may be coming.

Little Redmen To Play Tough UNH Frosh

By STEVE SHAMBAN
Staff Reporter

The Little Redmen travel to Durham this afternoon for their final football game of the year against the University of New Hampshire. UMass' record is now 4 – 0 and coach Dave Kelley would like nothing better than a win today to finish undefeated with the most successful freshman team in years.

But it won't be easy. UNH has a 3-2 record which includes wins over Dartmouth, Northeastern and Bridgeton Academy. Their two losses, to UConn and URI were by a total of four points.

The Little Wildcat's top player is halfback Craig Scott, a 6'1, 180 pounder. Scott, averaging five yards a carry, is the keystone of an offense which has averaged better than 250 yards rushing per game. UNH is expected to pass very little and will use mostly sweeps, belly options, inside counters and off tackle plays.

Defensively, they'll use the same 52 monster setup that UMass does. New Hampshire, unlike most other teams, likes to give their monster man more freedon to set up. Instead of giving him a choice of three positions to work from, he'll have a choice of six and this should make the job a little more difficult for Little Redman quarterbacks Bill Bush and Marty Evans.

Physically, both teams are small and quick, so the expected muddy field should not be a positive factor for either side.

For UMass, there are no injuries which should hinder the available manpower. Only wingback George Tsiumis, with the flu, is out. Fullback Dick Cummings' bad ankles are rounding into shape, and he's been running in good form. His ankles will have to hold, because there is no one to back him up.

Kelley is a little concerned that his team hasn't really practiced together for a couple of weeks. In that time they've served mainly as practice fodder for the varsity. The fact that last week's UConn game was canceled didn't help matters any.

In the event of a close game, and the teams match up pretty evenly, Kelley has an ace up his sleeve in place kicker Dennis Gagnon, who should be a factor in every UMass game for the next three years." Gagnon has kicked three field goals of over 40 yards so far and is a threat from the 35 yard line on in. An undefeated season is at stake here for UMass so this game should be a good one. Kickoff is at 1:30 p.m.

Statement To Be Issued Today; Beating Discovered To Be Hoax

By BILL DICKINSON
Senior Reporter

A joint statement will be issued today by President John W. Lederle and Robert Henderson of the Afro-American organization on the progress of the talks held last week stemming from the alleged beating of a white student and his Negro companion Thursday, November 7.

The alleged beating which touched off a series of protests and led the Student Afro-American Organization to issue a list of 21 demands to the University, was a hoax, Dean of Students William F. Field said Friday.

He said a white UMass student and his black guest, James R. Hall of Springfield, have admitted that they made up the story of the beating by four white youths Nov. 7.

Field announced the white student whom he refused to identify has been suspended from the University and Hall, a non-student, has been barred from the campus.

The white student's suspension was automatically referred to the University Discipline Board.

The Dean attributed the discovery of the hoax to the Student Afro-American Organization, members of which brought the information to him late Friday afternoon.

He said the two youths had invented the story to put Hall in the good graces of the Afro-American Organization.

The group had asked Hall to "disassociate himself" from black UMass students because his "disruptive behavior" was reflecting badly on them, Field said.

Shortly after Field learned of the hoax, a campus police officer escorted both youths to a bus leaving Amherst and watched while they boarded it.

"I am deeply appreciative of the efforts of the Afro-American Organization members who through direct initiative discovered and immediately brought to my attention the facts of this case," Field said.

Field stressed that although the beating was a hoax, there were "racial tensions that needed immediate attention."

"The discussions of this week have made it clear that we would have had to hold these sessions in any case."

State police attached to the office of Hampshire County District Attorney Oscar Grife and Sgt. Philip Kavanaugh of the campus police had been investigating the alleged beating.

Grife praised the black student group for their cooperation in the investigation.

He said the black students interrogated the two youths and corroborated evidence uncovered by the police.

Lederle, Henderson To Document Demand Details After Conferences

BY JAN CURLEY
Assistant Managing Editor

A joint statement will be issued this afternoon by President John W. Lederle and Robert Anderson, spokesman for the Afro-American organization on the 21 demands issued to the Administration a week ago Friday.

The statement is expected to be a detailed document on the demands, the work of a week's conferences between administration officials and members of the Afro-American group.

The demands were made after a white student and his Negro visitor, James B. Hall, Buckingham St., Springfield, reported they had been beaten by four or five white students. The alleged beating grew out of an incident in the Newman Center, Thursday, Nov. 7. The beating was exposed as a hoax last Friday by Dean Field, after investigation by the Afro-American organization, the campus police and the district attorney's office.

When the Afro-American organization learned of the beating, they met and drew up the demands. Dr. Mark G. Noffsinger, Associate Dean of Students met with the group for several hours in Mills House.

At that meeting, three of the items on the list were changed. Lt. Daniel Schwartz's name, which had been cited as one of the three campus police officers the group wanted removed, was stricken and a public apology made to him.

After Thursday meeting, President Lederle said that unless charges were pressed against the police officers, no action would be taken by the University. He said that there were ordinary channels through which matters like this were handled. Henderson offered "no comment" when asked if charges would be made.

The demand that no black student flunk out at the end of the semester was changed to no black student involved in the Collegiate Committee for the Education of Negro Students (CCENS) be flunked out. At a press conference, held after a three hour meeting last Thursday, President Lederle and Henderson explained

Penn. Students Start Drive For National Primary

PHILADELPHIA - A petition campaign now under way at the University of Pennsylvania, the University of Michigan and Stanford University is the beginning of a drive on college campuses across the country to gain support for a national primary.

Students on each of the three campuses have gathered citizens for a National Primary. The group was started over the summer to rally support for a constitutional amendment that would have each political party's Presidential candidate nominated by a national primary.

Richard Barnett, a sophomore at Penn, is coordinating the national effort. He said that petition campaigns similar to the ones now under way would be conducted at other major colleges during the rest of the fall semester.

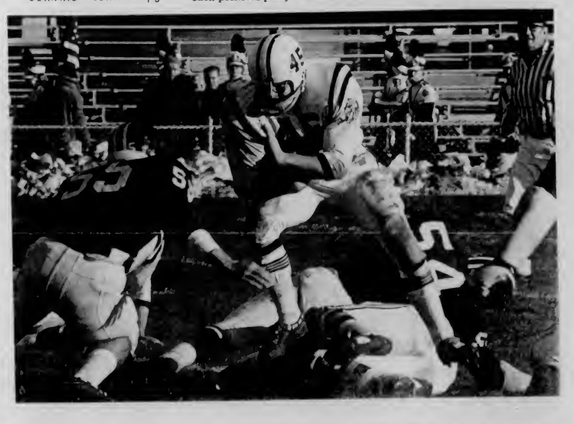
He said that the goal was to create enough popular support both on and off campus so a constitutional amendment creating the national primary would be approved by Congress.

Panels Discuss Problems At All-Night of Inquiry

By JOHN HICKEY
News Editor

The Night of Inquiry sponsored by the Martin Luther King Social Action Council Friday night and Saturday morning was, in the view of MLK interim executive secretary Gil Salk, "very successful."

An estimated 2000 people joined in the discussions at the all-night teach-in in the North Dining Commons. Although the night was intended primarily to inform and bring about a sharing of ideas, it also provided the incentive for further discussions and possible action. At the suggestion of Bill Wilkinson and Don Dudash, smaller groups working on similar problems will join together for common planning sessions.



Bill Wilkinson addressed the students at the Night of Inquiry and sought a formation of panels to cont. p[illegible] presente[illegible] night

Salk said that another night similar in format is being planned for a night two or three weeks from now, at which the proposals of some of these groups will be presented.

Speakers and panels alternated with entertainment and discussion periods during the night. Topics considered included student power, curriculum change, university involvement in the community and the social education of the student body.

The first part of the evening's discussions centered around the concept of student power. A conclusive definition proved elusive, with opinions varying from that of SDS as expressed by Mike Minsky, president of that organization, to those of Mike Driscoll, president of the Interfraternity Council. Deede Eastman of Afro-Am stated that student rights means "seeing that the University works for the students it was design[illegible]

Several speakers cited the need for better communications between the elements of the university community.

Gil Salk, who moderated the panel discussions, said that the opinions of the more radical campus groups tended to dominate the evening. Many of those in attendance were for the most part ignorant of these groups and their activities, Salk said, and were informed by the program. He said that the program now being planned for next month will attempt to provide for a wider range of voices from the community.

The University curriculum came under criticism from a number of speakers on the stage and on the floor. It was argued that after four years here a student may be full of facts but have no knowledge of the art of living. The objections were mainly to the university's graduation requirements.

Mark Sheran of the School of Education introduced a proposal for a Center for Student Community, designed to allow students to learn things relevant to their circumstances. Professor Putnam Barber of the Sociology department claimed, on the other hand, that the advantage of the University was that it provided an opportunity to sit back and look at things. "Its virtue is its irrelevance," he said.

The "metropolitan plunge" advocated by the University Christian Movement was also discussed and proposed as a university - wide program. The association hopes to send students to live in communities of all types to acquire learning of a sort that cannot be gained from books.

Gordon Hall To Lecture On Extremism At Smith

NORTHAMPTON -"Extremism: Sickness of the Sixties" will be the topic of a lecture at Smith College by a long-time "Battler Against Bigotry."

The "Battler" title was given to the speaker, Gordon D. Hall, by the SATURDAY EVENING POST. The self-educated Hall, specialist in American political fringe movements, will speak at 8:30 p.m. tomorrow in McConnell Hall. Sponsored by the Student Lecture Committee, the event is open to the public.

For nearly 20 years, Hall has been doing research and lecturing on groups in the mainstream of American politics ranging from the Marxist extreme left to the Ku Klux Klan on the radical right. He will bring a display of literature of extremist groups.

Hall has lectured before college, university, church, fraternal and civic audiences throughout the country. He appeared on Walter Cronkite's television series "The Twentieth Century." The subject of the program was "Smear: The Game of Dirty Politics."

that this request was made in light of the fact that many of the Negro students in the program came from educationally inferior institutions and the period of adjustment for them would be longer than that required by most of the other freshmen.

President Lederle pointed out to reporters that as a rule professors at the University are somewhat easier on first semester freshmen, realizing that they are facing certain problems in college.

Henderson stressed at that meeting that he was not seeking a dual grading system and asserted that after the Negro students were over their adjustment period they would be judged on the same standards as the rest of the campus.

Another of the original demands clarified was on sensitivity training. The demand was changed to read that all students, black and white, attend freshman orientation sessions for sensitivity. Henderson said that the purpose was to sensitize white students to black and vice versa.

At the faculty Senate meeting last Thursday, Dean Field said that sensitivity programs were being conducted by the police department and that plans were currently being made to include counselors in a similar program. Eventually, he said, the program would be expanded to include all students at the University.

At the meeting last Monday, the black students rejected the statement by President Lederle apologizing to them for the beating. They said they would wait until the President made the statement himself.

President Lederle flew back from Washington Tuesday and read the statement to the group assembled in Whitmore. That same day the Afro-American group issued a new ultimatum to the Administration demanding that the campus police be disarmed of all weapons with 72 hours. This announcement came following an hour and a half sit-in by 150 students and a three hour meeting with Lederle, Field, and Provost Oswald Tippo.

The next day the group released the administration from the 72-hour limit on the ultimatum. Henderson stated that he realized this issue would require more time and study. He also said that this was an issue which the whole campus could be involved.

Henderson and Lederle appeared before the Student Senate Wednesday night. Field spoke on behalf of the administration and said, "We are of course going to finally approve only those things which are for the good of all students on this campus and for the entire climate of the University."

He went on to say in response to feelings that some of the demands were "extreme" that if some of the "power words", compulsory, immediate and required, the basic content of these demands might seem more reasonable.

Speaking more directly on the gun issue, Henderson said that he realized that there were some instances when guns were needed for the protection of the students and the police officers. He essentially said that the group wanted the guns off the hips of the police officers to insure that they wouldn't be used in haste before a careful scrutinization of the situation could be made.

Henderson said that the guns could be kept in the police cruisers in case they would be needed. The Senate passed the recommendation that the police be disarmed, but voted to reconsider the action at the meeting to be held this Wednesday.

Last Thursday after another three hour meeting, the mood expressed by President Lederle and Henderson was optimistic. Lederle said the meeting had been productive and both sides were learning.

Bond Sees A Long Four Years Ahead For American Negroes

PROVIDENCE, R. I. (AP) - Julian Bond, the 28-year-old Negro activist who caused a sensation at the Democratic National Convention in Chicago this year when he succeeded in seating half of his Georgia loyal Democratic delegation, told a crowd of some 1,000 people at Pembroke's Alumnae Hall yesterday, that American Negroes are in for a long four years under the administration of President-elect Richard Nixon.

Bond suggested that the battle he is helping to wage for racial equality and economic improvement for the nation's poor people would be slowed by the Nixon-Agnew administration, a Congress more conservative than the previous Congress and a nation that is tired.

His strongest complaint against Nixon was directed against the president-elect's pledge to let black capitalism take over from the government in the effort to improve the lot of people living in the ghetto.

"If government is unresponsive to people who need government response, then the people can either bring political pressure to bear upon the government to appeal to its conscience," Bond said.

Suggesting that political pressure would probably bring quicker results, he said that people interested in improving the lot of poor people should spend every spare moment building an effective political force that should begin on the local level and work its way into the national level.

Panel Examines Vietnam Policy

Tomorrow, at 8 p.m. the cultural committee of John Adams Lower will sponsor an open panel discussion on the future of American policy in Southeast Asia. Members of the panel are: Luther Allen of the University Government Department; Major E. J. Chapman, Information Officer United States Marine Corps and Russell Johnson of the American Friends Service Committee.

All three men have traveled to Vietnam. Professor Allen conducts a seminar on America n policy in Southeast Asia, and Johnson was among the first Americans to visit Hanoi.

Tenative Agreement Reached In New York School Strike

NEW YORK (AP) - Another tentative agreement was announced yesterday to end a teachers' strike which has stirred racial tension and kept more than a million pupils out of the city schools for most of the fall term.

The agreement would create a state supervisory committee with power to enforce the agreement throughout the entire city school system.

Union officials recommended acceptance, and a ratification vote was set for late yesterday, possibly in time to open schools today.

Albert Shanker, president of the 55,000 member AFL-CIO United Federation of Teachers, told a union mass meeting in Madison Square Garden that the panel would have "rather extraordinary powers" to suspend teachers or administrators and to investigate infractions of their rights.

Shanker also said the agreement would put a state trustee in charge of the eight schools in Ocean Hill, a Negro and Puerto Rican slum area where the ouster of a group of white teachers triggered the strike.

Shanker said the union agreed to make up lost class time, apparently by cancelling vacations, and that teachers would lose only about six days pay.

The current education crisis, the worst in the city's history, was spawned by the ouster of a group of white teachers by the Ocean Hill-Brownsville local governing board and led to deep racial divisions and bitterness.

Dr. Drum To Give Lecture On Glass

WILLIAMSTOWN - Dr. Ryan W. Drum, assistant professor of botony at UMass will lecture at Bronfman Auditorium, Williams College, at 8 p.m., tomorrow with a pianist, jug band, movie projectors, slide projectors, tape recorder, and sound system to give a multi-media performance on the subject of "Glass."

An open meeting of Visiting Lecturer Paul Shepard's course, "Man and Environment," Dr. Drum's free public lecture is being sponsored by Bryant House, a Williams residential hall.

The botanist will discuss the environmental implications of silicone dioxide, SiO_2, one of the most common molecules on earth. Silica is frequent in the crystalline quartzes which comprise many rock formations around Williamstown. It also comprises 90-95 per cent of glass.

Organisms which have silica, Dr. Drum says, have a bio-economic advantage because they can manipulate an inorganic molecule rather than synthesize an organic molecule to perform the same function.

A molecular biologist, Dr. Drum is engaged by the environmental or ecological implications of cellular material such as silica. "Recently I have successfully developed a simple technique for the laboratory silification and petrification of plant material," the botanist reports. "I am pursuing several alternatives in an effort to further understand not only the preservation of fossil plant material by silica but also the general question of mineral deposition in living tissues."

The holder of a B.S. in chemistry and PhD. in phsycology from Iowa State University, Dr. Drum has studied electron microscopy at the University of Bonn and the mechanism of diatom locomotion at the University of Leeds. He has published 23 scientific papers during the last six years.

Dr. Drum, at 29, has built a reputation through New England as a pioneer in new teaching techniques. His multi-media approach derives from classes he developed for a course in general botany for non-science majors he taught last year at UMass.

Southwest To Show Film On Vietnam

David Schoenbrun's classic film, "Vietnam: How Did We Get In? How Do We Get Out?" will be shown in the Berkshire Club Room, Southwest Residential College tonight at 6:30. A discussion of the film led by members of the faculty will follow.

The showing of the film is part of the individual and group draft counselling program now being offered in conjunction with the Valley Peace Center in Southwest. As has been the case now for 5 weeks, individual draft counselling will be offered this evening from 6:30-8 in the lobby of Coolidge Tower. Trained draft counsellors from the Valley Peace Center will be on hand.

Where We Stand Now

As most of the University community must know by now, the alleged beating of the black visitor, James R. Hall, and his white companion was a hoax to get Hall back into the good graces of the Afro-American Society. Where we all stand now is a little difficult to say.

The University needed to learn that the important problems do not lie in the planning of new buildings or in our appearance to the legislature but in the lives of the students. They dawdled too long in admitting more black students, then in formulating programs for their aid and, up until last week, in improving communication and relations between Afro-Americans and the Administration.

White students needed to realize the effect of daily racial harrassment on the emotions of their fellow black students. Many were satisfied to rationalize the problem by saying that they had never overtly discriminated against anyone. But, if they stood by while someone yelled "Hey, nigger" out the window, and let the words remain unchallenged, they were guilty.

Black students needed to learn that, in order to have a truly meaningful four years at UMass, they could not confine themselves solely to the Afro-American Society. They distrusted and doubted their acceptance by white students and the Administration. Thus making communication and understanding more difficult.

The fact that the precipitating incident was made up by two dissatisfied and thoughtless individuals is irrelevent at this point in consideration of the progress made. Communication and understanding between Administration, students--both black and white, and faculty is now in open discussion.

We are no longer debating the rather immaterial question of whether Dow Chemical will hold interviews or not; the better understanding between blacks and whites is a problem for NOW, for HERE, and for US.

The Editors

"As the educational and scientific estate grows in numbers and self-confidence; and as it comes to realize that foreign policy is based on an imagery that derives in part from the needs of the industrial system; and as it realizes further that this tendency is organic; and as it sees that the only corrective is its own scrutiny and involvement and that this involvement is not a matter of choice but an obligation imposed by its own position in the economic and political structure, we can reasonably expect it to be more effective. Nothing in our time is more important."

INSIDE REPORT:

Deep South Floaters

BY ROWLAND EVANS AND ROBERT NOVAK

GREENVILLE, Miss.--The reason why Clarke Reed, Republican state chairman, is quietly rebuffing Gov. John Bell Williams's offer to convert to Republicanism helps reveal the amorphous shape of post-election political life in the Deep South.

Reed, a wealthy young businessman here who is becoming a leading Southern Republican, has no scruples whatever about the Governor's white-supremacist outlook. He has long envisioned a lily-white Republican party (majority) and a black Democratic party (minority) in Mississippi. What bothers Reed is that Williams might bolt the Republican party before his seat there is warm.

Another Mississippi Republican articulates Reed's worries this way: "I'm afraid the first time there's a picture in the paper of Dick Nixon shaking hands with some nigra, John Bell would say bye-bye."

Williams today fairly represents the bulk of Deep South white voters. Having found the national Democratic party utterly incompatible, they have been a floating, partyless mass through the 1960s, voting for Barry Goldwater in 1964 and switching to George Wallace in 1968, they have proved antithetical to the national majority.

Now, these Deep South floaters typified by John Bell Williams are eyeing, somewhat suspiciously, the forthcoming Nixon administration to see whether it has a place for them. The Republican leaders typified by Clarke Reed are eyeing, somewhat suspiciously, the ex-Democratic floaters to see if they really are ready to become loyal Republicans.

There is reason enough for Republicans to be suspicious of Williams. Stripped by the Democratic caucus of 20 years of Congressional seniority as punishment for endorsing Goldwater in 1964, then Congressman Williams made noises about becoming a Republica n in 1965 but finally ran for Governor as a Mississippi Democrat. Just before this year's Presidential campaign, he conferred secretly with Reed about the possibility of backing Nixon but then, as expected, supported Wallace instead.

When a late August private poll commissioned by the Republicans showed that Mississippi would be carried overwhelmingly by Wallace and Nixon would run a poor third, Reed abandoned any campaign here. Mississippi Republicans were silent this autumn, their money shipped to the national campaign, and Gov. Ronald Reagan of California was even discouraged from coming here in Nixon's behalf.

Besides recognizing reality, the non-combatant stance was designed not to anger supporters of Wallace (63 percent of the vote on Nov. 5). Having irrevocably discarded their Lincolnian birthright and rejected the Negro vote, the Mississippi Republicans now must cut into the Wallaceite red-neck vote to become a viable party here.

The non-combatant strategy bore fruits immediately after Nixon's victory with pre-Republican sounds from Wallace backers, notably John Bell Williams. His public statement that he might switch to the Republicans was followed by a telephone call from a Williams aide to Reed seeking assurances that the Governor would not be embarrassed by a repudiation if he embraced Republicanism.

But Reed, while saying nothing, is not about to turn his party over to the Governor's machine. Understandably enough, regular Republicans here have been pleading with Reed not to sanction a Williams takeover. Beyond that, however, is the doubt over how long Williams would remain a loyal Republican once Nixon handles his first civil rights crisis. Thus, Williams is not likely to turn Republican in the foreseeable future.

Without Williams, statehouse-oriented Democrats won't convert either. Moreover, Rep. Sonny Montgomery, a highly-regarded second-term Congressman who would prefer being a Republican won't switch in order to help protect committee chairmanships in Washington held by Mississippi Democrats. The best hope for converts is in the legislature (where influential State Sen. James Arden barnett turned Republican this week).

Despite the absence of a stampede to Republicanism, Wallace voters here have no other likely home. Hodding Carter III, the Greenville publisher who leads the state's loyalist Democrats, wants to expand loyalist ranks beyond Negroes and a handful of white liberals into the red-neck vote, but this is a goal that, if attainable, is a decade away. Few politicians here think Wallace can seriously build his American Independent Party on the state level.

Accordingly, the Mississippi majority remains partyless, alienated from the main stream of national politics. It may well eventually enter the Republican column, but based on the sterile minuet currently danced by Chairman Reed and Gov. Williams, that day seems some time off.

Night of Awareness

John Hickey

The Martin Luther King Social Action Council deserves to be commended for the Night of Inquiry it sponsored and conducted Friday night. The program brought campus notables from a variety of backgrounds and with a wide spectrum of interests together for an exchange of ideas that was informative, lively, and dignified.

The attendance and the degree of audience participation were surprising for one accustomed to the traditional UMass turnout of a half dozen people for anything that shows promise of considering an important question. No doubt, the events of last week helped to stir up the interest of a greater than usual number. Unfortunately, but inevitably, those who did come and were most vocal are already the best informed and most active members of the university community.

It is to be hoped that the enthusiasm and willingness to work for change that was displayed Friday night by a portion of the community will spread to arouse some of the campus sleepers to action.

The voice of the campus radicals was the most obvious at Friday's teach-in, but no apology is due to campus groups or individuals who are more to the center or the left. The opportunity for expression was equally available to them as to the more radical groups. Those representatives who did attempt to stake out a more moderate position were overwhelmed, not by numbers or noise, but by reason and conviction. In the face of critical comments and constructive proposals, both from the floor and from panelists such as SDS's Mike Minsky and Afro-Am's Didi Eastman, other panelists could find nothing better to offer than to urge respect for "The proper channels."

Thinking individuals and organizations should consider the comment of Dean Mark Noffsinger, who said, "We must stop masquerading behind the mask of liberalism. For too many, liberalism has come to mean the status quo."

Reflections

Rhetoric and Reality

Richard W. Story
Education Editor

It's the 20th century now - candles and even electricity have long been familiar; and Salem hung her last witch some years ago. We have the benefits of Christianity and the Great Society; and one might then suppose that the remanats of mystic mumbo-jumbo, evil spirits and conjured poltergeists would have been purged from our thinking and rhetoric. But this doesn't seem to be the case - they are found to linger on in supposedly up-to-the-minute analyses of the modern educational situation. The midnight panel at last weekend's Night of Inquiry is a case in point.

The announced topic of this particular panel was "curriculum reform" - I, for one, was led to believe (mistakenly, I found) that its subject would be a debate, however heated, of the merits and structure of the currrent educational experience. Several assorted campus figures arrayed themselves across the platform and commenced to do verbal battle with speakers from the floor - each side trying desperately to outdo the other in its invocation of demons and devils allegedly responsible for, and still directing, American society and education. Sitting with the panel, I was reduced to speechlessness by the tone of the discussion. It was an interesting hour and a half - there can be no denying that. It's only too bad that it never came within sighting distance of a meaningful discussion of the curriculum. The speeches were exciting - painting in great broad sweeping strokes this picture of nearly incredible wickedness and diabolical ingenuity - the place of the individual was reduced to below that occupied by the single molecule of the Golden Gate Bridge. The forces allegedly responsible for our present educational pickle were breath-taking in their magnitude and complexity. I suppose that such an analysis has a definite place in the study of our present situation - perhaps at an SDS pep rally - but it certainly can't suffice as an accurate or utilitarian basis for any meaningful efforts at curriculum revision.

Fortunately, the real situation with the curriculum is more easily grasped and understood than Friday's session might have indicated to the uninitiated. We know where our curriculum is, and we know, generally speaking, how it's come to be the way it is. An analysis invoking nothing any more exotic than the needs of the technostructure and the pressures of a graduate-oriented faculty seem to me to be most reasonable; and to offer the greatest promise of an analysis which can lead to the desired humanisation of the curriculum. The fault which I would lay on the principal speakers at this session is of not having done their homework before coming to speak. The materials for a viably-significant understanding of the present direction of American higher education are largely at hand already - they're detailed, and sometimes actually rather dull, reading. Truth sometimes is less interesting than fiction. But it's truth - the hard-core nitty-gritty analysis of real and specific determinants - that's going to provide the ammunition and impetus for the most significant understanding of our curriculum. I would commend this material to a wider readership than it has enjoyed so far on this campus.

The trouble, I fear, is that too many people have become too involved with the cant rhetorical analysis which sounds so good at a mass meeting - too many people have become so involved with the forest that they miss the trees. And it is, after all, with individual trees that any real lumbering operations is involved. The discussions at the meetings of the Academic Affairs Committee have not risen, nor do I suppose they will, to the grandiose level of the recent session at the north commons. They will, however, as will any others like them that focus on the more manageable details of actuality, proceed to a serviceable understanding of higher education; and hold the greatest potential for actual curriculum revision.

Campus Comment

Responsibility Of Black Power

To the Editor:

I am surprised and disappointed at the recent developments at the University of Massachusetts regarding the demands put forward by Black students following the unfortunate racial incident last week. I am surprised because I thought Black students would have had more "cool" and disappointed because I never expected them to trifle with the responsibility of Black Power. And that's all they're doing is trifling...

To extrapolate from an isolated incident involving criminal assault the need for such things as Black pyschiatrists criminal assault the need for such things as Black psychiatrists at the infirmary, money from the University for a Black arts festival, and rooms in the new student center sporting the names of Black heroes is pushing the right to protest real social ills to the nonsensical. And protest, especially via Black Power these days, is a no-nonsense matter. There is too much at stake.

Parading trivial if not phony issues as major ones in an effort to justify a public demonstration condemning racism and exhorting Black pride and dignity is, moreover, dangerous because it often alienates sympathetic Whites committed to the real issues of civil rights at the same time that it feeds the irrational fires of the backlash. When the basic issues and principles of civil and human rights are already hard for many people to accept because of ignorance and fear, padding them with dogmatic trivia does nothing but court disaster for the entire movement.

The academic community should combat this fear and ignorance, not encourage it. But if it is to be able to do this effectively students--ALL students--must abandon totally dogmatic stands and recognize the important issues, not dramatize the insignificant ones. The vehicle for doing this is dialogue, not the ultimatum. We can only shout "yes" and "no" back and forth at each other for so long before the system which affords us the opportunity to do so breaks down.

Another Minority Voices Demands

To the Editor:

Since unrest in minority groups is apparent, we, members of a persecuted minority group who are readers and fans of science fiction, present an ultimatum to the administration for the correction of our grievances. We demand:

1. Tenure of Chief Blasko on the campus police force to protect the campus from UFO harassment.

2. Forcible arming of the campus police force and the addition of fifteen new policemen who are former Marine Drill Sergeants or Green Berets.

3. The following courses to be included in next semester's curriculum and to be taught by professors who are science fiction fans:

Robotic Laws-Asimov's 3 Laws of Robotics
Subspace Physics
History of Middle Earth
Anatomy of the Worm Ouroborous
Rigel V Archaeology
Lemurian and Atlantean Economic Systems

4. On the day of a rocket launch, all classes to be cancelled.

5. Science Fiction fans shall not flunk out and must arbitrarily receive a 4.0 cume.

6. STAR TREK be made a required course.

7. Anyone who acts offensively to any science fiction fan, extee*, or BEM shall be brought before a reviewing board. If that person is found guilty, he, she, or it shall be expelled if a student or fired if personnel.

8. Rooms in the new campus center of old Clark Hall be named after science fiction and fantasy authors, comic book characters, extees, and BEMs.

9. Sensitivity courses to acquaint people and things with the mind-staggering joy of science fiction be made compulsory for the entire university community.

10. At least 10% of the university personnel be extees and BEMs. (laboratory mice or bugs?).

11. The 5% rule for out-of-state students be disregarded and that 7% of the incoming freshman class be either extees, BEMs, or science fiction fans.

12. The UFOs from Alpha Centauri 3 and the little green men from Mars demand an apology from the administration for the prevalent flying saucer and little green men from Mars insults (jokes). The little green men from Mars are actually big blue men from Venus who are oxygen-starved and the UFOs from Alpha Centauri 3 have been harassed by Air Force jets. The administration is given 82 hours to tear up the list of nonsense. OR ELSE.....

Smith College To Present A Lecture On View Of Eastern European Jewish Life

NORTHAMPTON - A view of Jewish life in Eastern Europe will be offered in a lecture at Smith College at 8:30 p.m. tomorrow.

The speaker for the event, to be held in Wright Hall, is considered an authority on Eastern European Jewish life. She is Mrs. Lucy Dawidowicz, a research analyst for the American Jewish Committee. Her topic will be "An American Jew Looks at East European Jewry."

Mrs. Dawidowicz is co-author of "Politics in a Pluralistic Society," and a frequent contributor to Commentary magazine and other journals. She is also the author of "The Golden Tradition," a book on Jewish life and thought in Eastern Europe. A New York Times review termed the book: ". . an ideological sampler, a stethoscope to the heartbeat of the Jews , reaction to their encounter with modern Europe, a record of the Jews' prismatic intellectual experience."

The event is part of a Smith College series on "Protraits of a Vanishing Era: Jewish Life in Eastern Europe." The series is being sponsored by the B'nai B'rith Hillel Foundations at Smith and at Amherst College in cooperation with the Northampton Jewish Cultural Center.

Greeks Aid Local Lions Club In Annual Charities Drive

Despite early wintry weather that left the campus covered with a blanket of slushy snow, several members of the Greek system at UMass aided the Lions Club of Amherst in their annual Charities Drive yesterday.

Brothers and pledges from Lambda Chi Alpha, Alpha Tau Gamma, Sigma Alpha Mu, and Delta Chi participated in the fund-raising campaign by selling light bulbs with Lions Club members.

Mr. Robert Cahillane, President of the Lions Club of Amherst, said, "The kids came through great. It made all the difference in the world in making the project go over."

The fund-raising campaign is an annual affair that helps support several local and state charities. Among these are the Amherst Boys' Club, Massachusetts Eye Research, and the Orthoptic Clinics in Springfield and Boston. The campaign also provides funds to purchase glasses for underprivileged children in the Amherst area.

HARRY CAPLAN LECTURE

"Memoria: The Treasure-House of Eloquence" is the title of a lecture to be given by Harry Caplan, Goldwin Smith professor emeritus of Classics at Cornell University, and presently visiting professor of Classics at Brandeis University. Lecture will be delivered at 8 pm in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union tomorrow night. The lecture will be followed by a reception in the same room. The public is invited. There will be no charge.

MATH DEPARTMENT LECTURE

The Department of Mathematics, in connection with its research program in the mathematical foundations of empirical science, will present a series of three lectures on scattering theory by the distinguished professor Josef M. Jauch. Prof. Jauch, who is currently director of the Institute de Physique Theorique, Universite de Geneve, Switzerland, is well known for his studies in the foundations of quantum physics. The titles, dates and places of his lectures are:

1. The delay-time operator for simple scattering systems, Mon., Nov. 18, Hasbrouck 20.
2. The asymtatic condition of scattering theory, Tues., Nov. 19, Hasbrouck 134.

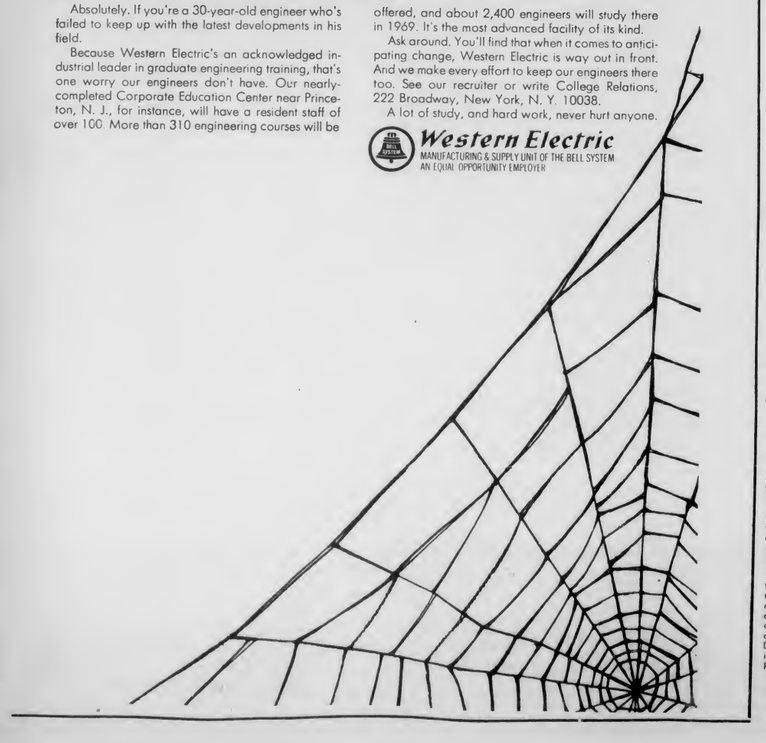
MARRIAGE

Lynn O'Connell, 69, Sigma Sigma Sigma to Peter Dohlquist, Amherst.

Is it possible to be passed by at 30?



Absolutely. If you're a 30-year-old engineer who's failed to keep up with the latest developments in his field.

Because Western Electric's an acknowledged industrial leader in graduate engineering training, that's one worry our engineers don't have. Our nearly-completed Corporate Education Center near Princeton, N. J., for instance, will have a resident staff of over 100. More than 310 engineering courses will be offered, and about 2,400 engineers will study there in 1969. It's the most advanced facility of its kind.

Ask around. You'll find that when it comes to anticipating change, Western Electric is way out in front. And we make every effort to keep our engineers there too. See our recruiter or write College Relations, 222 Broadway, New York, N. Y. 10038.

A lot of study, and hard work, never hurt anyone.

Crippled Booters End Season Happily Redmen Edge New Hampshire, 4-3

By WALT STACHURA
Senior Reporter

Finishing its season on a successful note, the UMass soccer team downed New Hampshire, 4 -3, Saturday morning at soggy varsity field. The victory gave the Redmen fourth place in the Yankee Conference with a 2 - 3 record.

Bruce Allen and Duane Brown paced the UMass scoring attack with two goals apiece while Rich Matuszczak had two assists. Mario Evirviades tallied twice for the Wildcats.

First half action was wild and wooly with the Redmen grabbing a 3-2 halftime bulge.

Evirviades opened the scoring early in the first quarter when his shot from the side of the net caught the far corner on a play that appeared to be offside.

Early in the second quarter, Brown knotted the score at 1. His shot rolled slowly into the net after he was set up along in front by a Matuszczak pass that threaded through the New Hampshire defense.

New Hampshire regained the lead two minutes after Brown's goal when Evirviades deflected a Jim Isaac corner kick into the net with his chest.

Brown tied the score with his second goal late in the quarter. He was set up in front by Dave Dec and Rich Matuszczak heads on a play that was beautiful to watch.

Two minutes later, Bruce Allen converted a Duane Brown rebound with his shot going into the far corner past UNH ... Bill Hill.

Allen started seco... half scoring with a high shot that Hill thought was going wide but it hooked into the upper corner of the net to give UMass a 4 - 2 edge.

The Redmen continued to press for most of the third quarter but were unable to score. The attack slowed when Matuszczak limped off the field with an injury to his good knee.

New Hampshire closed the gap to one goal midway through the final quarter when high-scoring wing Dave Parker booted a short shot into the goal from a scramble in front.

Although the Wildcats remained on the attack for the rest of the game, they were unable to penetrate the UMass defense and the Redmen walked off the field with a well earned win.

UMass coach Peter Broaca was pleased with the efforts of his team in the game. He liked the way that the Redmen never quit, especially after being down twice by a goal in the first half.

Drawing special praise from Broaca, were Matuszczak, Brown, and Allen for their fine play up front. It was the first time since the Boston College game early in the season that the Redmen were able to mount a sustained attack.

Field conditions for the game were wet and sloppy after the snow earlier in the week. Although the field was plowed there were many wet spots and puddles especially on the side away from Boyden.

Matuszczak nearly drowned in one puddle near the end of the half when he slipped and fell into the water. Both teams were muddy and wet by the time the game ended as the ball landed in a puddle.

New Hampshire closed out its season with a 6-6-1 record overall and 1-3-1 in the conference. UMass finished with a 4-6-1overall mark.

The tie came against Coast Guard last Saturday. UMass exploded for a two goal lead in the first half on goals by Brown and a penalty kick by Larry DeFelice.

Coast Guard fought back in the second half to tie the score at 2 - 2 late in the fourth quarter. The two teams battled through two overtimes but were unable to break the deadlock.

Six seniors saw their final action in a UMass uniform in the New Hampshire game. They were goalie Steve Kramer, co-capt's Tom Ward and Bob Dubiel, Bruce Allen, Bill Sanborn and Charlie Stacy.

NEW LONDON, CONN. - The Stockbridge School Rifle Team picked up its second win of the season on Saturday by downing the Coast Guard Academy JV marksmen 1117 to 1049.

Firing the intercollegiate course of 10 shots prone, 10 shots kneeling and 10 shots standing on the International targets, the Stockbridge victory was largely due to outshooting the New Londoners in the kneeling position.

Doug Proctor was high gun for Stockbridge with a total of 235, while NG (pronounced "ING) was top scorer for the Coast Guard Academy with 213 for the three positions.

Redmen Shut Out 16-0 Wildcats Tie For Crown

By MIKE CURRAN
Sports Editor

New Hampshire, sparked by the field goal kicking of Kurt Vollherbst and the running of Mike Shaughnessy, bowled over UMass 16 - 0 before a disappointing and disappointed crowd of 8000 at Alumni Stadium, Saturday.

For the Wildcats it meant a share of the Yankee Conference title with Connecticut, both teams finishing 4 -1 in the league, New Hampshire also has a fine 6 - 2 overall mark.

For the Redmen it was just another poor performance in a disasterous season. The shutout was the first suffered by UMass at home since 1960. The Redmen now stand at 2-7 with one more "game" to go.

UNH started slowly. UMass never started. The Redmen had better field position in the early going thanks to a Steve Rogers interception and a short Wildcat punt, but the offense couldn't move the ball at all.

A 37 yard jaunt by Shaughnessy gave New Hampshire the first scoring opportunity. UMass' defense tightened, though and a Chuck Kloubert field goal attempt against the wind was wide.

The Wildcat defenders contained the Redmen within the latter's 20-yard line for two series of downs and this paid off for the visitors early in the second quarter.

With a first and ten on the UMass 38, New Hampshire used the first of a number trick plays, a flea flicker pass from quarterback Ed Walsh to end Bob Robichaud to move to the 23.

Clutch tackling by Dennis Gray and Mike McArdle forced the invaders to settle for a Volherbst three pointer from 36 yards out.

After a good kick-off return by Steve Parnell, Roger Weibusch stepped in front of a Tim Adams pass at midfield and returned the ball to the UMass 35. Mark Toner racked up Walsh for a loss on third down but then the visitors pulled off a real cutie.

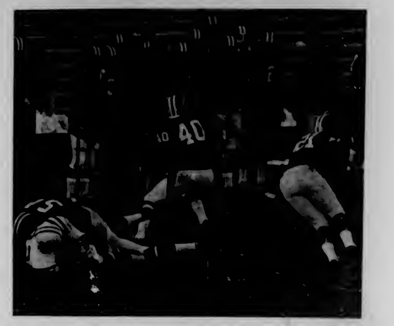
From punt formation on a fourth and fifteen situation Shaughnessy posing as a blocking back, took the snap and rambled 31 yards to the Redman nine. Vollherbst connected again three plays later, this one a 21 yarder putting New Hampshire ahead 6 - 0.

A 57 yard pass from Walsh to halfback Bill Phillips set up the one and only touchdown of the game. The play went from the UNH 29 to the UMass 14. A Walsh bootleg moved the ball to the two and then Walsh picked up the six points on a sweep.

The Redmen came up with their initial first down of the contest with 31 seconds left in the half. Bruce Cochrane had the honors as he picked up eight yards around right end.

Greg Kolinsky stopped the drive with an interception but the Redmen pulled off their best play of the day.

Steve Rogers intercepted his second aerial of the day at the UMass ten and moving downfield pitched back to Billy Frye at the 30, who then reversed direction and galloped to the 47 as the gun sounded.



New Hampshire was content to sit on the lead after intermission and the Redmen were going no place. Highlights of the third quarter for UMass fans were a first down pass from Adams to Don Young and a 52 yard punt by Rogers.

Wildcat Harry Koulouheras made a pretty one handed interception of a pass towards the close of the quarter to keep UMass in poor field position.

A none yard run by Craig Lovell in the opening seconds of the fourth quarter gave the Redmen some signs of life but the UNH defense wasn't about to let a piece of the beanpot slip away. They were gang tackling UMass runners before they got to the line of scrimmage.

The Wildcats added the final points of the game a few minutes later on a 32 yard field goat by Vollherbst. This one was set up by some fancy running by Phillips and Art Randlett.

UMass never came close to rallying. They just didn't have it Saturday afternoon.

Harriers Prepare For New York Meet

Today, Van Cortland Park in New York City is the site of the annual IC4A cross-country championships. The IC4A member colleges include schools as far west as Notre Dame, and Michigan St., as far north as Maine, and as far south as South Carolina. This year the IC4A race serves as a qualifing race for the NCAA (national championship). The top 50 runners and top 10 schools will qualify for the nationals.

UMass, who placed third in the New England championship last week, is in New York with hopes of making the top ten. Cross-country coach Ken O'Brien said hopefully, "We had set as a goal to finish fifth, sixth, or seventh as a team. However, with the injury to Paul Hoss our objective is to shoot for the top ten."

The Redmen will have a tough fight for the top ten with a lot of good teams in the total of 69 competing schools. "On paper Harvard has the best team but Villanova is always good in big meets," said O'Brien. He listed Georgetown, St. John's, Maryland, Michigan St., Notre Dame, Penn St., and UConn as other probable top ten finishers. "For us to complete the top ten we will have to beat Penn., Manhattan, Navy, Army, and Princeton," added the coach.

Speaking on his runners O'Brien continued, "Ron Wayne and Leo Duart have excellent chances of qualifying for the NCAA. Also, Marc Gelinas on the basis of his 14th place finish in the New Englands, is a possible qualifier. The difficulty of the course will help him; he likes tough courses." Experienced senior Charlie Lang and inexperienced sophom Tom Derderian, who complete the top five, both ran real well in their last competition and will be counted on heavily for the team to make the top ten. The important sixth and seventh positions on the team will be manned by Larry Paulson and Diego Gonzalez.

"Duart and Wayne will have to be in the top 20," said the head man, "with the next three men getting 50, 60 and 80 for us to make the top ten. This will give us 230 points. Under 300 points will probably put us in the top ten."

The individual favorite in the race according to the UMass coach is Holy Cross junior Art Dulong. The Crusader super runner won the race last year as a sophomore in a record time. And as the coach pointed out Dulong's New England course time is 28 seconds faster this year than last. The chief competition for Dulong will be presented by Steve Stageburg of Georgetown, who was runnerup to Dulong last year. Also Jerry Richey of Pitt, Terry Donnally of Villanova and Steve Jentry of Penn St. should be challenging for the title.

The tough five mile race could be decided on the appropriately named half mile long Cemetery Hill, a mile from the finish.

The only Little Redman in the frosh race will be Wayne Lucas. Lucas qualified for the race with his 11th place finish in the New Englands last week.

Heidi Scores

NEW YORK (AP) - Thousands of kids settled happily in their chairs to watch Heidi Sunday night just moments after their fuming, football - loving fathers leaped to their feet in outrage and reached for the telephone.

The start of Heidi at 7 p.m. EST, cut off to most of the country the final minute of the New York Jets - Oakland Raiders game being telecast by NBC from Oakland.

And it was no ordinary minute that was cut from the view of football lovers in the Midwest, South and East.

New York went ahead 32 - 29, with 1:05 minutes left, and the fans at home saw the Raiders return the kickoff and run one play. What they didn't see were two Oakland touchdowns.

Julian Goodman, president of NBC, said in a statement:

"It was a forgiveable error committed by human beings who were concerned about the children expecting to see Heidi at 7 p.m. I missed the end of the game as much as anyone else."

The mistake led to such a deluge of telephone calls to NBC headquarters that an operator said the fuses in the switchboard blew out.

Frosh Gridmen Finish Unbeaten Year

By STEVE SHAMBAN
Staff Reporter

Dick Cummings , who scored the winning touchdown against BC, did it again Friday with a two yard burst off tackle to enable the UMass frosh gridsters to top a gritty bunch of New Hampshire Wildcats 24-20 Friday afternoon at Durham. The win gave the Little Redmen an undefeated season with a 5-0 record.

Cummings' score in the last quarter capped a 60 yard drive which boosted UMass into the lead after being down 17-20 at halftime. The big play in the drive came on third and 14 when Marty Evans threw a side line look-in pass to Wayne Casey. The play worked for 20 yards and set the stage for the winning score.

UNH dominated the first half holding UMass to minus yards on offense. Jim Cantin twice capped long drives with touchdown runs of 12 and 13 yards. Craig Scott scored once from two yards out to account for the Wildcat's 20 points as one extra point attempt was unsuccessful.

Only two blocked punts enabled the Little Redmen to stay in the game. Jim Kiley blocked one which Chuck Dorr recovered on the UNH eight. Two plays later, Art Harris rammed the score in from the two. Carl Dambman blocked another punt at the 20 which led to a touchdown by John Hulecki on a 23-yard pass from Marty Evans.

Mike Gagnon, who kicked the day's three extra points for UMass, capped the first half scoring for the frosh with a 20 yard field goal.

If the first half belonged to UNH, the second belonged to the Little Redmen. Despite scoring only one touchdown, they moved the ball well and played tough on defense. "We don't seem to play aggressive football until we're behind the eight ball," said frosh coach Dave Kelley, "and that's what happened in this game. We got psyched up and held them to two first downs in the second half."

"New Hampshire was a good, spirited team with some good individuals. But, they were not as good overall as BC or UConn and we beat them in the second half."

And that's what counts, Redman football fans, keep the faith! A 5-0 record by the frosh says things have got to get better for next year.

Both Sides Call Week of Discussions Fruitful; A Better University Will Result, Says Lederle

BY DON EPSTEIN Managing Editor

UMass administrators and representatives of the campus Afro-Am Organization concluded their present round of discussions Monday afternoon with both sides agreeing that the meetings were fruitful and will result in a better university community.

In a joint news conference following an hour closed door meeting, the fifth since they began Monday, Nov. 11, both President John W. Lederle and Afro-Am spokesman Robert Henderson agreed that the meetings were necessary despite the hoax which initially led to the discussions.

Lederle, in his opening statement, said that some tensions have existed on the campus which needed immediate attention. As a result of this dialogue, progress has resulted, Lederle said. "This is what an educational institution is all about. We'll be a better University as a result."

In his opening statement Henderson said: "The student Afro-Am Organization has been profoundly impressed with the honesty and sincerity of the administration in dealing with the demands which were presented. We feel that the discussions have been fruitful, and of course, they will continue in smaller groups. We also feel that the administration response to our demands will be one that will be acceptable to the entire University community.

"We are highly pleased that an effective channel of communication has been established between the administration and black students. We hope that the general university community and the public at large will have a better understanding of what we are trying to accomplish ie, one cohesive university community."

It was disclosed that in order to continue further study of some of the proposals several committees will be established consisting of administrators, faculty members, and students. A monitoring committee will be set up to "watch over the other committeess" and to insure that "no stone is left untouched. "The members of the monitoring committee include, Tom Minogue, President of the Graduate Student Senate; Paul Silverman, Presideni of the Student Senate; Robert Henderson and Chuck Reed representing the Afro-Am Organization; Dr. Jeremiah Allen, Associate Provost; and Glenn Gordon, secretary of the faculty senate.

Following the initial statements, both sides discussed the list of 20 demands originally given to Lederle on Nov. 8. The first demand a public apology from the administration for the beating of the black visitor and his white Mass friend was ignored since it has been discovered the alleged beating never occured.

Concerning the campus police force, demand number two originally asked for the firing of two officers, the hiring of a minimum of 15 black police, and sensitivity training for all police, Associate Provost Allen answered for the university. He said the hiring of any black policemen or security officer will have to wait until a vacancy occurs on the force. "We'll be very happy to have black fire, police or security guards," he said.

As for the disarming of campus police, Allen said this directly involves the "larger community." He referred to the Student Senate's decision last Wednesday to disarm the police in certain instances. This action will be reconsidered in tomorrow's Senate meeting. Dean of Students William F. Field said that he thought the term "disarming the police" is improper. "The weapons will be available when necessary," he said. According to Field, further study on this proposal will continue in order "to come up with an operational system that is best for the campus."

Concerning the demand that Police Chief Alexander Blasko and Officer Peter Slenkiewez be fired, Allen said that if charges are presented against these men, they will be brought before the proper university board.

Prof. Atron Gentry of the school of education and Dr. Joseph Haven of the health service will meet with members of Afro-Am in an attempt to isolate areas where problems have developed between the campus police and students.

UMass Administrators and representatives of the Afro-Am Organization held a joint news conference Monday afternoon following their fifth closed door meeting. The discussion resulted from a list of 20 demands presented to President John W. Lederle. Dean of Students, William F. Field, Senate President Paul Silverman, Robert Henderson, William Smith and an unidentified member of Afro-Am discuss one of the points of the news conference. (MDC photo by Ken Emery)

Another move to help eliminate tension between campus police and students was outlined by Dean Field. Whenever it is necessary for the police to intervene in potential serious situations, a member of the student personnel office will be summoned to act as a go between. "One shot at the wrong time and we are in trouble we won't be able to get out of," Field said.

The Dean also announced the formation of a campus civilian review board to hear any future complaints against the police. "This review board will benefit all elements of the community," he said.

Concerning meetings to explain the consequences of any racist behavior, Field said they will be held in every dorm in order to develop and explain the basic limits of conduct. The meetings will not be compulsory. However, he noted that attendance would benefit each student.

As for introduction of black curriculum, Allen said that the members of Afro-Am will draw up a list of proposals which will be forwarded to the monitoring committee which will then submit the proposals to the faculty senate academic matters committee. Last April, the faculty senate voted to institute courses in black history and black culture.

Allen said the recruitment of black teachers is "recognized by all concerned as a problem which has to be attacked."

Demand number five asked for black doctors in the infirmary.

Dean Field said that Dr. Gage told him that of the 7000 doctors graduating from medical school last year, only 107 were black. He said when vacancies occur in the infirmary, "we will solicit black doctors." President Lederle said "it's one of the injustices of society" why there are so few black professional men.

In order to increase the number of out of state black students admitted to the University within the 5 percent rule, John Childs, assistant dean of admissions, has been assigned to work with black students to help identify potential out of state black students. Also, the group will solicit private foundations for possible scholarship aid when necessary.

Sensitivity training for house officers and I.F.C. officers has already begun. Paul Silverman explained that it will not be compulsory, however, "we'll make it available to anyone who wants it."

Concerning demands eight and eleven, asking more money for the Afro-Ams and for a black arts festival, Silverman said the group will draw up a specific funding proposal which will be brought before the Senate, DVP, and Fine Arts Committee.

The demand which has caused the most confusion, no black students in the CCENS program, to flunk out was dwelled upon in length by the group. The administration agrees that no black freshmen in the experimental program should be flunked out. However, it was also discussed whether or not the same policy should be applied to all freshmen. As a result a thorough review of the present policy concerning the academic status of failing first semester freshmen will be conducted by Dean Field and Dr. Allen. Instead of just sending a letter to the student being flunked out, "perhaps he should be talked to, advised, or consulted first," Field said. "More individual consideration is needed instead of the ordinary mass production flunk out letter."

Field complimented the black students for bringing to the administration's attention this weak point that needed immediate attention.

Demand number ten asked for permission to use Mills House as a center for Afro-Am activities. Field reported that several weeks ago John Messenger, central area coordinator, began to study the feasibility of using Mills House as an area to provide "social space" for other dorms in the central area in addition to housing a small number of foreign and graduate students.

Lederle, in reply of the demand for more black administrators, said, "we have a policy of no discrimination. We will hire anyone who is qualified to be on the payroll. We hope Afro-Am will draw to our attention any prospective candidates for these positions." Field also said that the university will look for more black student counselors.

Concerning sensitivity training for professors, Dr. Allen said a group is being formed to work with the faculty on this matter. In addition there will be some "human personnel" training for certain student personnel.

Both groups agreed that progress had been made already in the area of student participation on academic matters. Henderson stated he would like to see a group of black students serve as a moral reception committee for incoming black staff in order to introduce and welcome them to the black community.

Lederle and Field both cited instances where doubtful new recruiters to the University were encouraged by student interest in their application. Lederle mentioned that students were on the committee which picked the new UMass-Boston chancellor and that prospective candidates liked the idea.

Senate President Silverman said that Sue Brady, chairman of the Student Union Governing Board, has invited the Afro-Am Organization to submit a list of names for new rooms in the campus center to the appropriate sub-committee.

History of Ed. Students Urged to 'Do Their Own Thing'

"This is YOUR world. Do you want to take part?"

The above question might be said to be the underlying philosophy of Dr. Emma Cappelluzzo's Section of Education 251-"History of Education." In an attempt to bridge the gap between theory and practice, the history and philosophy of education are being combined with community involvement. Judging from reactions of the students, the course is a success; it began with an enrollment of 150, but the current enrollment is 200.

The first four weeks of the course consisted of in-depth field methodology. Students were taught the tools and techques of data research as well as sociological-anthropological background by Dr. Capelluzzo and her eight graduate assistants. This information would later be used when the students actually went out to participate in the community. Towards this end, they were also taught verbal and non-verbal communication. They also received a kit which provided them with crucial scholarly information regarding issues in education and community involvement in urban and rural areas.

Thus prepared with the theoretical background, the students were ready to go out to do "their thing." It might be noted here that there were no formal lectures after the preparatory four weeks. If questions did arise, the staff was available every Wednesday during the usual class meeting time for assistance. (They were also on call 24 hours a day.)

What the students did once they left the campus was entirely up to them. Among the opportunities for community involvement were participation in the activities of these organizations: Springfield Public Schools, Northern Educational Service, Springfield Action Committee, Dunbar Community Center, Neighborhood Youth Corps, Spanish-American Union, Model Cities, Council of Churches of Greater Springfield, Community Tensions Center at Springfield College, Wesson Memorial Hospital, Springfield Science Museum, Superior Court of Hampden County, District Court of Springfield, and the Probate Court of Hampden County. An attorney was available for special arrangements concerning the last three. Other community agencies in Albany, Boston, and Worcester were also chosen by students. They were watching suburban communities such as Longmeadow, Mass., too, to see how they differed from urban communities.

for "there is a responsibility for suburban as well as urban communication," said Dr. Cappelluzzo.

By working in these programs, by watching with a critical eye what is happening in their world, students develop an awareness of the human being in the 20th century by participating as human beings. "Unless we begin to involve students in the community before they leave college, we are compounding the grave issues of teaching," Dr. Cappelluzzo said.

On November 13, there was a group meeting of the entire class during which students had a chance to hear what others had been doing. Field work will resume until December 2. On that day the students will return to campus. Groups of nine or ten students will have four meetings with a staff member. Within these groups an important aspect of the course, communication, will take place, as each student relays his experiences in any way he chooses, be it film, prose, poetry, slides, etc. The presentation of the "journal" will be videotaped and played back so that the student has a chance to see for himself his own effectiveness in getting across his experience.

Dr. Cappelluzzo began planning the course in July as "an intellectually defensible, creative alternative" to traditional courses. She said that the social sciences have a great deal to offer education. In providing skills of data collection plus theory, "we begin to develop sensitivities and self-awareness." Dr. Cappelluzzo stressed the fact that she was "not interested in gimmicks, but in a sound theoretical framework and the opportunity to explore the community."

One possible outcome of the course is that it might provide a weeding-out process of "self-selection," whereby some students might choose not to major in education or to become teachers. Those who do will be most fortunate in having had participated in such a relevent, challenging, and self-fulfilling program.

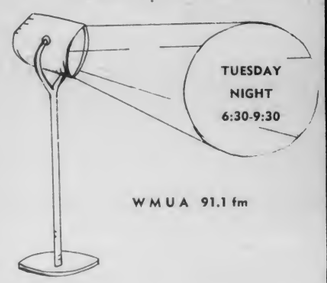
Demand 16 stated, Any staff person who acts in an offensive manner toward any black student will be brought before a reviewing board containing some black students. Dr. Allen replied, "we want an atmosphere where people will be free from being treated with discourtesy, especially discourtesy with a racial basis."

"We need some sort of an agreement of what kinds of behavior are inappropriate to the campus community, "Allen continued. "We need to establish a review board to hear complaints, but at the same time protect the rights of those accused."

The proposed conduct code will apply to all members of the university community in order to protect "any person on the campus from being subjected to improper bahavior." The monitoring committee will be responsible to establish the code.

Demands 17 and 18 were discussed jointly. Beginning this summer there will be a black-white sensitivity orientation for all incoming freshmen.



Concerning the asked for meeting with the Board of Trustees, Lederle said, "We don't have a Columbia here. Our trustees meet with students frequently." The President referred the black students to the Student Affairs Committee, chaired by Louis Lyons. A meeting will soon be held with this trustee subcommittee.

As for demand 20, asking for a clear explanation of sanctions to be taken against any dorm or fraternity which shows any form of racist behavior, Field said that

Elections Will Be Held Today For Food Services Employees

By RICHARD LANE
Senior Reporter

UMass Business Manager Gerald Grady has announced that an election will be held today for 353 qualified employees of UMass Food Services. The voting will take place in Room 0 of Boyden from 10:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m. and is supervised by the Massachusetts State Labor Relations Board.

According to Mr. Grady the election's purpose is to decide "Who is to represent the workers at negotiating contracts with the administration." Those workers voting will be employees of Food Services in the Student Union, Infirmary, and dining commons.

The workers will be choosing between the MSEA (Mass State Employees Assoc.), the AFL-CIO (Local 1776 of State, County and Municiple Employees) as their collective bargaining agent. They may also vote for neither and negotiate directly with the administration themselves.

This election will mark the first for food services in selecting a bargaining agent. On April 27 of last spring such an election was conducted but invalidated by the State Labor Relations commission.

Grady told the COLLEGIAN that the university administration is " pleased to have an agency selected so that we can go on to the business of contract negotiations."

Food services is the last of the University's seven labor units to vote ona bargaining agency and thus, Grady concluded, the "we are not fighting it."

The University Business manager said election results would be made public at 4:30.

the sanctions already exist as outlined in the Student Handbook, however, every residence hall will once again be informed of the sanctions.

Most of the demands will be discussed further in smaller committees in the weeks ahead.

Lederle concluded the conference stating that conditions here are, although better than most places, not ideal. However, he said, "we'll work to make them ideal."

Smith, Audubon Society To Show Wildlife Film

"Mexican Adventure," the second of a series of four Audubon wildlife films, will be shown at Smith College Wednesday (November 20).

The film-lecture, sponsored by Smith College and the Arcadia Audubon Society, will be at 7:30 p.m. Sage Hall.

Naturalist C. P. Lyons is the lecturer and producer of this film. The motion picture takes the viewer on a "field trip" through snowcapped peaks, smoking volcanoes, deep canyons, thick jungles and sunny beaches.

Tickets for each program may be purchased on the Smith College campus at the Biological Sciences Club in Burton Hall and at the Calendar Office in College Hall. Tieckets may also be bought at Arcadia Wildlife Sanctuary, Easthampton, Mass, and at the door on the evening of the lecture.

State Universities, Land Grant Committee on Urban Problems

WASHINGTON (CPS) - The nation's colleges and universities have taken a "finger in the dike" approach to solving the "urban crisis." Individual institutions have developed projects with little or no knowledge of what others are doing. This isolation and ignorance has prevented regional or national cooperation in high education's attack on urban ills.

Now the National Association of State Universities and Land Grant Colleges (NASULGC) has established a Committee on Urban Problems to serve a s a clearinghouse for inner-city projects.

Announcement of the new committee was made at NASULGC's annual convention here last week. A good deal of the meeting's program delt with the university's role in urban change. The groups officials attached special significance to the establishment of the clearinghouse because of the agreed necessity for solutions to urban problems, and because of the Association's history.

NASULGC president-elect Fred H. Harrington of the University of Wisconsin explained that the land grant system was established in 1862 to provide special opportunity for the poor people of that time - farmers and mechanics.

The old land grant association, which merged in 1963 with two other state university groups to form the NASULGC, was the main representative of schools involved in solving the problems of an agricultural society.

With the advent of urbanization, the land grant association gradually moved into the area of urban problems. It has had a number of committees dealing with various aspects of cities and minorities. "Now," said Dr. Harrington, "we must tie them all together, and view the enormous present and future problem of higher education's relationship to the city."

"Since we do have this problem-solving background, since we have this tradition of serving people and of leading the poor and disadvantaged into higher education, we feel that this is a matter of some consequence." In short, state universities are now applying the agricultural extension idea to urban life.

One member of the clearing house committee is David Dickson, a vice president of the nation's newest and only completely urban land-grant college, Federal City College in Washington.

During a program on urban functions of the university, Dr. Dickson stressed that higher education "must stay open to the city and to exasperated blacks, and meet problems head-on with hard reason." Attacking narrow ivory-towerism, he said, " We can no longer sequester ourselves from the stench and volcanic frustrations and hatred which the denial of the American dream of equality for all men has aroused."

Other committee members are William Garrison, head of the Urban Studies Program at the University of Illinois' Chicago Circle campus; Charles Vivier, vice chancellor of the University of Wisconsin at Milwaukee; Mark Ferber, special assistant to the president of the University of California at Berkeley.

Robert C. Wood, an urban specialist said that universities can help improve local government by stimulating and training manpower. Universities can work to make citizen participation in urban affairs more effective. And they can conduct basic inquiries into the concept of urban development, helping to answer the questions about the kinds of cities we want.

The state universities and land grant colleges are getting a late start in providing answers to questions about the quality of American urban life.

NASULGC officials talk about coordinating urban projects, but they didn't bother to consult the American Association of State Colleges and Universities (AASCU) which was meeting with it. The NASULGC clearinghouse committee could have gotten its thing together with AASCU's Urban Affairs Task Force, which has essentially the same goals.

It wants to end isolation in urban problem - solving, but it begins by ignoring an existing group that could be helped by close ties. If the clearinghouse is to make a meaningful contribution, it can't be just another finger in the dike,

Individual Relevance

"Relevance in the curriculum" may easily be the most overworked single phrase in the lexicon of curriculum discussion. On its surface, the idea seems simple and agreeable enough. After all, in a certain not too strained sense, it is to many of the great ideas and themes of the Western tradition that the present curriculum here (and elsewhere) is supposed to be so relevant. It might well be difficult to construct a curriculum not relevant to SOMETHING or other.

The answer is, of course, that the curriculum must be relevant to life here and now in the last third of this century. Since the so-called "great ideas" are a minimum of one hundred years old, they can be excluded from contemporary relevance. But on the other hand, a curriculum most relevant to the major forces of today would consist largely of business-related content-one has only to read Galbraith, "The New Industrial State," to see this all too clearly. So, an automatic relevance to just anything at all that's current won't work.

Yet a further tack sometimes taken in discussions of just what this needed relevance is to be is that which calls for individual relevance. This is the largest, most complex, and most often invoked sort of relevance. There are difficulties with this approach too. There are strong and compelling philosophical arguments which, if applied to the most developed form of this personal-relevance argument, can demonstrate conclusively how sterile and isolating is a strictly personal system - whether of feeling, sensation, or "relevance."

The problems can be continued and multiplied. For every definition of relevance that has so far been offered - for every tentative proposal to introduce an element of supposed relevance - there are problems, whether with interpretation, definition, or implementation. There are no easy answers - or at least none which have thus far surfaced on this campus.

I do not, despite possible appearances to the contrary, wish to cry doom to all efforts to cope with this problem of relevance. I do not wish, for even one minute, to suggest that it is not a crucial issue. It is. It is one to which some resolution must be found; and which avoids the pat cliches of so much past discussion. I urge all who feel they have something to say on this question of the relevance of their education to do so, publicly, for the edification and betterment of our common cause. We can do better than we have so far - it requires an effort on the part of every single student here to contribute to the discussion and resolution of a crucial and pressing issue.

"I See The Lame Ducks Are Flying Again"

INSIDE REPORT:
The Rocky Question

BY ROWLAND EVANS AND ROBERT NOVAK

WASHINGTON - Shortly after the election, a leading Southern Nixonite was so worried by reports that President-elect Nixon's Cabinet would reflect a liberal tinge that he telephoned John Mitchell, Nixon's former campaign manager who is now chief talent scout for the soon-to-be-named Nixon Cabinet.

The Southern Republican told Mitchell that what disturbed him most was the report that Nixon planned to name Gov. Nelson Rockefeller of New York as Secretary of Defense.

To Nixon's conservative supporters, said the Southerner, the appointment of Rockefeller would spread gloom and pessimism both North and South.

Mitchell, replying in a conciliatory vein, said nothing directly about Rockefeller. But he assured the Southern Republican that Nixon still stood squarely behind his pledge at the Miami Beach convention not to betray the South.

The Southerner ended his brief talk with Mitchell greatly mollified. But in fact, far from settling the matter, the conversation only underscored how absolutely crucial to the fate and direction of the Nixon administration is the question whether Nixon does or does not offer his old Republican foe a top spot in the Nixon administration.

Rockefeller is the quintessential symbol of the liberal, anti-Nixon, eastern-establishment wing of the Republican party. As such, it is Rockefeller who, for opposite reasons, arouses the most intense emotion among conservative and liberal party leaders.

"I'd rather have some left-wing Democrat than Nelson Rockefeller," one Bourbon Republican from Illinois told us. In the back of his mind, a myth (wholly erroneous) is already taking form that blames Rockefeller for Nixon's abysmal performance in New York state on Election Day.

"It's not all that important about Rockefeller as one person," a liberal Republican Senator says, "but as a symbol. What Nixon does about Nelson will tell us whether this Administration is going to be open-ended or a tight little conservative clique."

Nixon and Rockefeller have not had a single serious talk about the future. Their only contact since the election, in fact, came in the wee hours of Nov. 6, before Nixon's victory was certain. Nixon telephoned the Governor at his Manhattan apartment to thank him for his help during the campaign and, in a glancing reference, said he would need Rockefeller's help in the future.

Even Nixon's closest associates claim they don't know what the President-elect has in mind for Rockefeller, if anything. But the way they talk about Rockefeller--calling him first "very controversial" and only second "symbolic"--indicates some real reluctance by Nixon to invite him into the Administration.

Moreover, with the conservative Mitchell now having been placed in charge of the Cabinet-level talent hunt, Rockefeller's fate inside the Nixon camp may not be in wholly friendly hands. It was Mitchell, for example, who was Gov. Spiro Agnew's chief protagonist for the Vice Presidential nomination at the Miami Beach convention.

Although Mitchell has never revealed his inner thoughts about Rockefeller, some conservatives on the Nixon staff talk privately about finessing the Governor by naming an establishment Democrat to the Pentagon and banker brother David Rockefeller to the Treasury.

But there are two obstacles to this solution. In the first place, David Rockefeller is about to take over active management of Chase Manhattan from outgoing board chairman George Champion and would find it difficult to come to Washington.

More important, such influential Nixon advisers as Lt. Gov. Robert Finch of California, and other moderates, say privately that Nelson Rockefeller must have "first refusal" rights before any offer is made to David.

Further complicating Nixon's all-important decision is whether Gov. Rockefeller even wants a Cabinet post in the Nixon administration. Close friends in New York say flatly he does not.

But that may simply be self-protection. If President Nixon, for example, gave Secretary of Defense Rockefeller a powerful policy mandate over the Pentagon of the kind that John F. Kennedy gave to Robert McNamara, Rockefeller might find the offer irresistible.

Whatever Nixon's decision, and Rockefeller's reaction, none of the staffing problems now confronting the President-elect in ever growing complexity comes close to matching the Rocky question.

Campus Comment

It's Time To Realize

To the editor:

I find it difficult to believe that such indiscreet ignorance still exists among certain individuals within an "educated community," such as the campus of the University of Massachusetts. I specifically refer to the seemingly satirical letters of Mr. Milinowsky and Mr. J. Scanlom, which were printed on November 13th and 14th respectively.

It is highly impudent for anyone to make a direct comparison between black people and people who are Polish or who have beards. It is about time that these two men and others having similar viewpoints realize, that the black minority are not discriminated against because of their national origin or because of the relative abundance of their physical appendages, but because of the color of their skin.

I am quite sure that ALL students, who have been involved in the recent demonstrations and negotiations are as repulsive as I am towards these two ultimatums, which are no doubt uncalled for. They are not only evidence of poor judgement and poor taste on the part of these individuals, but as such, could have quite undesirable repercussions.

Hill To Speak At Amherst On Religion In The South

"Religion and the Solid South" will be the title of a lecture to be delivered at Amherst College on November 20. Professor Samuel S. Hill, Jr. of the University of North Carolina will speak in the Babbott Room (Octagon) at 7:30 p.m.

A native of Richmond, Virginia, Professor Hill graduated from Georgetown College in 1949 and received his M.A. from Vanderbilt University and his Ph.D. from Duke University. A member of the department of religion at the University of North Carolina since 1960, he has also held positions at Stetson University and as pastor of the Burlington Baptist Church, Burlington, Ky.

A specialist in the history and sociology (phenomenology) of American, and especially southern American religious thought, Professor Hill is the author of numerous papers and articles dealing with the problems of the southern Christian churches in such areas as racial integration. His most recent book, "Southern Churches in Crisis," was published by Holt, Rinehart and Winston in 1967.

Professor Hill received a Rotary International Fellowship in 1955 for a year's study at Cambridge University in England. Among other academic honors, he was the recipient of a post-doctoral fellowship from the Society for Religion in Higher Education for study of American intellectual history at Harvard. The University of North Carolina honored him in 1964 with its Tanner Award for excellence in undergraduate teaching.

"THE ANCIENT ONE" TO BE DISCUSSED AT WED. EVE. LECTURE

Avatar Meher Baba, known around the world as the ancient one, will be the subject of discussion at a talk to be given in the Berkshire Room at The University of Massachusetts on Wednesday, November 20th at 8:30 p.m. Speakers will be Bruce Hoffman and Lee Adams. New York Baba devotees. Admission is free.

Meher Baba, who has observed silence for over 40 years, has declared unequivocally, "I am the Ancient One. I was Rama, I was Krishna, I was this one, I was that one, and now I am Meher Baba"! He has further stated that when he breaks his silence, ALL WILL KNOW that he is the Avatar of the age.

Baba is giving hints that the breaking of his silence, which will be the signal for his public manifestation, is fast approaching, and could come at any time now.

Meher Baba has travelled throughout India giving his spiritual blessing to hundreds of thousands of all castes, travelled to the west many times and visited several countries. He is especially fond of the poor and the Lepers. As many as seven thousand people come to him in one day seeking his darshan. His followers are in virtually every country and now number in the millions.

Cooperative Research Programs Characterize College of Agric.

Interdisciplinary research - based not only on the resources of its own 11 departments but on those of other schools and colleges on campus as well - characterizes scientific investigation in the College of Agriculture at the University of Massachusetts, the 1967-68 annual report of the college indicates.

Faculty research grants for the college during 1967-68 numbered 81 with a total face value of $1,759,000, College of Agriculture Dean A. A. Spielman states in his report to University President John W. Lederle.

Although research projects in the college vary according to current needs and approach, Dean Spielman says, all are concerned with the solution of problems affecting the well-being of citizens and the economy of the state.

Examples of cooperative research with a unified approach include: investigation of the physiology of reproduction involving the departments of veterinary and animal sciences, zoology and biochemistry; a research - based institute for high school teachers on water pollution by the Institute of Agricultural and Industrial Microbiology in the department of environmental sciences finds the College of Arts and Sciences and the Schools of Engineering and Education cooperating; and four college departments - - entomology, plant pathology, forestry and wildlife management, and plant and soil sciences - - jointly investigating various aspects of the etiology of maple tree decline.

Financial support for research comes from the National Science Foundation, the National Institutes of Health, other federal agencies, industry and foundations.

Federal agencies account for the most support with a total of $347,281 and the second highest number of research grants (28).

The National Institutes of Health provided total face value support of $223,876, and industry and foundations $228,769 along with the highest number of individual grants (40).

The largest single grant is in the department of plant and soil sciences -- a five-year contract of $210,000 from the Massachusetts Department of Public Works and the Bureau of Public Roads to support roadside development research. The department of food science and technology has grants totaling $178,947; followed by forestry and wildlife management with $316,300; environmental sciences $265,995; and veterinary and animal sciences, $273,770.

Mount Holyoke Program Ups Black Enrollment

A program to "increase substantially black enrollment at Mount Holyoke," conceived by the Afro-American Society in cooperation with a number of faculty and administrators, has been given the go-ahead by the Board of Trustees of the College.

The Afro - American Society learned that the Five College Committee on Social Responsibility was seeking to establish a similar program on a larger scale and realizing the enormous advantages of utilizing the facilities of other institutuions in the Valley the Afro-Americans met with the Five-College committee and presented a broader program than their original proposal.

The enlarged program is "designed to use the resources of many segments and goups of the participating schools, and carries the promise of increased cooperation and thus increased understanding anoung these various groups," according to Beverly Butler '70 of Chicago and Yvonne Watford '70 of South Ozone Park, N.J., co-chairmen of the Mount Holyoke Afro-American Society.

The Mount Holyoke trustees have authorized the further development of the proposal for the summer program and the solicitation of foundation support for it. The Board further approved the establishment of 10 tuition grants for students from western Massachusetts enrolled in the program and admitted to Mount Holyoke at the end of the first summer. It is anticipated that these students will live with families in South Hadley and the trustees have authorized the expenditure necessary to cover the board of these students in College domitories.

The specific details of the program are still under development but it is anticipated that 250 students, both male and female, will be enrolled in the program beginning this summer.

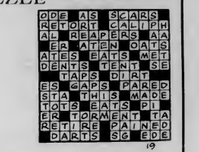
Educ. Committee Discusses 'The Aesthetic Approach'

On Thursday November 21 the Committee for Aesthetic Education will sponsor a 5 hour marathon starting at 1:00 p.m. emphasizing the importance of an aesthetic approach in all phases of learning.

Titled "The Artist as Teacher: The Teacher as Artist," the program will include panel discussions by practicing artists and teachers, slide shows, ceramic demonstrations, and films. Faculty from the 5 college area including Robert Mallary, internationally known sculptor, David Batchelder, artist at Smith, and Ryan Drum of the UMass Botany Department will be featured.



The program is part of an attempt by the School of Education to encourage an aesthetic approach to all learning experiences including those areas of science usually thought to be apart from any aesthetic treatment.

The program on Thursday, organized by Sidney Poritz of the Art Department, is a cooperative effort between the School of Education and the Art department.

Poorest Record Since 57 Becker To Miss BC Bash

By PETER PASCARELLI
Assistant Sports Editor

Vic Fusia, looking back at his worst season, and looking toward his toughest opponent reflected upon Saturday's loss, possibly his team's worst performance, with disappointment yesterday.

UMass' seventh loss to New Hampshire featured a Redman offense that rolled up a whopping 62 yards, three first downs and no points. The Redmen did not cross the Wildcat 40 yard line all day in what was unbelievable display of futility.

Fusia had intended to run a lot Saturday, seeking a ground game that has been lacking and also because he had confidence that his team could beat New Hampshire without gambling too much.

"We thought we had to repeat our plays to beat the type of defense they had," said the UMass head coach. "We desired repetition of plays to their soft spots."

Fusia went on, "We of course had the pass in mind, but they went into a five back defense on second and long and the run should have been the effective play."

"Repeating plays outs down on mistakes, something we have been seeking for weeks," said the coach," and besides we didn't want to play foolishly against a team we thought we could beat."

"The trouble was," said Fusia, "that we couldn't block them and when we did get the blocking, we ran in the wrong place."

The coach praised the two successors to the Yankee Conference title throne, UConn and New Hampshire, saying "They both are good football teams and worthy of being champions. They are the two best teams in the Conference by far."

The UMass defense was not as disappointing as the offense, but as the coach said, "We did a good job, but we couldn't stop the big play. We didn't play heads up and they broke the long play against us."

Injury-wise the Redman kept on falling by the wayside. This week defensive end Al Becker injured his knee and will be definitely sidelined for the Boston College finale. Center John Dubzinski, who does all the snaps on kicks injured his leg but is expected to be ready this weekend.

So another in what has been a normal UMass game this year, one with injuries and inconsistency, has been completed. It almost seems like the best for all concerned would be to tape the wounds and look toward next year. Unfortunately there is one game left.

A big mean B.C. Eagle arrives this weekend and the mere thought is enought to scare the most brave.

REDMAN RANTINGS-It seems that many UMass fans in the stands Saturday forget pretty easily as judged by some of the abuse heard...Maybe four titles in five years, and the best coaching record in the history of the Yankee Conference is not enough, but some of the so-called fans sounded like Boston College rejected Alumni...

Mark Toner looked good at defensive tackle...Steve Rogers intercepted his fifth and sixth passes of the season.

Jerry Grasso saw his first action in three weeks...A big play of the game occurred in the dying seconds of the first quarter when UMass planning to punt with the strong wind could not get a time out and had to kick against the breeze...Boston College routed V.M. 45-13...No Comment...Delaware surprised B.U. 41-13...Connecticut bombed Rhode Island 35-6 for its Conference tie...And poor Holy Cross, losing to Rutgers 41-14...It seems that Rutgers tried to roll it up against the Crusaders. And Tom Boisture didn't like it.

Team Awaits Season's Start Control Offense To Be Used

BY KEN SCHWARTZ
Staff Reporter

The UMass Varsity hockey team will play their regular season's opener a week from today but that game is not yet their sole concern. Before they take on Lowell Tech on November 26th they will be thrown into the fire with the highly touted UMass freshmen, a team which could, in fact, provide tougher competition than the young Lowell team.

Head Coach Jack Canniff, in his second year at UMass, is striving to improve on last year's 5-15 record. To do this with the material he has available Canniff feels that the Redmen will have to play a conservative style game a la Toronto, earmarked by a close checking defense and a deliberate offense.

Physically, the team has done well with only a minor leg injury to last year's high scorer Jeff Sandborn and a pulled groin to Sophomore goalie Larry Walsh. Both boys will be ready for the opener, in fact, Sandborn has been skating on his gimpy leg and will start Friday against the Frosh.

The first two lines seem to be set with John Hartnett centering the ailing Sandborn and Jim O'Brian while Tom Babson, a St. Lawrence transfer, centers for hard skating wings Paul Riley and Charlet Hanifan.

Canniff's third line is still unsettled with centers Joe Brebbia and Ken Reddick fighting to skate with Tom Peters and Bob Madore.

The defensive combination of Billy McMann and Doug Bowling will alternate with Joe DiCiccio and Rocky Stone. A third possible blue line team will be Mike Coyne and Mike Murray.

UMass fans can look forward to a Redman team which will be trying to disrupt the continuity of their opponent's style by the use of a close checking man-to-man coverage. Employing this successfully will require them to minimize their penalty minutes and just generally avoid any blatant errors which would put extra pressure on the defense.

Both the 1968-69 editions of UMass varsity and freshmen teams will be unveiled Friday night in a family fued at Orr Rink. Varsity-freshmen games are annual endeavors at Boston College and Yale, two schools with good hockey traditions. What then for UMass?

Outscore Opponents 41-8

Frosh Booters Un-Un Alves Leads Scorers

By ROB GANLEY
Staff Reporter

An efficient, high scoring offense and a stingy defense were the keys to success for the freshmen soccer team as they swept to victory in all eight of their games. They outscored their opponents 41 - 8 and took 221 shots on goal to 88 for their rivals. The defense, led by fullbacks Paul Slack, Gary Hart and Eric Swenson and goalie Chip Hamilton, allowed only one goal per game.

Lindo Alves paced the offense during the entire season. He scored 4 goals in the team's opening victory over Franklin Pierce College and finished with 16 for the season. Alves scored in every game and had two or more goals in six out of the eight games. Augie Calheno, a high school teammate of Alves on Ludlow's state champion team, scored three goals and was a leading playmaker. John Russo had 6 goals during the campaign, including two against Franklin Pierce. Bruce Malinowski scored two of his four goals in the team's victory over Tufts. Bob Curtin also contributed four goals and Bruce MacPherson chipped in with three. Other scorers were Evan Kenseth with two and Bobby LaFontaine, Art Lash and James Gallpault with one each.

Coach Ray Cieplik, completing his first season at the helm, was naturally pleased with his team's performance. He was surprised at the ease in which they defeated teams like Amherst and Tufts. He also hoped that the varsity would be aided next Fall by the presence of several members of his team.

DWIGHT HOUSE WAS brought before the East Judiciary Board last night for violating the Open House Policy. About 50 girls came to represent their house and their housemother appeared to plead illegal proceedings. (MDC photo by Mike Alpert)

Dwight House on Trial No Decision Reached

By PAULA CURRY

Last night Dwight House was brought before the Area East Judiciary for violation of open house policy. The meeting, originally scheduled to meet in Whitmore was moved to Council Chambers because of the large number of people who attended the hearing. Dwight House was represented by about 50 girls.

Dwight was brought before the judiciary board for allegedly allowing "complete corridor autonomy with respect to visitation rights and other policies." Helen Ladd of Dwight responded to this statement by saying that dorm government had recommended that corridors be allowed to make their own rules.

The respondent, Dwight housemother Mrs. Eileen Wilkinson, appeared before the court to plead illegal procedure on the part of the court. She said that notification of the hearing had been sent to her, not to the dorm government. She said that this was improper because she has nothing to do with dorm policy. Mrs. Wilkinson also stated that the person reporting the policy infraction was not specified and that other facts concerning the hearing were not specified.

Prosecutor Frederick Hartwell said that he addressed the subpoena to the house mother because he understood that Dwight was run by a community government with no specified officers.

After a brief recess, the justices denied Mrs. Wilkinson's motion to dismiss the case. At 9:30, just after hearing this decision, the girls of Dwight left en masse.

The injunction continued, with Dwight going unrepresented. Rick Hartwell continued with his presentation of the prosecution, saying that Dwight's action was a "civil disobedience" that must be prosecuted. Hartwell also said that although he believes what Dwight is doing will be "eventually" right, he said that their procedure was illegal. He said that if the court were to condone Dwight's actions that students could never expect the administration to deal with the student body in good faith".

At 10:15 the court recessed to decide the case. At 11:00 court was reconvened. The clerk stated that the justices had reached no decision. They said that the court would be reopened so that the court could examine new evidence concerning Dwight government.

Question is Raised by "Death of J. K." To The Meaning Of The Death Of A Hero

By DAVID PURDY

In the spirit of Thanksgiving during a time of crisis on this the fifth anniversary of former President Kennedy's assassination, The United Christian Foundation together with the Distinguished Visitor's Program is sponsoring "Death and New Life in American Politics" on Sunday, November 24. Beginning at 3:00 p.m. in SBA 120 a play reading, "The Death of J.K." will be presented. Though written as a play reading, in its production on Sunday, "The Death of J.K." will make use of music, drama, and art forms in an effort to involve the audience.

Weaving together the lives and deaths of Jesus Christ, Julius Caesar, and John Kennedy, the author W. Nicholas Knight, raises the question of the meaning of the death of the hero - be he political or eschatological. Director Gail Herman of the University Drama Department has cast as readers Dr. Paul Sanders and the Rev. Arnold Kenseth of the University English Department, Barbara Acksen, Robert LaCroix, students.

Following the performance, the audience is invited to a coffee hour in the Colonial Lounge where people may meet informally with the author and discuss the production. Mr. Knight is a graduate of Amherst College and the University of California at Berkley, and is presently teaching English at Wesleyan University in Middletown, Conn.

Sunday evening at 8:00 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom, The Rev. William Sloan Coffin, Chaplain at Yale University will speak on "The Ordeal of Change", a discussion of conscience and the "new politics".

Lederle Says We're Ready To Put Ideas into Effect

UMass President John W. Lederle, speaking about recent meetings between members of his office and leaders of the student Afro-American Organization, said yesterday, "We have reached a point where we can put into effect many of the ideas that have been discussed so far.".

After a meeting to summarize the talks on Monday, Pres. Lederle said, "Obviously, the problem of racial tensions does not end with the conclusion of these discussions. Many of these problems will have to be worked out over a period of time. The important thing is that our problems--which by the way are not peculiar to this campus-- are out on the table.

"These issues have been discussed frankly and calmly, and I commend the delegation of Afro-Americans for the dignified way in which they have conducted themselves during these meetings.

"My special thanks go to the entire University community - students, administration and faculty- for their patience while we have been giving immediate attention to these complex issues. We have already accomplished much through our Upward Bound, CCENS and ABLE programs and the introduction of new courses, but we do need to do more.

"I want to make it perfectly clear that the new plans that have been formulated during the past few days will be for the benefit of the entire campus community.

"Once again I urge all members of the University of Massachusetts to exhibit great tolerance and understanding. If we do, we can take a solid position of leadership in guaranteeing the rights of all people for a solid education. By working together on these new programs we can achieve a new unity dedicated to the betterment of campus relations.'

Vietnam Symposium

War in Vietnam Is Against N. Vietnam, Human Problems

A Vietnam symposium was held last night at 8:00 p.m. in John Adams Lower. The speakers present were Luther Allen, professor of political science at UMass., Major E. J. Chapman, Jr., USMC, and Russell Johnson, Peace Secretary for the New England office of American Friends' Service.

Professor Allen spoke first. He talked mainly about the cost of extrication.

Allen reviewed the kind of involvement in Vietnam, reviewing what has been happening. He said that gradual withdrawal is a minimum necessity and said that McGeorge Bundy prescribes uni-de-escalation, that is, withdrawal of a number of troops each year.

The second speaker, Johnson, worked and lived four years in Vietnam and has made several trips back. Having spoken to several students there, they said we know that the war is really an issue between the U.S. and China. The students there also question why they should fight, and they also try to avoid the draft.

Major Chapman presented an overview of the situation as it pertains to the servicemen. He said that we are actually fighting two wars; one is the land war against North Vietnam; the other is the war within a war, a struggle against human problems. The American soldier "is a believer in a cause"; he is concerned about people and freedom.

Concerning Dorm Counselors....

Pay Hike Proposed

The role of the residence hall counselors and the duties they are performing was one of the topics of discussion at Monday night's meeting of the Senate Student Matters Committee. This inquiry has been prompted by students wanting to know what duties counselors are now assigned and what their position should be. Oae of the points being contended is that counselors are enforcing regulations, such as keeping freshmen curfew rosters in the women's dorms, which puts them at a disadvantage when performing advisory roles.

To conduct a complete investigation, Student Matters has created a special sub-committee on Counselors. A written report to the Senate is expected early next year.

Inquiry Prompted

UMass dorm counselors may look forward to a possible pay hike in the near future, according to Dr. Mark G. Noffsinger, associate dean of students. Discussion on a pay hike has received a positive response from the administration and Noffsinger feels that it will become a reality by the second semester of this academic year.

Action a pay increase for the counselors was prompted by a series of petitions presented by the counselors. Their demand for higher pay was based on the recent increase in the cost of room and board at the university. Before last year counselors were not rewarded in cash but were given free room and board. The counselors felt that they should receive the increase in cash just as they would have if they were still operating under the old system. Noffsinger said that these and other factors were being taken into consideration by the administration.

THE DAILY COLLEGIAN will not publish on Wednesday, Nov. 27 or Monday, Dec. 2

UN Defeats Motion To Seat Red China, Expel Nationalist China For 18th Time

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP)- The General Assembly slammed the door on Communist China once more late Tuesday-and with the loudest bang in four years.

By a vote of 58 against, 44 in favor and 23 abstentions, the 126-nation assembly defeated a resolution to kick out the Chinese Nationalists and admit the Chinese Communists in their place. Indonesia was absent on the vote.

Last year the vote on a similar resolution was 58 to 45, with 17 abstentions. The closest vote was the 47-47 tie in 1965.

It was the 18th time in the past 19 years that the assembly had voted on the China representation issue.

The resolution to admit Red China and expel Nationalist China was sponsored by 15 nations. They did not include the Soviet Union or India, although both voted for the resolution.

As in past years, the assembly decided a two-thirds vote was required on the resolution.

Britain and France voted again for the expulsion resolution. Both have extended diplomatic recognition to Peking. But Britain voted for the resolution requiring a two-thirds vote; France voted against it.

Choose AFL-CIO To Represent Food Employees

UMass Food Service employees chose the AFL-CIO (local 1776 of State, County, and Municipal employees) to represent them in negotiations with the administration in elections held at Boyden.

Headed by the Massachusetts State Labor Relations Board, the voting was between the AFL-CIO and the MSEA (Mass. State Employees Association). The workers could also have chosen neither and elected to act as their own bargaining agent.

Calif. College To Reopen Under Police Protection

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) - President Robert Smith told San Francisco State College students and faculty Tuesday that police protection will be necessary when campus reopens Wednesday as ordered by state college trustees.

Boos and jeers filled the auditorium when Smith said:

"It is crucial that we turn more to the community-to law enforcement agencies-to try to control violence on this campus."

Smith closed the campus last Thursday after violent confrontations involving police, campus radicals and black power advocates.

The violence stemmed from protests against the order by Dr. Glenn Dumke, state college system chancellor, that George Murray, a Black Panther, be dismissed from his faculty post as part-time instructor. Murray reportedly had urged black students to carry guns on campus.

Graduate Student Senate Vote Supports Most Afro-Am Demands

The Graduate Student Senate adopted a resolution recognizing racial inequality on campus and voted support for most of the Student Afro-American Organization demands, which are being discussed with university officials.

During a 2-1/2 hour meeting Monday night, Sen. James Thompson moved for suspension of the agenda in order to discuss what he described as more pressing events requiring GSS attention.

Sen. John Matteson, chairman of the academic affairs committee, introduced the resolution, stating that GSS "recognizes that racial inequity does exist within our community, supports the efforts of black students to bring this to the attention of the university and urges the administration to move in the direction of rectifying this situation as rapidly as possible."

Referring to the statement as "too amorphous," Sen. Ethan Roberts, GSS treasurer, said adoption could mean that "we are giving complete support to the Afro-Am demands."

Sen. Mark Cheren urged GSS members to vote for the resolution and appoint an ad hoc committee to investigate the situation. He said more information was needed before the legislative body could endorse any or all of the demands.

A co-sponsor of the resolution, Sen. Herbert Nichols, maintained the statement of support for black students and consideration of the Afro-Am demands are separate issues which should not be included in the same resolution.

After President Thomas Minogue said a GSS commitment was needed as soon as possible to express support for Negro students, the resolution was passed by an almost unanimous show of hands.

The President then asked Sen. C. Vernon Gray to make a point-by-point explanation of the Afro-Am demands. Gray has been participating in the discussions of black students with President John W. Lederle and other university administrators.

It was voted to eliminate debate on the points. Sen. Gray asked senators to vote yes or no on the demands as they originally had been presented, but in the light of corrections and clarifications which he explained.

In a total of 23 votes, the GSS favored 20 points. Defeated were the demands for a public apology from university officials concerning the alleged assault on Nov. 7, the firing of Chief Blasko and two other campus policemen, and more money for the Student Afro - American Organization. There was a large number of abstaining votes, apparently because debate was cut off and issues were not fully defined.

Following the votes, Sen. Nichols moved that a permanent subcommittee, to be named the Human Rights Committee, be formed to implement the GSS resolution and encourage further development of human rights on campus. The vote was 16-0 with six abstaining.

Mali President Deposed in Bloodless Coup

ABIDJAN, Ivory Coast (AP) - Young army officers deposed President Modibo Keita of Mali, one of Africa's most prominent revolutionary leaders, and took over his government Tuesday in an apparently bloodless coup. Radio broadcasts and diplomatic advices from Bamako, Mali's capital, told of the fall of the 53-year-old chief of state, who recently turned back to the West for economic aid after a long courtship of Red China.

"The dictorial regime of Modibo Keita was ended today, Nov. 19," said a communique broadcast repeatedly between bursts of martial music from Radio Mali. The communique said the army had taken power until free elections could be held.

The Republic of Mali is the former French Sudan, a land-locked, largely desert area in northwest Africa that is twice the size of Texas. Its 4.6 million people depend largely on cotton, grain, peanuts and livestock for livelihood. Most are nomadic herdsmen.

The U. S. Embassy in Bamako notified the State Department in Washington that the city was quiet after the coup and all the Americans were reported safe.

Community Vs. Apathy College or City

With the incidents that took place last week on campus, we saw in a nutshell what can occur out of a communication breakdown brought on by mass community apathy. But what we should consider most is that what occured last week was but a microscopic inkling of what could have been a major breakdown of the entire community.

When the disorders broke out on campus receiving nation wide notice, most of us were content to sit comfortably at home and follow it via the mass media while the actual event was taking place not more than a mile away from most of us. It was as if we had no stake in this thing ourselves. At the time of the initial incident and up until the march on Monday, there were two faculty members and two administrators in there with their shirt sleeves rolled up trying desperately to keep the lid on what could have been a disasterous situation for all of us. Four men out of a community of 17,000 were interested enough in the community to try to save it. The rest of the community, the nine to five men, just didn't give a damn. Besides, who pays overtime these days anyway?

It would appear that the age of the joiners is gone, for people don't even care enough anymore to join in their own lives. The sad thing about it is that this crippling apathy doesn't stop with our faculty and administrators. It starts with them, and ends up eventually being passed on to the students.

Students learn apathy from faculty members who teach their courses haphazardly with little interest and care, and who can never be found after their class day is over. These are the same teachers who expect or rather demand that their students be completely "buged out" over their course even though they themselves take a sombre disinterested view of the subject. Students learn also from the administration, the real nine to five men, whose rigid establishment policies and superficial approach to problems alienates them from the comuntiy more and more with each passing year. There need never be a course in apathy taught here, for by the time the average student graduates; he has had four years of daily exposure to it.

Well, one who has not been too apathetic to read this far would probably be asking himself about now just where all of this is leading us. Is this apathetic, uncaring attitude leading us to eventual community brekdown? One thing must be made clear before more is said. A community such as ours cannot continue to survive as we know it under the existing conditions. We seem to be rapidly approaching that type of community that we find in our cities. A city is an amalgamation of apathetic machine-like individuals who perform their functions independant of each other. In a city everyone does his own individual "thing", and it's the sum of all these different "things", the community, that suffers. Is this what we want? Will this be the eventual state of our university community? Well if the majority's answer to these questions are negative, then somebody had better start doing something soon before the decision is no longer ours.

Inside Report :

Johnson-Nixon, Inc.

BY ROWLANDEVANS AND ROBERT NOVAK

WASHINGTON-An unprecedented transition partnership between Lyndon Johnson and Richard Nixon is now being formed to bring the Vietnam war to an end, with the outgoing and incoming Presidents acting in unique unison.

Over the protest of some Republican hawks, including a few of his own advisers, Nixon has agreed to accept all major parts of President Johnson's plan to end the war.

Specifically, this may well require a personal Nixon trip to Saigon, not to make any on-the-spot appraisal, as President-elect Dwight Eisenhower did in Korea in 1952, but to warn South Vietnamese President Nguyen Van Thieu and Saigon hawks that they cannot get any better deal from Nixon than from Mr. Johnson.

Hawks close to the President-elect, such as Texas Sen. John Tower -- chairman of the Nixon "key issues" committee--are deeply suspicious of this highly unusual partnership. But other Nixon advisers, including shrewd, tough-minded Rep. Melvin Laird of Wisconsin, have strongly pushed the idea.

Laird-style pragmatists want to see the war ended, or at least the Paris negotiations making serious progress, before Nixon takes over as President. They are counselling Nixon and the war-hawks to forget all about the bitter campaign-end dispute over whether Mr. Johnson called a bomb halt prematurely to advance Hubert Humphrey's election prospect.

If Nixon enters the White House with the Paris talks tied up in knots as they are today, the war will be on his back and a Nixon-style settlement will risk political divisions at home that might never heal. As for Mr. Johnson, he wants peace as the capstone of his Administration.

Thus, the unique partnership. If it breaks down, in the words of one Nixon intimate, "it'll make the next four years hellish for Nixon."

NIXON WOOS HHH

An approach through veiled intermediaries is now being made by Nixon to the man he squeaked by in last week's election--Hubert H. Humphrey. Nixon wants Humphrey in some capacity, possibly Ambassador to the United Nations, not just as a token of bipartisanship in foreign policy but to dramatize Nixon's intention to run a coalition government.

Humphrey will undoubtedly say no, but the mere fact Nixon is sounding him out shows the direction of his thinking.

Another turn-down to Nixon is certain to come from Thomas E. Dewey, top choice as of today for Secretary of State. Wall Street lawyer Dewey, out of public life for 20 years, is regarded by Nixon as the most efficient executive in the Republican party, just right to streamline the State Department--a goal that John F. Kennedy also worked hard, but failed, to reach.

A Dewey refusal leaves William W. Scranton, as we have reported, still the best bet for Secretary of State.

But if the name of Dewey on the top of Nixon's Cabinet list is surprising, other names are scarcely less so. Two defeated Democrats--Gov. John King of New Hampshire, who lost his Senate race, and Sen Mike Monroney of Oklahoma, defeated for re-election--are under consideration for high posts. So is retiring Texas Gov. John Connally.

As for the job of Attorney General, which Nixon made a whipping post in his campaign, two Minnesota Republicans are under study: Clark MacGregor and Albert Quie.

THE RAFFERTY DRAG

Politicians of both parties agree that one reason Richard N. Nixon's big lead in California deteriorated so badly was the constant repetition of a Nixon television spot endorsing right-wing Republican Max Rafferty for the Senate.

Nixon had made the spot, saying he needed Rafferty in the Senate, in early September as part of a private arrangement. In return for Nixon helping Rafferty against Democrat Alan Cranston, Gov. Ronald Reagan would raise money not only for Rafferty but for Nixon. What Nixon never anticipated was that Rafferty, in desperate trouble, would run the Nixon endorsement non-stop and keep off the TV screen himself.

The result was that Rafferty, a big loser, helped drag down Nixon, in the opinion of some of his managers, as much as 300,000 votes.

A footnote: The California returns were scarcely in when the recriminations started boiling inside the bitterly divided Democratic party. The poor Los Angeles turnout of Mexicans and Negroes, which cost Humphrey the state, is being blamed by Humphrey men on the lackadaisical attitude of Assembly Speaker Jesse Unruh's party organization.

A Chance For Curiosity

To the Editor:

I consider myself an average student at UMass. I have no causes, no great convictions, and few educated opinions. I went to the Night of Inquiry out of curiosity. After listening for ahalf hour, I felt like I'd wasted the past sixteen years of my life by going to school. I stayed at the meeting for five hours and I'd like to express what it meant to me. I hope that in some way it will represent the feelings of the 98% of the students who said nothing at the meeting. The suggestions that were made ran the gamut: from abolishing requirements to destroying the system.

My first reason for being in college is not for an education but for a B.A., so I can go out into the world and chase after the All-Mighty Buck doing a job that I can enjoy rather than as a mere factory worker. BUT I DO WANT AN EDUCATION, and I realize that I have been sinfully cheated of it.

The system literally stifles curiosity. However it's not dead, yet. Once in a while, a single idea out of this sea of boredom will spark my curiosity and really get me excited. All I want to do is spend the next week, or how ever long it takes, to research this idea. Unfortunately, I can't because I've got homework for four other courses that I can't put off. I'm the guy who has to work for C's, and I have to pass all my courses because I can only afford to stay here for four years.

To my mind, the thing that I want, that I think is needed, and that would have made me satisfied with my education, is but a small thing to ask. I don't want to destroy the System. I don't want to fundamentally change the WHOLE society. All I would ask is a chance to follow my curiosity.

New Approach Spun in Rumpelstiltskin Three Performances To Be in Bartlett

RUMPELSTILTSKIN!, scheduled for performance on Friday and Saturday of this week, ushers in a new approach to the action and magic of a belvo and magic of a beloved fairy tale by the Brothers Grimm. This production has been designed as fully developed theatre, with colorful medieval settings, beautiful costumes, and well - drawn characters. The director, Dorothy Aldrich, beleves that the magic of fantasy belongs to all ages, and has carefully fashioned this production for appeal to young people and adults, as well as children.

Mrs. Aldrich recently joined the University Speech Department after work in comparable programs at the University of Pittsburgh and the University of New Hampshire. She has also worked with theatre among handicapped children and for the culturally disadvantaged.

Assistant director is Vere Drakeford, a native of Perth, Austrailia, for two years a teacher in Calgary, Alberta, Canada, and presently a graduate student in theatre at UMass.

Costume design is being done by Jeanie Michels, a graduate student in theatre from Western Michigan University, Kalamazoo, Mich. Costumes will be of particular interest since the traditional medieval desigas are being carried out in a rich variety of patchwork and multicolor combinations following the motif of the bright multi - colored foliage in the valley where the miller and his daughter first encounter the dwarf.

Sets, being designed by Peter Vagenas of the Speech Department will show the valley and the magic rock where the dwarf makes his home, and will shift to the palace, shabby at first, then grown magically rich as a result of the dwarf's spinning. A tremendous clock has been constructed, as well as a royal cradle, and a search has been conducted in the Amherst area for a spinning wheel which will REALLY spin straw into gold.

Members of the cast are Nancy Rial, as the miller's daughter who becomes queen, Don Quantrale as Rumpelstiltskin, Anne Agard as the Queen Mother, Thomas Keedy as the King, Robert Brickman as the Miller, Kathryn Sadoski as Toby, and Joseph Wilkins as the Chamberlain.

All tickets are 50¢, on sale at the door only. Performance times are Friday, at 7:30 p.m. and Saturday at 10 a.m. and 2 p.m. All performances in Bartlett Auditorium.

Intersorority Competition Will Be Thurs.

The Panhellenic Council of the University of Massachusetts will present the annual Panhellenic Declamation on Thursday at 7:00 p.m. in Mahar Auditorium. The Declamation is an intersorority dramatization competition in which one representative from each of the ten UMass sororities will present an interpretive memorization of a selection of her choice. Each of the readings will be from six to ten minutes long, and there will be a variety of humorous and serious presentations.

Judges for the event will be Miss Sally Catterson, Mr. Arthur Niedeck, and Mr. M. James Young of the UMass Speech Department. Participants in the competition will be judged on (1) quality of interpretation, (2) choice of selection, (3) visual attributes such as appropriate action, gesture, and facial expression, and (4) auditory attributes, such as quality of voice and pronunciation. While the judges are conferring, the Musigals, the University's female singing group, will entertain the audience.

The admission fee to the contest is 50¢ and tickets will be sold at the door. The public is cordially invited to attend the competition at Mahar on Thursday evening.

Full Agenda Awaits Student Senate Roster Includes Fourteen Bills

A full addenda awaits the Student Senate tonight. The old business roster has fourteen bills to be considered, which can be largely attributed to the length of last week's meeting.

Six charges for Senate committee investigation are included. Among these are a request that Services Committee look into the feasability of combining meal tickets and I.D. cards, that Public Relations investigate the possibility of an annual or semi-annual conference between the six New England Universities and how an extensive polling service on campus can be initiated, and that Activities Committee begin a systematic review of the constitutions of all communication media on campus.

Another Bill calls for Student Senate support of any measure the Administration can take to immediately increase security and safety measures on campus. Also included is a recommendation that a study be conducted to propose permanent solutions in the areas of lighting, landscaping, fencing and security manpower.

A Bill recommending that student judiciaries apply only the standards of S-115 ('66-'67) in the determination of guilt or innocence in curfew cases has been committed indefinitely to Student Matters. S-115 resulted from a Womens Affairs Committee report which called for no second semester curfew, as well as exemptions from the first semester curfew of women over 20 and those having 11 credits or more.

Bartlett Walls Start To Come Alive Paint of Mixed Media Art Class

Perhaps you have recently been aware of an artistic uniqueness pervading the halls of Bartlett Hall in the past few weeks. There's color being added. There's effort being exerted to pick things up.

The students painting the walls at the stairwells are all enrolled in John Grillo's Mixed Media Art course, and their major project this semester involves Bartlett itself. It is their effort, with the white plaster to patch up the cracks, with the rollers and brushes to give base to the designs, that have improved considerably the looks of the entire building.

Mr. Grillo had the idea that it might be possible to enhance the University while providing a unique opportunity for the students to work on a larger scale than is often possible. With the permission of Department Head, Dr. Norton, and the consent of the University administration, Grillo went ahead with plans.

Maintenance donated the supplies necessary to cover the imperfections in the walls and the students did the work. After applying a white base coat they began on their designs. Some are working from plans, others are using no preplanned work at all. Half of the students are doing abstract designs, others are being more traditional. Some have high wide walls, others have long skinny ones. All are working in acrylic paint and due to a very limited budget they are afraid they may not have enough to complete their projects.

Toni Nicoli is one of the members of the class. He finds the size of the wall he chose a challenge. When asked about his subject matter, he said that some will think it is true love, but that is for them to decide. It is however, a social comment.

Paul Shao chose one of the largest walls. He is a graduate student in sculpture, and has employed the radiator that divides his wall to enhance his painting. His planes overlap and the color he uses are chosen by instinct. As for subject matter, his is a Chinese quotation that he said lost too much in the translation, but was concerned with rain, clouds, frogs and sounds of raindrops tinging on rocks. The mood seems to be one of seclusion in nature.

Judy Veronesi is a Senior Bachelor of Fine Arts candidate who is working in a third dimension. She is using styrofoam geometric cut-outs that she had attached to the surface. She feels this is more unique and will create an unusual effect due to the poor lighting in her location.

Outstanding Psychologist Joins UMass Psych. Dept.

Dr. Harry Helson, whose adaptation level theory has had a major influence in modern psychology, has joined the psychology department of the University of Massachusetts, department head Dr. Mortimer H. Appley has announced.

The distinguished psychologist has carried on research in sensation, perception and related areas at leading institutions and for the armed services in a career that spans over four decades. He held the post of Peterson Distinguished Regents Professor at Kansas State University and visiting Distinguished Professor at Canada's York University before accepting appointment as professor of psychology at UMass this year.

Dr. Helson's contributions were summed up when he received the Distinguished Scientific Contribution Award from the American Psychological Association in 1962, at which time he was cited "for his sustained commitment to the problems of sensation and perception, his empirical contributions to our knowledge of visual and other sensory activities, and his generalized theory of adaptation level which is relevant to a broad range of problems from color vision to social process."

"Massachusetts should be very proud to welcome one of its distinguished native sons back to its State University," psychology department head Appley said, "and pleased that its State University has grouwn distinguished enough to be attractive to scholars of Dr. Helson's stature.

Smith College
Lecturer Seeks Info. For Chinese Comm Classes

NORTHAMPTON - A newly appointed lecturer in government, Steven M. Goldstein, 28, is engaged in an exotic quest for important basic study materials for use in three new courses on Chinese communism at Smith.

Since coming to Smith from Columbia University's government department this fall, Goldstein has been going through Chinese materials translated by the U. S. Government. He notes, however, that the government translations did not begin until the mid-1950's, an indication of the only recent awareness of the ascending role of Communist China in world politics.

Vaunted BC Eagles Next; Fusia Praises QB Harris

By PETER PASCARELLI
Assistant Sports Editor

Varsity 'M' Club awards for outstanding play in the New Hamp- UMass football game were awarded yesterday to linebacker John Farrelly on defense and guard Bruce Fulton on offense, during the weekly club luncheon at the Newman Center.

Farrelly, a Bronx, N.Y. junior, was cited for his performance that included several individual tackles and numerous other assists on tackles.

Fulton, also a junior, who hails from Canton, was chosen for a fine blocking job. Fulton is also a varsity lacrosse player at UMass.

Speaking at the luncheon was UMass head coach Vic Fusia. The coach in explaining the game plan for the New Hampshire game, said, "We wanted to set up a basic attack to try and hit certain soft spots in their defense. We are not the type of team to try inconsistent plays that might gain 30 on one time and then lose 30 the next time you try them."

"The trouble is that when you lose, it looks like you're not doing anything."

The coach went on to talk about the season as a whole, a season that will be the coach's worst. Fusia said, "I wouldn't wish a year like this on my worst enemy. You can't pinpoint any one thing that has caused this."

He added, "The easy way to get out of it is to say that we have had 18 serious injuries, but that is talking stupid."

Fusia in talking of the long season offered as one key the Delaware game, a heartbreaking 28-23 loss for the Redmen. He said, "I think that if we had won that one, we might have gone on to a decent season. It was a tough loss."

REDMEN STALWARTS

The coach had not forgotten about one little item left on his agenda, the B.C game, Fusia, not the type to listen to some prophets of doom circulating around campus, said emphatically, "We are going to make it damn interesting."

"They have excellent ability and excellent depth," said the coach, "but they have shown they can be beaten."

Fusia had praise for two B.C. stars in particular, Frank Harris and Dave Bennett. Speaking of Harris, Fusia said of the Eagle quarterback, "he is without a doubt, one of the finest young passers in the nation. His only apparent weakness is his inexperience."

The coach said of Bennett who has set a Boston College season touchdown record this year, "he is an outstanding player who is having a tremendous season."

UM Tops UNH!

Hills South Hi Lo's, the campus intramural football champions beat the Alacias, campus champions of the University of New Hampshire, 19-13, Saturday morning at Intramural field.

The UMass victory, the third in a row over the Wildcats, gives the Redmen a 5-4 edge in the annual extramural game which has been played between the two schools since 1960. Phi Mu Delta and the Adams Smashers were the previous two victors.

Quarterback Joe Pedro starred in Saturday's game as he threw two touchdown passes and ran for another. Speedy flanker Rick Fredericks, the leading scorer during the regular season, caught both of Pedro's TD tosses.

Defensively, Tom Young was the HiLo's standout as he twice 'dumped' Alacia QB Bob Cygan for losses.

The game was knotted, 6-6, at halftime, but two second half Hills South scores insured that the extramural title would remain at UMass for a third straight year.

LITTLE REDMEN COULD SURPRISE

Frosh Pucksters Have High Hopes

By STEVE SHAMBAN
Sports Day Editor

Frosh hockey coach Ben Smith is anxiously waiting to spring a trap on unsuspecting opponents this year. UMass has recruited some fine hockey players and Smith, a freshman coach himself, is optimistically hoping to knock off some of the traditionally good hockey schools on the schedule, namely, Harvard, Yale and Boston College.

The frosh, who have been practicing since early November, have flexed their muscles twice in controlled scrimmages with the varsity and have done well. Two weeks ago, they looked like Boston Bruins as they triumphed 10-4 and probably had varsity coach John Canniff talking to himself.

In the most recent affair, last Friday night, a revenge-seeking varsity combined solid checking in its own end with heads up play on offense to come out on top 2-0. But, the frosh did have some good moments and should be able to recoup for what is hoped to be an annual affair, the varsity-frosh game, this Friday at Orr Rink.

Smith's first line will have Dan Reedy centering for Wings Mike Waldron and Bob Weldon. This is expected to be a tough, good checking line which should loosen opposing defenses somewhat.

Finesse should be the forte of the second line and Smith feels his three most talented players are situated here. Speedy Charles Donovan is the center with Bruce Winter on right wing and Jack Edwards on left. Winter is adept at digging the puck out of the corners and is good around the net while Edwards is big and tough and was the top scorer at Deerfield Academy last year.

The third line is composed of center Dennis Grabowski and wings Glen Hale and Bryan Sullivan. Grabowski is the best two-way player on the squad and notched four goals in the first scrimmage. Hale and Sullivan both have good size.

The other two lines, neither of which can be termed fourth or fifth due to intense competition, are composed of center Paul Gately and wings Paul Sharpe and Bryan Brewster and center John Morganto and wings Eric Scrafield and Marty Ford. Scrafield, a good checker, has been hampered by a groin injury.

Smith has lined up three sets of defensemen, Mike Scanlon and Bob Bartholomew, Al Nickerson and Ken Steeves, and Bill Brown and Jack Byrne constitute the three pairs.

Bruce Crawford and P.J. Flaherty are the goalies.

"We've got a lot of depth," said Smith, "and because of that we'll have to rotate extensively. There is a lot of talent here and I want to give them all a good shot."

Smith considers UMass' lackluster hockey tradition and feels that many opponents may underestimate his Little Redmen. "We might be able to jump on some other unsuspecting teams and surprise a few people."

Let's hope so. The first official game will be November 30 at New Haven versus the Yale Frosh. It should be a good test.

UMass 16th At IC 4As

Whether it was the dismal weather, or the pressure of the big race, or some other factor, the UMass harriers did not perform up to par as they placed 16th in the IC4A cross-country title meet, Monday.

The team was shooting for the top ten to qualify for the NCAA next Monday at Van Cortland Park in New York. Although they didn't make the top ten, the squad will be able to go to the NCAA, for at a coaches' meeting before the race, it was clarified that the top ten figure was just a "guideline" to go by. Since the race was in the East this year any school which desires to compete in the national championships may. Assistant coach Gary Schwartz says that UMass is going to take the opportunity. "Coach O'Brien thinks it will be great experience. We will be bringing four sophs building toward more than a Yankee Conference title team in the future," said the first year coach.

Coach Schwartz added, "If everyone had run the way they normally do we would be in great shape. Holy Cross finished 10th. We should have been eighth or ninth." The coach concluded by saying, "There's not much to say; we hope to do better next week."

Leo Duart was the top finisher for UMass as he took 61st. The entire team seemed to have an off day at once on the muddy course but they hope to rebound next Monday.

Last year's second place finisher Steve Stageburg of Georgetown turned things around on defending champion Art Dulong of Holy Cross by beating the Crusader's star by 50 yards. Stagburg's time of 24:32 was almost half a minute off Dulong's record. Villonova defended their team crown with 63 points. Gerogetown was second and Harvard was third.

PRESIDENT LEDERLE will preside over the dedication of Thompson Hall. Mrs. Thompson, widow of John F. Thompson, for whom the building was named, will unveil the plaque.

Thompson, Gladchuk Halls Dedicated Saturday

UMass will be the sight of two dedications on Saturday, November 23.

At 10:30 the newly completed 10-story academic building adjoining Machmer Hall will be dedicated to the late John F. Thompson of Ludlow, former speaker of the State House of Representatives.

Thompson was a long-time champion of improved public higher education in Massachusetts. He was a strong advocate of fiscal autonomy for the University; was an active participant in the passage of the bills creating UMass-Boston and the University Medical School; cooperated with Gov. Foster Furcolo in establishing the state community college system; was a supporter of improved faculty salaries; and aided in remodeling the state teachers college system into the state college system.

President Lederle will be presiding over the Thompson dedication which will open with a showing of the University film 'Giant Step'. Speaker of the House Robert H. Quinn and Senate President Maurice A. Donahue will both be present with greetings from the General Court. The unveiling of the plaque will be performed by the former speaker's widow, Mrs. John F. Thompson.

At 10:00 a.m. the practice football fields, near the UMass Alumni Stadium, will be dedicated in memory of the late Chester S. Gladchuk, former assistant football coach and assistant director of intramural athletics. Scheduled speakers at the Gladchuk dedication will include President Lederle, Dean Warren P. McGuirk of the School of Phys. Ed., and Msgr. George Kerr, chaplain of the state House of Representatives and a member with Gladchuk of the 1941 Boston College team that went to the Sugar Bowl. Mrs. Chester Gladchuk will unveil the marker and the acceptance speech will be presented by his son Chester Gladchuk, Jr.

Both dedications are being held in connection with the 1968 UMass Legislator's Day program. Members of the General Court have been invited to the dedication ceremonies and to be guests of the University at the UMass-Boston College football game Saturday afternoon.

78 Miners in Mine Explosion; Little Hope Seen for Rescuing Them

MANNINGTON, W. Va. (AP) - Little hope-"not a chance in the world"-was held Wednesday for an estimated 78 men trapped deep in the smoke-filled shafts of a coal mine.

Another 21 miners either scrambled to safety or were pulled from the mine after a chain of explosions rocked the mine at daybreak. There has been no contact with the missing men since the first of the blasts minutes before 6 a.m. EST.

Leslie Ryan, inspector at large for the West Virginia Department of Mines, said after surveying the damage early Wednesday afternoon:

"There's not a chance in the world to get those men out."

Subfreezing temperatures and snow flurries chilled rescue teams at the mouth of one of the mine entrances. Heat, fire and smoke prevented rescuers from moving into the shafts.

A dangerous rise in the concentration of methane gas - ancient enemy of coal miners - also dimmed rescue prospects. The methane factor rose from 3 to 6 shortly after the explosion.

There was some confusion on the number of men missing. Sheriff Robert Tennant of Marion County said the "lamp house," where miners check in at the start of their work shifts, had been destroyed by the blasts, along with the records.

"There could have been close to 100 men in the mine at the time," Tennant said.

James McCartney, a public relations representative for Mountaineer Coal Co., which owns the mine, estimated the number of missing men at 70.

"No one knows exactly where these men were at the time of the explosion," McCartney told newsmen. "There were six crews of six men each working in the general area of the explosion. The other men were on general assignments throughout the mine."

Student Senate Completes Agenda In Night of Routine Business

in a routine meeting last night, the Student Senate completed a lengthy agenda, averting a threatened special meeting next Monday night.

First motion to be considered was a reconsideration of S13, a bill recommending the disarming of the campus police. The reconsideration failed on a roll call, 32-42. The reason for the reconsideration was to define what constitutes "an emergency" so as not to leave it to the discretion of the police. Since this was already the case, the reconsideration was considered un-necessary.

A Special Business motion to add another provision to the same bill was also defeated.

A motion providing for Senate subsidation of newsletters to individual Senators' constituencies was tabled for cost-effectiveness studies.

An act to request advance notice from Amherst and campus police before re-arrangement of traffic patterns, sponsored by Senate Treasurer Gauthier and Senator Jim Fox, was passed unanimously.

A bill censuring D. O'Connell's Sons construction workers for alleged "inappropriate, insulting, and sometimes obscene behavior towards female members of the student body" was withdrawn by its sponsor after an apology for its having been placed on the agenda.

Considering the perennial problem of meal tickets and dining commons, the Senate voted to charge the Services Committee with an investigation of the feasibility of "combining meal tickets with I.D. cards."

The Public Relations Committee was charged with the responsibility of studying the desirability and feasibility of establishing working conferences between the land-grant institutions in New England for the purpose of furthering co-operation between the Student Governments of the six institutions. The bill was based on the discussions which took place at the Regional Conference on Student Culture.

Thre e resolves submitted by Vice President Rich Hartwell were all passed after lengthy explanations by their sponsor. One requested that a review be made of communications media constitutions. The second instructed the

Aesthetics in Education Marathon To Be Presented Today

The School of "Education and the Art Department are joining forces to present a five hour marathon today entitled "The Artist as Teacher: The Teacher as Artist." It will run from 1-6 p.m. at the School of Education.

The program is part of an effort by the School of Education to encourage an aesthetic approach to all learning experiences including those areas of science usually thought to be apart from any aesthetic treatment.

Panel discussions, slide shows, ceramic demonstrations, and films will be presented by artists and teachers from the five-college area, including Donald Brigham, educator, David Batchelder, artist, Sidney Poritz, sculptor, Ryan Drum, botanist, and Robert Mallory, sculptor.

The program is being sponsored by the Committee for Aesthetic Education, one of 28 faculty planning committees at the School of Education, and is being organized by Sidney Poritz of the Art Department.

Dwight House Must Accept Injunction or Face Contempt of Court

In a delayed decision the Area East Judiciary upheld an injunction against Dwight House brought before the court by Senate Vice-President Rick Hartwell. Dwight House was charged allowing "complete corridor automony with respect to visitation rights and other policies."

Dwight House may accept the injunction, thus going back to the approved University Open House policy of visitation hours.

Dwight House has five days to appeal to court's decision to General Court. Should the residents of Dwight fail to appeal the decision and refuse to obey the injunction, they will be cited for contempt of court, according to Area East Chief Justice Harr Sonn.

James Hall Pleads Innocent To Car Theft

James Hall, whose claim to a beating by white students touched off a week-long confrontation between black UMass students and administrators, pleaded innocent yesterday to charges of using an automobile without authority in Northampton District Court.

Hall was arrested on October 27 in an allegedly stolen car which sheared a utility pole on North Pleasant Street and knocked out electric power to several Amherst homes for about seven hours.

The case has been continued to November 29.

Hall is being held in lieu of $500 bail at Hampshire County jail.

SDS Plans To Napalm Dog on Campus To Protest Napalming in Vietnam

By RICHARD LANE
Senior Reporter

Steve Gaman and Mike Minsky last night announced plans for students for Democratic Society to "napalm a dog" next Tuesday morning at noon as part of their group's "disgust with the whole war in Vietnam."

Both Gaman and Minsky told a meeting of SDS members that the napalm plans were their's alone as part of a two-phase operation to protest the Vietnam war and the coming of recruiters of the United States Marine Corps. The national organization of Students for Democratic Society earlier this week also announced similar plans to napalm dogs as part of a protest against the war and use of napalm. Gaman and Minsky denied any connection between their plans and those of national SDS.

The pair also stated that SDS would try to set up a table with antiwar and antidraft literature and attempt to get representatives to "debate" with the Marine recruiters. The group will attempt to get its members to sign up with the recruiters using false signatures.

Gaman told the "Daily Collegian" that the dog burning (which would entail using a live dog from an area donor and the use also of some sort of homemade napalm or combustible solution) is "our (SDS) big thing at UMass."

"Burning the dog is an analogy to the burning of human beings in Vietnam. If the Marines can do it so can we," Gaman said. He continued that he feels the University is "apathetic" concerning the war and that if its members are unwilling to see a dog burned to death then it should not tolerate the napalming of human beings in Vietnam.

Regarding the type of campus reaction he expects SDS to receive Gaman declared, "We want publicity; we want reaction; we want resistance!" He went on to conclude that if resistance were extreme the group might postpone or concel its plans.

Other areas of discussion at the meeting were consideration of setting up a draft resistance sanctuary for servicemen on the UMass campus, education reform (curriculum changes) and ROTC elimination.

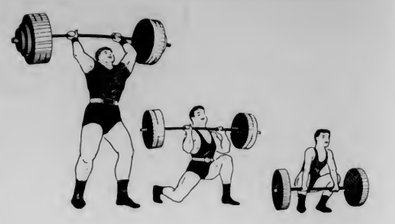
Activities Committee to begin a systematic review of honor societies on campus, thereby also reviewing their "position, role and functioning..." on campus. Responding to Hartwell's explanation, Senator Larry Marcus said he saw no "reason for Senator Hartwell to take out his frustrations on the honor societies. I'm as undecided on the role of honor societies as he is, but I don't think the Senate has a right to dictate these roles." Marcus serves as president of Adelphia.

The third bill charged the Public Relations Committee with undertaking a feasibility study on establishing an "extensive polling service on campus."



The Senate, after lengthy debate, passed a bill introduced by Senator Joe Kilmartin calling for increased library hours, noting that the extended hours were contingent upon hiring of adequate qualified personnel to staff the library during the extended hours.

In its final action of the evening, the Senate voted to recommend that the University install additional lighting on major campus pathways to help reduce the number of alleged and actual vicious bodily attacks on members of the student body. The bill also called for improved fencing, landscaping, and security manpower.

Overhead Projectors Used to Teach Basic Language to Deaf Children

A pioneering set of overhead projector transparencies for teaching elementary language to deaf children has been completed by the University of Massachusetts Northeast Regional Media Center for the Deaf.

The set of 200 transparencies and accompanying teaching manual represent nearly a year of study and work. The project is supported by U.S. Office of Education funds. The sets have been distributed to 600 institutions throughout the U.S. that teach deaf children.

"The majority of the transparencies deal with specific language principles or forms," according to media center director Raymond Wyman. "The remainder are for developing original language sentences, paragraphs or stories."

Their use in an overhead projector enables a teacher facing the class at the front of the classroom to project an image before the class. The transparencies were produced under the direction of Nathan S. Tilley, associate director of the media center.

Nixon, Fulbright Opposition Seen In New Admin.

BY ROBERT T. GRAY
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Richard M. Nixon's campaign statements point to the possibility of continued differences between the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and the White House after he becomes president.

While five of the committee's 19 members will not be returning to the Senate in January, the holdovers include several of the veterans who battled for years with the Johnson administration over the Vietnam war and other international issues.

They include the chairman, Sen. J. W. Fulbright, D-Ark., who was elected this month to a new six-year term. His opposition to the war, voiced from his highly prestigious post, was a constant, major irritant to President Johnson.

Although Nixon has yet to detail specific legislative proposals for the conduct of foreign policy, his campaign statements can be compared with the views of the majority of the Foreign Relations Committee.

The president-elect has portrayed the U.S. role in South Vietnam in essentially the same terms the current administration has used: to protect that country from outside aggression from North Vietnam.

But Fulbright has constantly rejected that approach, arguing that the struggle is basically a civil war between elements within South Vietnam, with this country backing one side - the Saigon government-and North Vietnam supporting the other-the Viet Cong.

Nixon's opposition to a coalition government also offers a potential conflict with the committee's war critics, who have suggested that solution as a possible way toward ending the war.

"Death of J.K." to be Presented In All-Day Program on American Politics

Rev. William Sloane Coffin, Jr., will speak on "The Ordeal of Change" at the University of Massachusetts Student Union ballroom, Sunday, Nov. 24 at 8 p.m. as the concluding part of an all-day focus on the meaning of death and Thanksgiving.

His lecture, sponsored jointly by the United Christian Foundation and the Distinguished Visitors Program, will be the second part of an all-day focus on "Death and New Life in American Politics." The program relates to the Thanksgiving holiday and the fifth anniversary of the death of President John F. Kennedy. All events are open to the public without charge.

At 3 p.m. Sunday afternoon at the School of Business Administration Auditorium, Students for Ecumenical Action (SEA) will present a reading of the play "Death of J.K.", written by W. Nicholas Knight, a member of the English department at Wesleyan University. Since the fifth anniversary of the assassination of President John F. Kennedy falls within a week of Thanksgiving, SEA designed the program to explore the meaning of death and Thanksgiving together.

One of the most articulate voices in the United States for the cause of human rights and justice, Rev. Coffin received his B.A. degree from Yale University in 1949 and his B.D. from Yale Divinity School in 1956. In 1966 he was awarded an honorary D.D. from Wesleyan University, in which he was described as an "able preacher and writer, man of action and man of God."

Mr. Coffin became nationally prominent while chaplain at Williams College when he spoke out against the discriminatory nature of national fraternities. Shortly afterwards, as chaplain at Yale University, he organized one of the first Freedom Rides into the South. Since then he has been constantly involved in the cause of human justice and freedom.

Though the "Death of J.K." was originally written as a play reading, the use of a variety of audio-visual effects in Sunday's production will involve the audience, so that the play will be transformed into a contemporary event, constituting a meditation on the meaning of the death of the hero.

The Martin Luther King Jr. Social Action Council wishes to pursue the ideals and goals of improving the university. To that purpose, the Publicity Committee of the King Council is meeting Thursday night at 8 p.m. in Machmer W 16.

The Night of Inquiry brought out problems and concerns with the policies of this university which students felt should be changed. Programs to improve the university are already being planned. The Publicity Committee is needed to inform the students of programs which are being activated and to gather support for these programs.

Come to this meeting and help support student power.

Amherst Science Center Dedication To Feature Astronomers Symposium

THE SEARCH FOR LIFE BEYOND THE EARTH will be the provocative subject discussed by four of the nation's leading astronomers and space scientists and an outstanding scientific journalist at Amherst College on November 23.

The scientific symposium, marking the dedication of the College's new $7 million Science Center, will feature formal papers by Carl Sagan and Frank D. Drake, both of the Cornell University faculty, followed by a discussion of the possibility of the discovery of extraterrestrial life by John D. Strong, professor in the Four-College Astronomy Department, Harold J. Morowitz, professor in the department of molecular biophysics at Yale University, and Walter Orr Roberts, president of the American Association for the Advancement of Science and an alumni trustee of Amherst College.

Dr. Sagan, first of the principal speakers, will address himself to the prospects for life within our own solar system.

Educational WFCR

What's New at Five College Radio?

Three major live program additions and a drive for new members are what's new this season at Five College Radio WFCR.

The educational FM radio at Hampshire House on the University of Massachusetts campus is supported and run by the University and its four neighboring colleges--Amherst, Hampshire, Mount Holyoke and Smith.

"We have listeners in a six-state area--Massachusetts, Connecticut, New Hampshire, New York, Rhode Island and Vermont--and are heard even further through the Eastern Educational Radio Network and through exchanges of tapes with other educational broadcasting facilities," said station manager Al Hulsen.

WFCR broadcasts 18 hours a day, seven days a week and receives 80 per cent of its financial support from the University. The rest comes from the other four institutions and from grants, memberships and contributions.

This year the station is seeking $10,000 from memberships and contributions to balance its 1968-69 budget. A major drive is being carried on during the month of November to enroll approximately 2000 new members. The $5 memberships are tax-deductible and entitle the member to receive the WFCR monthly program guide for a year.

Contributions to the November WFCR fund drive totaled $1,610.00 on Monday, November 18, according to Station Manager Al Hulsen. A total of 229 listeners contributed between $1.00 and $50.00 each, he said.

Production manager Diana Calland of Five-College radio station WFCR edits tape at the studios of the educational station on the University of Massachusetts campus.

Tax-deductible donations may be sent to Five College Radio-WFCR, Hampshire House c/o University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Massachusetts, 01002.

The three new programs are 'Fred Calland Presents,' featuring music from the Five Colleges and beyond; 'Five College Forum,' a live discussion five evenings a week on topical issues; and 'Cabbages and Kings', a late-late Saturday night show of music and ideas "by students, with students and for students," according to Hulsen.

'Calland Presents' is a weekday afternoon program devoted to non-pop or "serious" music that can include "everything from folk to grand opera," according to Calland, WFCR program director. The 2 to 5:30 p.m. program features comments by Calland and music from a variety of sources--tapes from live performances in the Five College area, tapes from other colleges and from performances abroad and music from new and historic recordings.

'Five College Forum,' in the words of producer Diana Calland, is "a conversation program with a candid and informal emphasis but always seeking to resolve some kind of conflict." On every weekday evening from 7:30 to 8:30 p.m., the forum tackles mainstream issues like race, the population crisis, the Czech question, politics and poverty and also takes specialized looks at such subjects as the current film scene, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, student open housing and others. Its debut featured an original radio play by the Buffalo Meat Co., a local acting company.

Station manager Al Hulsen describes the program as "continuous music and continuous ideas." He said: "It gives older people a chance to listen when students are talking to each other. It's a good way to tune in on what students are thinking and saying."

Veterans Eligible To Waiver Tuition at State Colleges

Legislation recently enacted by the Massachusetts General Court relates to waiver of tuition for Massachusetts veterans at any Massachusetts-supported institution of higher learning.

To be eligible to apply, the veteran must fit into one of the following catagories:

1. He must have completed at least 180 days of active service in the Armed Forces of the United States between February 1, 1955 and Autust 4, 1964. However, if he served in the Armed Forces during that period and was awarded a service-connected disability or a Purple Heart, he is an eligible veteran even though he failed to complete the 180 days of active service;

OR

2. The veteran has served in the Armed Forces of the United States subsequent to August 4, 1964.

"Active service in the Armed Forces" does not include active duty for training in the army national guard or air national guard or active duty for training as a reservist in the Armed Forces of the United States.

It is unnecessary for the veteran actually to have seen service in the Vietnam theater.

A veteran may apply for this tuition waiver by enclosing a copy of his 214 papers with a note to the State Adjutant General, State House, Boston, asking for verification that his service is credited to Massachusetts.

On the receipt of this statement, he then asks for a letter verifying his University status from the Veterans' Coordinator in Whitmore Hall, and sends both certification and letter to the State Department of Education to request authorization for his waiver.

Wild Wintry Week To Include Window Painting Contest

The sophomore class if sponsoring a window-painting contest to be held between November 21 and December 6. All sororities, dorms, and RSO groups are eligible to participate. The paintings must be related to the theme of Sophomore Week, "Wild Wintry Week." Rules can be picked up in the RSO office. If you have any questions contact Cindy Davis (69662) or Marty Lkein (67550).

Department of Air Science Interviews Program Applicants

The Department of Air Science is now interviewing students for admission to its two-year program leading to a commission in the United States Air Force. Students who, as of September 1969, will have two years of academic study remaining are eligible to apply. The two years can be undergraduate, graduate, or a combination of both.

Career opportunities exist in flying, the sciences, engineering, research and development, management, computer technology, education, and in many other fields that correspond to your university studies.

While enrolled you will receive financial assistance of $50.00 per month (tax free).

Flight instruction is provided to those who apply and qualify for pilot training. You can also obtain a private pilot's license at the same time.

Deferments for graduate study are normally available.

Interested students may contact the Department of Air Science in Dickinson Hall or call 5-2437 for further information.

UMass Health Service Social Worker Attends Student Suicide Prevention Conference

The U. S. National Student Association, under a grant from the Center for Studies of Suicide Prevention of the National Institute of Mental Health, presented a conference on Student Suicide Prevention from November 15-17, at the Sheraton Silver Spring, Silver Springs, Maryland.

In 1965, it was estimated in MODERATOR magazine that approximately 1,000 students commit suicide annually, with an additional 9,000 attempted and 90,000 threatened. This conference was proposed as the first step in a program for developing resources in our colleges and universities for dealing with the problem of student suicide.

The conference was intended to: 1. provide the most accurate information on the problem of student suicide, suicide in general and suicide prevention techniques, such as those developed at the Los Angeles Suicide Prevention Center, 2. arouse greater awareness in the institutions of their own responsibility to deal effectively with the problem of student suicide through procedures involving students as well as campus officials, 3. inventory various preventive and remedial procedures which could be instituted by colleges at both student and administrative levels, and 4. recommend programs which could be carried out by national organizations concerned with these problems.

UMass was selected as one of the thirty campuses to be represented. Participants included teams of students and college personnel from thirty colleges and universities across the country. In addition, there were resource people concerned about the future of higher education and student mental health.

Mr. Lawrence Sidall, a social worker from the UMass health services attended.

UMass has a 24-hour suicide prevention service. Anyone who has problems may call the infirmary (5-2671) at any hour. A member of the mental health staff will call on him at any time.

Blood Drive Results

The Red Cross Student Blood Drive conducted on the UMass campus last week brought 592 pints of whole blood into the Red Cross's Blood Bank. Mrs. J. T. Clayton, co-chairman of the Student Blood Drive, said that the workers from the University Women and the sponsoring student organizations were grateful for the willing response from all parts of the campus community.

Uganda Chief Education Officer Ernest Sempebwa, left, discussed the Tororo Girls School established in his country by the University of Massachusetts with UMass President John W. Lederle, right, during a recent visit. The UMass School of Education designed, built and staffed the school under a contract with the U. S. Agency for International Development (AID). The East African educator visited UMass in the course of a six-week tour of the U.S. to study the American educational system.

Ed Stevenson's getting too big for his britches.
We'll put him in his place.
You can bet it'll be the right place, too, because Ed's turning out to be a good engineer. On his way up.
It started two summers ago when Ed got his B.S. in Mechanical Engineering from Purdue. He was interested in engine propulsion, so we put him to work.
First he worked in the project group that developed a 1,400 shaft horsepower version of the T-53 gas turbine engine. Then he was a Fan Jet Engine Performance Engineer. Right now he's wrapped up in Constant Speed Drives and Ground Support Equipment. And to give you some idea of Ed's dedication to propulsion systems, he spends his evenings at home developing a free-piston engine.
There'll be no stopping him from here on, because Ed's working for the world's largest producer of gas turbine engines.
It's a fresh and exciting field—really just beginning and growing fast. Ed's growing with it.
We'd like more eyes-on-the-skies engineers like Ed Stevenson at Avco Lycoming. They'll take a big part in designing new gas turbine engines for new land, sea, air applications.
And they'll find we're a company whose compensation and fringe benefits are the best in the industry, not to mention expense-paid graduate studies at neighboring colleges.
Like the idea? Come visit Avco Lycoming and check out the possibilities. We're in Stratford, Connecticut, just 60 miles from New York.

SPEAKING OUT

Dick and Spiro Speak

Over the weekend the Daily Collegian became the first college newspaper to interview President-elect Nixon and Vice President-elect Agnew. Hereupon, the interview.

MDC: Mr. Nixon, many people have attributed your defeat in 1960 to the fact that you injured your knee then, requiring surgery, and were ill during the campaign. Although nothing like that happened this time, you did bump your head at Logan Airport.

Nixon: Yes, but there's nothing there to worry about.

MDC: Mr. Agnew, how does it feel to know that if anything happens to President Nixon your finger controls the nuclear button?

Agnew: Push one button, you've pushed 'em all.

MDC: Mr. Nixon, most administrations have had a resident intellectual and a resident buffoon, like Schlesinger and Salinger. Who will be your's?

Nixon: I intend to follow tradition, but in the interests of economy I have found a person who can fill both posts at once. He is intellectually equiped to be my advisor, yet at the same time I know the people, especially the young, think he's one big joke. David Eisenhower will do quite well.

MDC: Due to the closeness of your victory it is felt you must appoint some Democrats to your cabinet.

Nixon: Let me make one thing clear. Democrats will hold powerful posts in my government. Richard Daley will be a great Secretary of the new Department of Youth. Lester Maddox will hold two positions, head of the Civil Rights division of the Justice Department and White House chef.

MDC: Mr. Nixon, one of the most enthusiastic crowd reactions you received was when you played the piano in Texas. How long have you been playing?

Nixon: Eighteen years. Would you like to hear my campaign song? It's a take-off on " I Remember You."

Mr. Nixon sat down and attempted to play his song, but it kept sounding like "Two Faces Have I."

Nixon: Little bit of trouble there. You know, I can't wait until they play "Hail to the Chief" for me. It goes like this. . .

Nixon tried to play "Hail to the Chief" but it sounded a lot like "Theme From The Great Imposter." Finally he played "California Here I Come."

MDC: Mr. Agnew, your attitude about law and order has opened you to charges of anti-Black prejudice. Any comment?

Agnew: Nonsense, many Negroes believe in the same kind of law and order I do, I even carry the picture of one of them. Mr. Agnew then showed me a picture of Francois Duvalier.

MDC: Mr. Nixon, some political commentators say that you sold yourself to Strom Thurmond in Miani and that you will be his puppet in the White House. Any reply to that charge?

Nixon: Absolutely mmph mmph.,

Agnew: Oh gosh, the string to Tricky's mouth got twisted! That's the end of the interview, someone get this commie agitator out of here.

DAVID BASKIN

"Ignore Those Whippersnappers. It Can't Happen Here In The U.S. House Of Representatives"

Inside Report:

HUMPHREY VS. HOUTCHENS

BY ROWLAND EVANS AND ROBERT NOVAK

WASHINGTON--One day last week, Washington lobbyist John Graves stopped in at the office of the Democratic chairman of a Midwest State and asked him to support Delton L. Houtchens for Democratic National Chairman when Lawrence F. O'Brien resigns, probably within the next couple of weeks.

This visitation is the first clear sign that Houtchens, now the Missouri State Chairman, and Missouri Gov. Warren Hearnes are trying to collect on an ill-advised promise made by Vice President Hubert Humphrey last May, when Humphrey was bidding for the support of Missouri's delegation to the national convention.

Most Democratic politicians have written off Houtchens as O'Brien's replacement, for one simple reason: he, Hearnes, and much of the party apparatus sabotaged Humphrey's Missouri campaign. They did this in a variety of ways, including the omission of Humphrey's name from billboards and newspaper ads.

Moreover, some sample ballots passed out in Jackson County (Kansas City) by the leader of the Hearnes-Houtchens faction actually slated George Wallace and Republican Rep. Tom Curtis, along with Hearnes, ignoring Humphrey and Lt. Gov. Thomas Eagleton (who, despite this sabotage, defeated Curtis for the U.S. Senate). Partly responsible for this party treason was state Rep. William (Bill) Royster, Jackson County leader of the remnant of the old Pendergast machine.

That Royster would snub Humphrey and Eagleton without a wink from Houtchens and Hearnes (who won reelection handily) stretches credulity. Royster's political power depends on the statewide patronage of Gov. Hearnes, not Jackson County, which is now controlled by anti-Royster reform elements.

This plug for Wallace and Curtis paid handsome dividends on Election Day. In three Kansas City wards--the 11th, 12th, and 13th, all of them Democratic where a single pull of the lever votes the straight ticket--Hearnes ran 50 percent ahead of Humphrey and Eagleton. In fact one-third of the statewide Humphrey deficit of some 15,000 votes would have been eliminated if Humphrey had received the normal Democratic vote there.

The reason for sabotaging Humphrey was a Hearnes-Houtchens conviction that he left Chicago politically dead. Boycotting Humphrey would thus resuce Hearnes from the taint of Humphreyism.

It is against that backdrop that the pledge Humphrey made last May to Hearnes and Houtchens must be examined. As a non-primary state, Missouri's convention delegates would go pretty much as the power in the state--Hearnes and Houtchens--dictated. Bidding hard for the support of Missouri's 60 delegate-votes, Humphrey or his agents made two promises: to name Houtchens as National Chairman right after the Chicago convention and, if elected, to put Hearnes in the Humphrey Cabinet at the end of Hearnes's second term as Governor four years hence.

Also wooing Hearnes and Houtchens was Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, working for his brother's nomination. Kennedy lunched with Hearnes on May 31, one day before the state convention that would pick the convention delegates.

Kennedy was less expansive than Humphrey had been. All that Hearnes got was a pledge that at the end of Hearnes's second term, Bobby Kennedy--if elected President--would make Hearnes an ambassador to an unspecified foreign country.

Hearnes regarded this low bid as an insult and so at Chicago he and Houtchens labored mightily for Humphrey, delivering 56 votes and proselytizing for him in the hotel rooms.

Then came Humphrey's sudden decision to dump Houtchens for O'Brien, so quick he did not have time to tell Houtchens until after it happened. To soothe the shocked and angry Hearnes and Houtchens, he reiterated his earlier promise, making it contingent on the day O'Brien quit.

Humphrey can't and should not try to deliver on that pledge today. Loyal Missouri Democrats, including Rep. Richard Bolling, have already publicly attacked Houtchens for his campaign apostasy.

Despite Humphrey's inability to deliver, even if he wanted to reward disloyalty, Houtchens, backed by Hearnes, has now started an active campaign for O'Brien's job. His agent's visit to the Midwestern State Chairman may turn out to be only the first shot of a roaring battle for control of the Democratic party the next four years.

Inquiry: Only A Beginning

To the Editor,

I would like to take this opportunity to thank the COLLEGIAN for its fine coverage of "Night of Inquiry: Student Power."

I would also like to thank all the people who participated in the panel discussions, entertainment and planning of the event.

Apologies are due to some people whose ideas did not get expressed because of the dialogue taking place between people on the floor and the platform. We will make every attempt to provide a forum for these people at a later date.

I hope that more people came away from the Night of Inquiry convinced, as I was, that there are a lot of UMass students who are NOT apathetic, but who have not yet found a way in which their concern can be put to work.

The task for "student leaders" is obvious.

I invite any student who has an idea and wants to work on it to visit the King Council offfice in 207 Hampshire. Our resources are available for worth-while projects.

In addition, I strongly urge any other campus groups to let us know what resources they have available, and what programs they are involved in, so that we can work efficiently.

The Night of Inquiry was only a beginning-the rest is up to each individual. What does Student Power mean to you?

Nine Musicians "Blood, Sweat and Tears" Perform Music of the New Dimension

"Blood, Sweat and Tears" have been heralded by enthusiastic audiences throughout the country as the vanguard of a new dimension in popular music. Comprised of nine young musicians whose individual professional backgrounds cover just about every aspect of contemporary music - from jazz to rock to blues - the group is unique in that it features a five-piece horn section.

This, together with the original rhythm section, enables the group to perform its own compositions - as well as those written by other composers - with a force and style which are inevitably lacking in other pop groups. Yet, for all its power and strength, their music is - perhaps paradoxically - remarkably lyrical and, at times, even tender.

Their debut album, "CHILD IS FATHER TO THE MAN" is currently moving up the national best-seller charts. "I CAN'T QUIT HER" a single which was taken from the album, is generating excitement on Top-40 stations from coast to coast.

They may be seen here Friday, November 22, the night before the B.C. game, at 8 p.m. in the S.U. ballroom, sponsored by the S.U. Dance Committee.

Cornell Geologist To Lecture Today At Amherst College

Dr. Arthur L. Bloom, professor of geology at Cornell University and an American Geological Institute Visiting Lecturer for 1968-69, will speak at Amherst College on Thursday, November 21, in the Pratt Geology Building. His lecture, "Pleistocene Shorelines: A Test of Isostasy," will begin at 2 p.m. and is open to the public without charge.

Dr. Bloom is the author of numerous articles which have appeared in such journals as SCIENCE, The American Journal of Science, and the Bulletin of the Geological Society of America; and his book, "The Surface of the Earth," will be released by Prentice Hall early next year.

If that's what you think, we'd like to tell you something about the Norelco Tripleheader Speedshaver®.

In a very independent laboratory, we had some very independent men shave one side of their faces with a leading stainless steel blade, and the other side with a new Norelco Tripleheader.

The results showed the Tripleheader shaved as close or closer than the blade in 2 out of 3 shaves.

The Tripleheader has three rotary blades inside new, thin, Microgroover™ heads that 'float,' so it follows your face, to shave you closer.

The Tripleheader has a pop-up sideburn trimmer. A handy, coiled cord. And a 110/220 voltage selector.

300 Labor and Management Leaders To Attend Labor Arbitration Conference at UMass

More than 300 New England labor and management leaders will examine labor grievances and resolutions at the fourth annual Labor Arbitration Conference at the University of Massachusetts, Friday, Nov. 22.

Sponsored by the UMass Labor Relations and Research Center and the UMass School of Business Administration in cooperation with the American Arbitration Association, the conference will be devoted mainly to workshop discussions of the issues of labor grievances and contract remedies. A highlight of the conference will be the keynote address delivered by Prof. Robert Stutz of the University of Connecticut at a noon luncheon.

After welcoming remarks by Dr. John T. Conlon, Associate Dean of the UMass School of Business Administration, the group will gather for a panel discussion that will explore the initiation, processing and resolution of grievances. Panelists include Prof. Daniel MacLeod of the Boston University School of Law, Prof. John Hogan of the University of New Hampshire, and Boston labor arbitrator William Fallon.

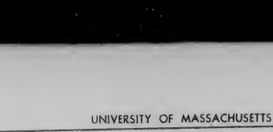
In the afternoon, the conferees will break up into three workshops that will focus on the phases of arbitration: the contract, the issues and the impasse. Prof. MacLeod, Robert Manning of the Boston law firm of Angoff, Goldman, Manning & Pyle, and Allan Drachman, assistant corporation counsel for Boston will participate in the contract workshop. The issues workshop will involve Prof. Hogan, Salvatore Camello, President of the Mass. State Labor Council, and David Fine, director of Industrial Relations for Stop and Shop Co. in Boston. Participants in the third workshop will be William Fallon, Daniel Hurley, Commissioner for the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, and Robert Moran, chairman of the Massachusetts Board of Conciliation and Arbitration.

Cooperating sponsors of the conference include the Massachusetts State Labor Council, AFL-CIO, the Associated Industries of Massachusetts, and the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service.

Those interested in registering should write to the Conference Center, University of Massachusetts, Amherst.

"Spectrum" to be Distributed, Next Issue Set for February

SPECTRUM will be distributed throughout the campus at the end of this week, editor-in-chief Barbara Ditkoff announced today. This issue will be larger than previous issues and contains a more diverse collection of material.



More non-fiction and feature articles appear in this SPECTRUM. Poetry by E.M. Beekman, Larry Trillo, and several other contributors is presented, along with four reviews by Donald Junkins. SPECTRUM will also feature articles on Project 10 and Hampshire College and an interview with Ramon Ruiz.

Heads of residence will be asked to distribute SPECTRUM through their counselors, one copy to a room. Commuters' copies will be available in the Student Union lobby at the beginning of next week.

The next issue of SPECTRUM, scheduled for February publication, will feature the CCENS program and the role of the black student on campus. The deadline for the next issue is December thirteenth.

Give your contact lenses a bath tonight

In order to keep your contact lenses as comfortable and convenient as they were meant to be, you have to take care of them. But until now you needed two or more separate solutions to properly prepare and maintain your contacts. Not with Lensine. Lensine is the one lens solution for complete contact lens care.

Cleaning your contacts with Lensine retards the buildup of foreign deposits on the lenses. And soaking your contacts in Lensine overnight assures you of proper lens hygiene. You get a free soaking case on the bottom of every bottle of Lensine.

It has been demonstrated that improper storage between wearings may result in the growth of bacteria on the lenses. This is a sure cause of eye irritation and in some cases can endanger your vision. Bacteria cannot grow in Lensine which is sterile, self-sanitizing, and antiseptic.

Just a drop or two of Lensine, before you insert your lens, coats and lubricates it allowing the lens to float more freely in the eye's fluids. That's because Lensine is an "isotonic" solution, which means that it blends with the natural fluids of the eye.

Let your contacts be the convenience they were meant to be. Get some Lensine, from the Murine Company, Inc.

Czech Students Stage Sit-In Strike, Protest Soviet Occupation Pressures

PRAGUE (AP) - Czechoslovakia's leaders appealed Wednesday night to striking students to end their massive sit-ins and "stop in time the danger which is threatening us."

The joint declaration broadcast by the presidiums of the Communist party, the government, the National Assembly and the Trade Union Council said "irresponsible people" were trying to channel student activity to "divide the working class." This is a serious accusation in a Communist country.

The students, protesting a loss of freedoms under Kremlin pressure in this Soviet-occupied country, said they would prolong for 24 hours the sit-in strike that had been scheduled to end at 8 p.m. The strike began three days ago.

But there were reports that disagreements among the students over an ending time had resulted in a compromise that would end the strike at noon Thursday.

The test of wills between the Communist leaders and the students intensified when the students got worker support with token sympathy strikes in some Prague plants. Other plants blasted their whistles and sirens for 15 minutes to show solidarity with the students.

The Prague Student Action Committee's announcement that the strike would be prolonged said students were preparing for "a decisive clash with internal political reaction represented by disguised neo-Stalinists."

The Prague Communist party Presidium met to demand that the strike end immediately. There were meetings between students and government officials.

Chemical Engineering Dept. Announces New Appointments

Two major appointments this fall to the UMass department of chemical engineering have been announced by Dr. John Eldridge, head of the department.

James M. Douglas and Robert L. Laurence have been appointed professor and associate professor respectively of chemical engineering.

Dr. Douglas came to UMass from the University of Rochester where he taught for three years. Before teaching for a year at the University of Delaware in 1965, he spent six years with the Atlantic Refining Co.

He is conducting research in the areas of process dynamics and control, reactor design and optimization. He has 13 published articles to his credit on these and other subjects and is preparing eight others including a book for Prentice Hall.

Engineers, Mathematicians:

you should consider a career with NSA

. . . if you are stimulated by the prospect of undertaking truly significant assignments in your field, working in its most advanced regions.

. . . if you are attracted by the opportunity to contribute directly and importantly to the security of our nation.

. . . if you want to share optimum facilities and equipment, including one of the world's foremost computer/EDP installations, in your quest for a stimulating and satisfying career.

The National Security Agency is responsible for designing and developing "secure" communications systems and EDP devices to transmit, receive and process vital information. The mission encompasses many aspects of communications, computer (hardware and software) technology, and information recording and storage . . . and provides a wealth of career opportunities to the graduate engineer and mathematician.

ENGINEERS will find work which is performed nowhere else . . . devices and systems are constantly being developed which are in advance of any outside the Agency. As an Agency engineer, you will carry out research, design, development, testing and evaluation of sophisticated, large-scale cryptocommunications and EDP systems. You may also participate in related studies of electromagnetic propagation, upper atmosphere phenomena, and solid state devices using the latest equipment for advanced research within NSA's fully instrumented laboratories.

MATHEMATICIANS define, formulate and solve complex communications-related problems. Statistical mathematics, matrix algebra, and combinatorial analysis are but a few of the tools applied by Agency mathematicians. Opportunities for contributions in computer sciences and theoretical research are also offered.

Continuing your Education?
NSA's graduate study program may permit you to pursue two semesters of full-time graduate study at full salary. Nearly all academic costs are borne by NSA, whose proximity to seven universities is an additional asset.

Salaries and Benefits
Starting salaries, depending on education and experience, range from $8,000 to $13,500, and increases follow as you assume additional responsibility. Policies relating to vacations, insurance and retirement are liberal, and you enjoy the advantages of Federal employment without Civil Service certification.

Another benefit is the NSA location, between Washington and Baltimore, which permits your choice of city, suburban or country living and allows easy access to the Chesapeake Bay, ocean beaches, and other summer and winter recreation areas.

Campus Interview Dates:

Check with the Placement Office now to arrange an interview with NSA representatives on campus. The Placement Office has additional information about NSA, or you may write: Chief, College Relations Branch, National Security Agency, Ft. George G. Meade, Maryland 20755, ATTN: M321. UMASS EMPLOYEES RETIRE

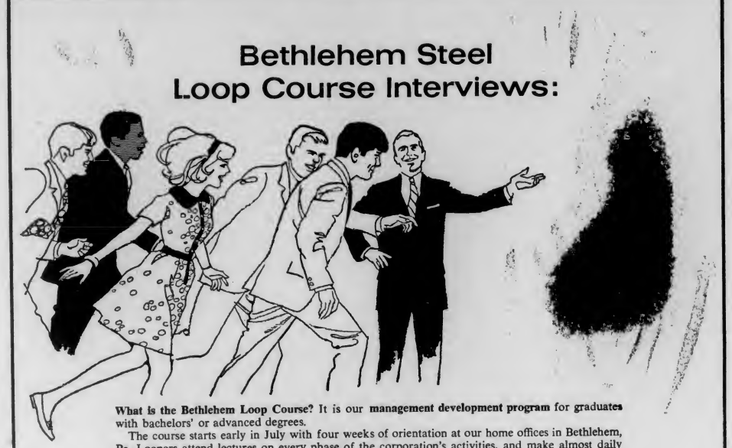
Two long-time employees of UMass have retired from their positions with the Physical Plant operation.

Gershom Ewell of Route 202, Pelham, has left his job as fireman's helper after 17 years with the University. He expects to leave for Alaska next spring for an extended fishing trip.

Francis Richmond of 249 East Pleasant St., Amherst, is leaving his position as steam engineer after 15 years on the job. He plans to move to Sacramento, California.



Black Players Needed for Major Roles In Satirical Comedy Purlie Victorious

Casting dates have been announced for PURLIE VICTORIOUS by Ossie Davis, the first work of a black playwright to be presented at the University, scheduled for production on February 21 and 22. A comedy satirizing Southern segregationist attitudes, PURLIE VICTORIOUS stars black players in its major roles, as well as in the finale, for which a large ensemble of people of all ages is required.

Rehearsals will begin in January, but tryouts have been scheduled early to avoid any conflict with the Christmas holidays, finals or intercession. All interested persons, regardless of previous experience, are invited to the readings, to be held in Room 119 in Bartlett Hall at 7:30 p.m. on Dec. 2, 3, and 4, and on Dec. 7 at 1:30 p.m. Anyone wishing to arrange for a private audition at another time, or desiring further details, is invited to call the director at 253-7152. Scripts are available for advance reading from the library reserve desk or the Speech Office.

Bethlehem Steel Loop Course Interviews:

What is the Bethlehem Loop Course? It is our management development program for graduates with bachelors' or advanced degrees.

The course starts early in July with four weeks of orientation at our home offices in Bethlehem, Pa. Loopers attend lectures on every phase of the corporation's activities, and make almost daily visits to a steel plant.

Steel Plant Loopers, who comprise a majority of the average loop class of 150 to 200 graduates, proceed to various plants where they go through a brief orientation program before beginning their on-the-job training assignments. Within a short time after joining the course, most loopers are ready for assignments aimed toward higher levels of management.

How about other loopers? Our Sales Department loopers (30 or so) remain at the home office for about a year of training. Most are then assigned to district offices where they take over established accounts.

Fabricated Steel Construction loopers are trained in a drafting room, on a field erection project, in a fabricating shop, and in an engineering office. A looper's first work assignment is based on interests and aptitudes disclosed during this program.

Loopers in Accounting, Shipbuilding, Mining, Research, Traffic, Purchasing, Finance and Law, General Services, and Industrial and Public Relations go through training programs tailored to their types of work.

Where would YOU fit in? Check your degree or the one most similar to it.

MECHANICAL ENGINEERING—Engineering or mechanical maintenance departments of steel plants, fabricating works, mining operations, and shipyards. Fuel and combustion departments. Supervision of production operations. Marine engineering assignments in Shipbuilding Department. Also: Sales or Research.

METALLURGICAL ENGINEERING – Metallurgical departments of steel plants and manufacturing operations. Engineering and service divisions. Technical and supervisory positions in steelmaking departments and rolling mills. Also: Research or Sales.

CHEMICAL ENGINEERS—Technical and supervisory positions in coke works, including production of byproduct chemicals. Fuel and combustion departments, including responsibility for operation and maintenance of air and water pollution control equipment. Engineering and metallurgical departments. Steelmaking operations. Also: Research or Sales.

INDUSTRIAL ENGINEERING—Positions in steel plants, fabricating works, shipyards, and mines. Engineering and maintenance departments. Supervision of steelmaking, rolling, manufacturing, and fabricating operations. Also: Sales.

CIVIL ENGINEERING: Fabricated Steel Construction assignments in engineering, field erection, or works management. Steel plant, mine, or shipyard assignments in engineering, construction, and maintenance. Supervision of production operations. Sales Department assignments as line salesman or sales engineer (technical service to architects and engineers).

ELECTRICAL ENGINEERING—Steel plant, fabricating works, mining operations, and shipyard electrical engineering, construction, and maintenance departments. Technical and supervisory positions in large production operations involving sophisticated electrical and electronic equipment. Also: Research or Sales.

MINING ENGINEERING – Our Mining Department operates coal and iron ore mining operations and limestone quarries, many of which are among the most modern and efficient in the industry. This 10,000-man activity offers unlimited opportunities to mining engineers. Also: Research.

NAVAL ARCHITECTS AND MARINE ENGINEERS: Graduates are urged to inquire about opportunities in our Shipbuilding Department, including the Central Technical Division, our design and engineering organization. Also: Traffic.

OTHER TECHNICAL DEGREES—Every year we recruit loopers with technical degrees other than those listed above. Seniors enrolled in such curricula are encouraged to sign up for an interview.

ACCOUNTANTS—Graduates in accounting or business administration (24 hours of accounting are preferred) are recruited for training for supervisory assignments in our 3,000-man Accounting Department.

OTHER NON-TECHNICAL DEGREES – Graduates with degrees in liberal arts, business, and the humanities are invited to discuss opportunities in the Sales Department. Some non-technical graduates may be chosen to fill openings in steel plant operations and other departments.

NOW'S THE TIME TO SIGN UP FOR AN INTERVIEW. And when you register at the placement office, be sure to pick up a copy of our booklet, "Careers with Bethlehem Steel and the Loop Course." It contains important information about the corporation and your opportunities through the Loop Course.

Conference And Others Snub Redmen

Vermont tailback Harry Canning, New Hampshire tackle Al Witteman and Connecticut halfback Vinny Clements have been selected as the top offensive, defensive and sophomore players in the Yankee Conference for their performances last Saturday.

Canning, a converted defensive end, carried 27 times for 171 yards as Vermont lost at C. W. Post. The 6'3 205-lb. senior had netted 292 yards in 35 carries the week before to accumulate a total of 463 yards rushing in just two games.

Witteman, a 6' 225-lb. senior, sparked the aggressive New Hampshire defense that gave Massachusetts its first home shutout in 8 years. The 16-0 victory enabled the Wildcats to tie for first place in the Conference with Connecticut.

Clements, a 6'3 standout, gained 161 yards in 22 tries, including two touchdowns, caught two passes for 30 yards and did some excellent blocking as Connecticut whipped Rhode Island, 35-6, to gain a share of the YanCon championship. Clements set a new season rushing record for Connecticut with 844 yards.

TOM YORK
LONE REOMEN PICK

Other nominations were - Offense - fullback Jim DeWitt (Connecticut), halfback Bill Phillips (New Hampshire) and guard Bruce Fulton (Massachusetts); Defense - linebacker Nick Turco (Connecticut), linebacker Ken Kuzman (Rhode Island), end John Varricchione (Vermont) and linebacker John Farrelly (Massachusetts); Sophomore - fullback Mike Shaughnessy (New Hampshire) and middle guard Phil Crabb (Vermont).

In other local football news, somewhat of a snub was issued upon the UMass football team by the Springfield DAILY NEWS, when in its selection of the top 13 college players in Western Massachusetts, the newspaper named only one Redman, defensive end Tom York.

The newspaper, named five members of the Springfield College and three members of the Amherst College team and two each of Williams and A.I.C.

In Boston this week, Boston Patriot coach Mike Holavak, when asked if his biggest mistake of the season was not drafting UMass quarterback Greg Landry, in light of the quarterback problems the A.F.L. team has had.

Holavak said, "Landry only has started one game and he was clobered in that one. I have had rookie qb Tom Sherman doing the job for three weeks."

The Patriot coach, whose team is rolling along at a three win, seven loss clip, seems to forget that Landry, in that game was playing a team named the Dallas Cowboys, and that in that game Landry won the Detroit Lion team award as offensive player of the week.

Frosh Roster Shapes Up

The University of Massachusetts freshmen basketball team, under the direction of Coach Peter Broaca, is optimistically looking to the start of the 1968-69 season.

Coach Broaca has been working with a 15-man squad in preparation for the 15-game schedule that features some of New England's best freshmen teams.

Top performers thus far have been forwards Julius Erving, 6'4 (Roosevelt, N.Y.), Rich Vogeley, 6'5 (New Hyde Park, N.Y.), and Bill Kesgen, 6'5 (E. Rutherford, N.J.), center Tom Austin, 6'8 (Swansea, Mass.), and guards John Betancourt, 5'11 (Westwood, N.J.), Mike Pagliara, 5'10 (Wyckoff, N.J.), Chris Nichols, 6' (Madison, Conn.) and Don Moore, 5'10 (Shelburne Falls, Mass.).

Other squad members are Warren Anton, 6'3 (Adams, Mass.), Chris Coffin, 6'4 (Westford, Mass.), Bob Fultz, 6'2 (Natick, Mass.), Joe Landolfi, 6'3 (Altoona, Pa.), Leon Saunders, 6'2 (Roosevelt, N.Y.), Harold Connors, 6'6 (Pittsfield, Mass.) and William Spierdowis, 6'6 (Norwood, Mass.).

The UMass frosh will open their season by hosting the American International College frosh December 4 at 6 p.m. in Curry Hicks Cage.

Eagles Refuse To Be Smug Yucika Looks For Rough Game

BY MARTHA CURRAN
Senior Reporter

Unlike most UMass football fans and fanatics, Boston College Coach Joe Yukica "expects nothing but a tough ball game" when the BC Eagles come to Alumni Stadium Saturday for the Redmen season finale. "It's their last game," Yukica said, "and it's at home. It will be a tough game."

Yukica, whose own football team "is running up and down the field in good shape," said "the big problem at UMass this season has been the unbelievable number of injuries you've had. The loss of key individuals and the resulting changes have to effect play, execution and timing."

In spite of Redman injuries and the effect on the UMass throwing attack by the loss of key receivers, Yukica expects a great effort from UMass.

Boston College defense is definitely "coming along," the Eagles Coach said of his own team. "In seven games, we've had 20 interceptions." The offensive line, he added, "blocks well and consistently."

Yukica, who has made no wholesale changes in his line-up from week to week, often has a choice among player personnel. Fred Willis and Jim Catone share halfback responsibilities. Peter McHugh, who broke a bone in his hand earlier in the season, is competing with Paul Dellavilla for the fullback position now held by Joe McDonald. Mike Fallon, who also broke a bone in September, played partial games as quarterback against Penn State and VML.

Frank Harris, whose "handling and understanding of football has improved immensely," according to Yukica, will start at quarterback for BC Saturday. The 6'1" 188 lb. sophomore rated All-State at Malden Catholic. He broke the BC game completions record (30) against Army and was 8 for 12 in thirty minutes of play last Saturday against VMI.

John Egan, 6'4", 228 lb. senior from New Milford, N.J., has played tight end, offensive tackle and defensive tackle in three years. He was moved to center to replace '67 senior Mike Evans. One of his key blocks sprung Dave Bennett 87 yards for a touchdown against Navy.

Another "prize sophomore," Gary Guenther, 6'3", 225 lb., from Newtonville, N.Y., was moved from tackle to right guard.

Bob Bouley, 6'3", 240 lb. junior from Weymouth, will start at right tackle. Bouley, son of BC All-American, All-Pro (LA Rams) Gil Bouley, has "the best potential of any BC lineman."

Right end Steve Kives, 6'1", 190 lb. junior "gets by on moves and guts."

BC offense runs with halfbacks so Joe McDonald, 5'11", 202 lb. junior from Weymouth has filled the fullback position left by (now Bronco) Brendan McCarthy as a tough pocket blocker.

Dave Bennett, "an exceptional player," set a new season touchdown record at BC with 14. The 6', 290 lb. senior from North Attleboro, earned two consecutive All-East awards after scoring four touchdowns against Navy and three against Buffalo. Bennett, Yukica said, "is very much a team player."

Gerry Ragosa, 6'3", 225 lb. senior from Norwalk, Conn., will start at right defensive tackle with plenty of Varsity experience.

Salmon has had 10 career interceptions, including a key pickoff against UMass in 1966. Grace, once ran Brian Dowling's passes into touchdowns for St. Ignatius High School in Cleveland.

UMass Hoop Prospects Bright As Season Nears

By PETER PASCARELLI
Assistant Sports Editor

If a panel of basketball experts is right, this year's UMass hoop season may be one that will be hard to forget. BASKETBALL WEEKLY has picked the Redmen 98th in the country and fifth in New England.

While this may not sound like startling news to those who only think of college basketball as being UCLA, the fact that UMass is finally being noticed as a rising hoop power is news.

A season ago, the Redmen surprised not a few when they tied for the Yankee Conference title with Rhode Island. The 8-2 Conference mark and the 14-10 overall performance was the finest UMass basketball season in over four years.

This season, under the direction of third year coach Jack Leaman, whose great job with an inexperienced team last year was overlooked by many, the Redmen find themselves with a returning group that includes three starters from last season, a host of others with much varsity experience and a healthy group of promising sophomores and transfers.

Leading the squad will be co-captains Joe Disarcina and Peter Gayeska, who were high school teammates at Somerville High School.

Disarcina, who was mentioned in that same BASKETBALL WEEKLY as being one of the finest guards in the East, holds most UMass school records in assists. He also will score in the double figures, and plays fine defense. The one problem that the senior has had, is a tendency to fouling. His presence is inoperative for UMass success.

Gayeska, the big 6'9 center is a story in himself. He came to UMass with only one year of basketball experience under his belt. Gayeska has improved steadily each season, earning the praise of his coach, who calls him, "about the hardest worker I've ever seen."

Last season, Gayeska showed flashes of being as good as anyone around, including a performance against Rhode Island in which he all but undressed the highly-touted Ram Art Stephenson. So far in early drills, Gayeska looks stronger and more mobile.

The other returning starter from last season is guard Ray Ellerbrook. The southpaw was second leading scorer for the Redmen last year, as he featured a deadly jumper. The duo of Ellerbrook and Disarcina should be one of the finest backcourts in the east.

The forward position was the only place seriously depleted by graduation, what with the departures of Gary Gagserack, Jim Giarotti, Rick Perkins, and a guy by the name of Tindall.

Leading the pack for starting berths, at this time, appears to be Ken Mathias, a 6'6 sophomore, Mathias led last year's freshman squad with a 17.6 scoring average.

Right now it appears that junior Jack Gallagher has the inside track on the other starting berth. Gallagher who stands 6'5, came off the bench to spark several rallies last season.

Also in contention for a forward spot is transfer student Dennis Chapman, Chapman who used to go to Baltimore College, is a mobile 6'5, and is a fine shooter. An eye injury suffered a few weeks ago in practice has healed without difficulty.

Leaman has experimented in drills with John Shockro at forward. Shockro, a guard last year is being looked towards to give some defensive help up front besides spelling the backcourt starters.

Sophomore Frank Schaffeld, who averaged seven points with last year's frosh, was the outstanding player along with Ellerbrook in the Harvard scrimmage two weeks ago. Schaffeld is 6'6.

Behind Gayeska, the Redmen are two deep in experienced backup strength. Junior Dick Samulson, whose hair will make him easily noticable to UMass fans, turned in several solid performances last season, and can be expected to see extensive action at center.

John Dreyer, 6'5 saw limited duty last year, but the one time he was called upon for extensive duty, in the Maine game, he responded with a cluth effort.

At guard, in addition to Shockro, will be a good supply of depth. Junior Dick Starsiak is the only one with varsity experience, however.

In addition to Starsiak, who has looked good in scrimmages, will be sophomores Bill Greeley, Bob Dempsey, Jon Kruper and Tom Hellen.

UMass faces, as usual, one of the toughest schedules anywhere, with such schools as Boston College, Syracuse, Providence, Holy Cross and Fordham listed in addition to the Ten Conference games. In addition the Redmen will travel to Evansville, Ind. during Christmas recess to play in the Evansville Christmas Tourney. In addition to the host team and U-Mass, will be New Mexico State and Tennessee Tech.

The Redmen will open on November 30 against Rider College at Trenton, N.J. The home opener is December 4 against A.I.C. after which will be five Conference games in a row until the tourney.

UMass has size, a host of good shooters, and a fine young coach. One thing that has to be obtained is winning confidence. The first seeds were planted last year, and it all may culminate this season. At any rate, the 1968-69 edition of the Redmen looks like as exciting and promising bunch as any seen in a long time.

Trustees Choose UMB Sight

Alumni Objections and New Site Cloud End of Year Old Problem

By MARK SILVERMAN
Issue Editor

The proposed Columbia Point sight for the intown Campus of UMass-Boston drew opposition from a group of UMass Alumni in the form of a letter to Frank P. Boyden, chairman of the Board of Trustees.

The Trustees are scheduled to choose a sight for the new campus today.

George F. Benoit, President of the UMass Alumni Association, told the trustees in the letter, "We have grave misgivings that the recommendation of the Building and Ground Committee and the Board of Trustees...will not be made on the Educational merits of the case."

"Specifically, we would view the selection of Columbia Point with total disapprobation."

To make the Trustee's choice all the more interesting, an eleventh hour site proposal was made Wednesday. Under it, the campus would be split into three in-town locations, including property offered to the school by Richard Cardinal Cushing.

The Tri-pod proposal was made by faculty, students, and administrators of UMB with consultants paid under a Ford Foundation grant. The three sites which would be joined together are not adjacent, but are close to each other.

One includes 25 acres in the South End, spreading between Malden, Dover, and Washington Streets. It includes the three acres offered by Cushing. This land, offered to UMass Tuesday, includes Holy Cross Cathedral at Washington and Milton Streets.

The offer has the provision that a chapel be retained behind the main altar for Church use. The land, the Cardinal has said, would house a University center for church study.

The Park Square area and the air space over the Massachusetts Turnpike are the other sights in the "tri-pod" proposal. The Park Square sight consists of two and a half acres between Arlington and Isabella Streets and Columbus Ave. UMB's present building is in this area.

The air space over the turnpike would include four and a half acres, between Arlington and Washington Streets.

Out of State Student Limit Change Debated By Senate Exec. Committee

By STAFF SHEEHAN
Staff Reporter

A Bill recommending liberalization of the 5% out of state rule was put on the Senate agenda for the next meeting at last night's Student Senate Executive Committee meeting. The sponsors, Senators Madden and Staples, proposed the Bill recommending to the Board of Trustees that the present 5% ceiling on out of state student admissions be changed. No specific figure was given as to how much the increase should be.

Debate in the Committee centered on the novelty of the Bill and what direction it would take. Vice President Hartwell suggested that the Bill be committeed to the Executive Committee with the idea that President Silverman would go to the Admissions office for advice, and report back his findings.

Also, it was noted that the final authority for such a change is the State Legislature. Since this implies that many channels will be used in the life of the Bill, it was committed indefinitely while the problem is studied.

Another controversial Bill was a recommendation to the University President that future dormitories be constructed in an apartment style. President Silverman, the sponsor, explained that this topic was introduced to find out the student opinion on a new type of housing arrangement.

Many questions were raised in the ensuing debate centering around the amount of study to be needed. Hartwell pointed out that both this and the previously mentioned Bill set a new precedent of legislation coming to the Senate after decisions were made in the higher echelons of authority. This he termed "desirable." The Bill was committed to Student Matters Committee until the Jan. 25, 1969 Senate meeting.

Much debate centered also on S66, calling for a change in the Senate By-Laws over Election procedures. Deverton Cochrane, Chairman of Student Government Affairs Committee, asked that the Bill be placed on the next Senate agenda as all legal requirements of advance notice had been fulfilled.

Both Hartwell and Silverman contended that the Bill's appearance in the previous week's committee reports had not been sufficient notice, and that the Bill should be referred back to Committee for one week. Bruce Balboni and Daniel Madden, Chairmen of Public Relations and Ways and means respectively, argued that more exposure of the Bill to the Senate is needed. The outcome was a 6 to 3 vote to recommit S66 to S.G.A. Committee.

The Index sent representatives to ask a suspension of regular proceedures for a category change. The approaching vacation was stated as the reason. The change allowed the Index to put $83.48 into a new category to purchase a new light table. This was described as aid in seeing colors accurately on slides, before they are sent to the publishers.

Lederle Threatens Action Against SDS Dog Protest

By RONALD S. LA BRECQUE
Senior Reporter

Any person taking part in the proposed "napalming" of a live dog next Tuesday will be prosecuted to the full extent of the law, President John W. Lederle warned Thursday.

Lederle's statement followed an announcement Wednesday night that SDS members would use "homemade napalm" to burn a live dog in protest of the use of napalm in Vietnam.

Lederle said that he though the announcement was only a publicity stunt in poor taste and bad judgement. He added however, that if the act is carried out, the students taking part would be prosecuted by both the University judicial court and the civil courts.

A spokesman in the Hampshire County District Attorney's office said that an act of cruelty to animals such as is planned carries a maximum penalty of a $500 fine and a prison term.

The announcement of napalming was made at the weekly meeting of the UMass SDS by undergraduates Steven Gaman and Michale Minski. The UM demonstration is scheduled for noon Tuesday and will coincide with a two day visit of Marine recruiters on campus.

Reaction to the announcement both on campus and through telephone calls to the University news bureau and "Daily Collegian" from persons outside the campus community were unusually vocal and negative to the proposed demonstration.

The SDS spokesman had no comment on the course of action SDS would take considering the strong reaction and notice of legal action which could be taken against persons for killing a dog. "He did state that "things will be happening Monday and Tuesday."

I Still Think Learning Should Be A Joy

(Editor's Note: The following letter was written by Gena Corea, a former UMass student and Daily Collegian staff member. Gena left school in October of 1967 to work for an area newspaper when college "began to interfere with (her) education." The article she wrote at that time appears on page 7 and may prove to be interesting reading in conjunction with the following letter.)

Athens, Greece
Nov. 10, 1968

To the editor:

It was a hot summer in Athens. The operation was the next morning. I put my bathrobe on and went out to sit in the courtyard of the hospital.

Other patients sat in twos and threes on benches and I listened to the gentle sound of the Greek voices. Always the Greek voices.

Vongalion saw me and came to sit beside me. She's a Creton girl, 15, with long black hair and clear black eyes. A gentle face, with no make-up. We were in the same ward.

Interested in the American, she tried to talk to me. But she spoke no English, and I, no Greek.

She looked intently at me with those black eyes and repeated the Greek words slowly over and over and took my hand and squeezed it and tried to make me understand. She made motions with her hands and sometimes I would understand a little.

"Scolicoithetis?" she asked. That word I knew. Appendicitis. I nodded yes. And she said, "Teporta." (It's nothing.) And I understood. And when I understood something, we both laughed and a woman watching us try to talk laughed too and cupped my face in her hands. "Kola," she said, laughing "Kola" (Good.)

But there was much I couldn't understand. I tried to tell Vongalion I would get a Greek book (vivlio) and then we could have a real conversation.

She squeezed my hand and stood up. "Filisa," she said. (Friend.) And she went back to the ward.

There was a world behind those clear black eyes I could not know. What is life like in a little village in Crete? What ever happened to her uncle--the crazy one who tried to live in America three times and, three times, was sent back to Greece? What does she fear? What does she hope for? There is a key I don't have to Vongalion--her language. And I know there is much locked away from me.

It was a little over a year ago that I left UMass. And I left because I thought it was unnecessary to learn a foreign language. I was wrong to think that, although it was not wrong that I left. Some things I have to discover for myself.

If I had stayed and tried to learn a language out of obedience, not desire, I never would have succeeded. The only reason I heard for learning a language never would have convinced me: i. e. it is necessary to learn a foreign language (to the intermediate level) in order to be an educated person. Never did I hear that you should learn another language if you want to know what people think and feel, if you want to understand them, if you want to enter another world.

To become an educated person is a dreary chore.

To learn to talk with a 15-year-old clear-eyed Greek girl and understand what she feels is a joy. I still think learning should be a joy. And I still think if you are left alone to learn as your curiosity and desires dictate, you'll eventually want to learn what's on the university's syllabus.

I must prepare for my classes now. I teach English as a foreign language in a suburb of Athens.

Eagles Refuse To Be Smug Yucika Looks For Rough Game

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
Sports
VOL. XCVII NO. 54
THURS., NOVEMBER 21, 1968

BY MARTHA CURRAN
Senior Reporter

Unlike most UMass football fans and fanatics, Boston College Coach Joe Yukica "expects nothing but a tough ball game" when the BC Eagles come to Alumni Stadium Saturday for the Redmen season finale. "It's their last game," Yukica said, "and it's at home. It will be a tough game."

Yukica, whose own football team "is running up and down the field in good shape," said "the big problem at UMass this season has been the unbelievable number of injuries you've had. The loss of key individuals and the resulting changes have to effect play, execution and timing."

In spite of Redman injuries and the effect on the UMass throwing attack by the loss of key receivers, Yukica expects a great effort from UMass.

Boston College defense is definitely "coming along," the Eagles Coach said of his own team. "In seven games, we've had 20 interceptions." The offensive line, he added, "blocks well and consistently."

Yukica, who has made no wholesale changes in his line-up from week to week, often has a choice among player personnel. Fred Willis and Jim Catone share halfback responsibilities. Peter McHugh, who broke a bone in his hand earlier in the season, is competing with Paul Dellavilla for the fullback position now held by Joe McDonald. Mike Fallon, who also broke a bone in September, played partial games as quarterback against Penn State and VMI.

Frank Harris, whose "handling and understanding of football has improved immensely," according to Yukica, will start at quarterback for BC Saturday. The 6'1" 188 lb. sophomore rated All-State at Malden Catholic. He broke the BC game completions record (30) against Army and was 8 for 12 in thirty minutes of play last Saturday against VMI.

John Egan, 6'4", 228 lb. senior from New Milford, N.J., has played tight end, offensive tackle and defensive tackle in three years. He was moved to center to replace '67 senior Mike Evans. One of his key blocks sprung Dave Bennett 87 yards for a touchdown against Navy.

Another "prize sophomore," Gary Guenther, 6'3", 225 lb., from Newtonville, N.Y., was moved from tackle to right guard.

Bob Bouley, 6'3", 240 lb. junior from Weymouth, will start at right tackle. Bouley, son of BC All-American, All-Pro (LA Rams) Gil Bouley, has "the best potential of any BC lineman."

Right end Steve Kives, 6'1", 190 lb. junior "gets by on moves and guts."

BC offense runs with halfbacks so Joe McDonald, 5'11", 202 lb. junior from Weymouth has filled the fullback position left by (now Bronco) Brendan McCarthy as a tough pocket blocker.

Dave Bennett, "an exceptional player," set a new season touchdown record at BC with 14. The 6', 290 lb. senior from North Attleboro, earned two consecutive All-East awards after scoring four touchdowns against Navy and three against Buffalo. Bennett, Yukica said, "is very much a team player."

Salmon has had 10 career interceptions, including a key pickoff against UMass in 1966, Grace, once ran Brian Dowling's passes into touchdowns for St. Ignatius High School in Cleveland.

The sponsors, Senators Madden and Staples, proposed the Bill recommending to the Board of Trustees that the present 5% ceiling on out of state student admissions be changed. No specific figure was given as to how much the increase should be.

Debate in the Committee centered on the novelty of the Bill and what direction it would take. Vice President Hartwell suggested that the Bill be committeed to the Executive Committee with the idea that President Silverman would go to the Admissions office for advice, and report back his findings.

Also, it was noted that the final authority for such a change is the State Legislature. Since this implies that many channels will be used in the life of the Bill, it was committed indefinitely while the problem is studied.

Another controversial Bill was a recommendation to the University President that future dormitories be constructed in an apartment style. President Silverman, the sponsor, explained that this topic was introduced to find out the student opinion on a new type of housing arrangement.

Many questions were raised in the ensuing debate centering around the amount of study to be needed. Hartwell pointed out that both this and the previously mentioned Bill set a new precedent of legislation coming to the Senate after decisions were made in the higher echelons of authority. This he termed "desirable." The Bill was committed to Student Matters Committee until the Jan. 25, 1969 Senate meeting.

Much debate centered also on S66, calling for a change in the Senate By-Laws over Election procedures. Deverton Cochrane, Chairman of Student Government Affairs Committee, asked that the Bill be placed on the next Senate agenda as all legal requirements of advance notice had been fulfilled.

Both Hartwell and Silverman contended that the Bill's appearance in the previous week's committee reports had not been sufficient notice, and that the Bill should be referred back to Committee for one week. Bruce Balboni and Daniel Madden, Chairmen of Public Relations and Ways and means respectively, argued that more exposure of the Bill to the Senate is needed. The outcome was a 6 to 3 vote to recommit S66 to S.G.A. Committee.

The Index sent representatives to ask a suspension of regular proceedures for a category change. The approaching vacation was stated as the reason. The change allowed the Index to put $83.48 into a new category to purchase a new light table. This was described as aid in seeing colors accurately on slides, before they are sent to the publishers.

Lederle Threatens Action Against SDS Dog Protest

By RONALD S. LA BRECQUE
Senior Reporter

Any person taking part in the proposed "napalming" of a live dog next Tuesday will be prosecuted to the full extent of the law, President John W. Lederle warned Thursday.

Lederle's statement followed an announcement Wednesday night that SDS members would use "homemade napalm" to burn a live dog in protest of the use of napalm in Vietnam.

Lederle said that he though the announcement was only a publicity stunt in poor taste and bad judgement. He added however, that if the act is carried out, the students taking part would be prosecuted by both the University judicial court and the civil courts.

A spokesman in the Hampshire County District Attorney's office said that an act of cruelty to animals such as is planned carries a maximum penalty of a $500 fine and a prison term.

The announcement of napalming was made at the weekly meeting of the UMass SDS by undergraduates Steven Gaman and Michale Minski. The UM demonstration is scheduled for noon Tuesday and will coincide with a two day visit of Marine recruiters on campus.

Reaction to the announcement both on campus and through telephone calls to the University news bureau and "Daily Collegian" from persons outside the campus community were unusually vocal and negative to the proposed demonstration.

The SDS spokesman had no comment on the course of action SDS would take considering the strong reaction and notice of legal action which could be taken against persons for killing a dog. "He did state that "things will be happening Monday and Tuesday."

I Still Think Learning Should Be A Joy

(Editor's Note: The following letter was written by Gena Corea, a former UMass student and Daily Collegian staff member. Gena left school in October of 1967 to work for an area newspaper when college "began to interfere with (her) education." The article she wrote at that time appears on page 7 and may prove to be interesting reading in conjunction with the following letter.)

Athens, Greece
Nov. 10, 1968

To the editor:

It was a hot summer in Athens. The operation was the next morning. I put my bathrobe on and went out to sit in the courtyard of the hospital.

Other patients sat in twos and threes on benches and I listened to the gentle sound of the Greek voices. Always the Greek voices.

Vongalion saw me and came to sit beside me. She's a Creton girl, 15, with long black hair and clear black eyes. A gentle face, with no make-up. We were in the same ward.

Interested in the American, she tried to talk to me. But she spoke no English, and I, no Greek.

She looked intently at me with those black eyes and repeated the Greek words slowly over and over and took my hand and squeezed it and tried to make me understand. She made motions with her hands and sometimes I would understand a little.

"Scolicoithetis?" she asked. That word I knew. Appendicitis. I nodded yes. And she said, "Teporta." (It's nothing.) And I understood. And when I understood something, we both laughed and a woman watching us try to talk laughed too and cupped my face in her hands. "Kola," she said, laughing "Kola" (Good.)

But there was much I couldn't understand. I tried to tell Vongalion I would get a Greek book (vivlio) and then we could have a real conversation.

She squeezed my hand and stood up. "Filisa," she said. (Friend.) And she went back to the ward.

There was a world behind those clear black eyes I could not know. What is life like in a little village in Crete? What ever happened to her uncle--the crazy one who tried to live in America three times and, three times, was sent back to Greece? What does she fear? What does she hope for? There is a key I don't have to Vongalion--her language. And I know there is much locked away from me.

It was a little over a year ago that I left UMass. And I left because I thought it was unnecessary to learn a foreign language. I was wrong to think that, although it was not wrong that I left. Some things I have to discover for myself.

If I had stayed and tried to learn a language out of obedience, not desire, I never would have succeeded. The only reason I heard for learning a language never would have convinced me: i. e. it is necessary to learn a foreign language (to the intermediate level) in order to be an educated person. Never did I hear that you should learn another language if you want to know what people think and feel, if you want to understand them, if you want to enter another world.

To become an educated person is a dreary chore.

To learn to talk with a 15-year-old clear-eyed Greek girl and understand what she feels is a joy. I still think learning should be a joy. And I still think if you are left alone to learn as your curiosity and desires dictate, you'll eventually want to learn what's on the university's syllabus.

I must prepare for my classes now. I teach English as a foreign language in a suburb of Athens.

The campus pond will be graced with more fowl come Monday, thanks to the brothers of A E Pi.

New Pond Ducks Given to Campus

Student Senate President Paul Silverman will get the bird Monday at the campus pond. Silverman will receive two male baby ducklings from Peter Lewenberg, Pres. of AEP, who has been raising the ducks since September. The two ducks have been residing in the back yard at the fraternity on E. Pleasant Street.

Lewenberg, remembering the fowl's fate on Thanksgiving warmly said: "I feel sorry for them being cooped up in the pen. I thought they would want company."

The two new ducks along with UMass veteran birds will soon be taken to their winter home, Tillson Farm in Amherst.

Of interest will be how the other ducks in the pond will react to their new companions, since the two unnamed newcomers have never been in water and have never flown.

Use, Abuse of Drugs Highlights Alpha Delta Theta Lecture

By DONNA WALDRON
Staff Reporter

Dr. Leroy Kendrew, chief surgeon at Springfield Hospital, spoke about the drug problem at a lecture sponsored by Alpha Delta Theta, the professional medical technology sorority last night. He answered questions ranging from "Does the intake of LSD cause deformed children?" to "Is it true that if milk is taken in large amounts it will cause arthritis?" The answers to both of these questions was negative.

Kendrew cited the three dangerous characteristics of drugs as 1.) The ability to produce physiological dependence. When the drug is withdrawn, the cells rebel, causing what are commonly referred to as "withdrawal symptoms" 2.) Tolerance. A given amount of a drug produces a certain specified effect. If the drug continues to be given, increased doses are required to produce the original effect, and 3.) Psychological dependence. This is the characteristic which Dr. Kendrew considers most important because it causes the Central Nervous System to become withdrawn, agitated, anxious, or panicky. Any one of these three characteristics has inherent danger and every drug has one or more of these basic properties.

At this point Dr. Kendrew opened the topic for discussion because he felt that the audience could benefit more from it. He answered all questions in a very honest and forthright way. He admitted that a person could get "hooked" on almost anything that eases tension and provides pleasure. However, he pointed out that habitually drinking coffee is not as bad inherently as taking pot.

He also stated that although marijuana is defined by law to be narcotic, the medical profession does not classify it as such. Why then, does he think it should not be legalized? Because it has one disatrous effect: it alters perception. It can "split your mind", so it could be put in the same class as LSD in that respect. He thinks that because it is not a narcotic, the laws regarding the punishment for possessing it are too harsh. However, he feels it should continue to be illegal because it can be dangerous, not to just the individual, but to society. Therefore, society has a right to restrict its use.

As of now, there is no test which can predict if a person will become addicted to a certain drug or not. The indivíual must rationalize this within himself. Some people are more easily "hooked" than others. They have a propensity for wanting more and more of a certain drug. Doctors say that people of this type have a "low pain threshold".

Dr. Leroy Mitchell spoke on drugs, their uses and abuses, in a lecture last night. After his address, he answered questions from students in attendance. Attendance was excellent. (MDC Photo by Bob Mangaratti)

Fac. Sen. Studies Afro-Am Demands

By SUSAN SPATRICK
Staff Reporter

The faculty senate continued discussion on the twenty demands of the Afro-American association at a special meeting held yesterday. At the previous meeting, a week ago today, demands 1 - 11 and 15 were discussed.

Yesterday's meeting started with mention of demand number 12, which asked for more black administrators and staff members. In answer to this, Dean William F. Field said the administration is soliciting black applicants for administrative and staff positions. Training programs for councilors are being started.

Dean Allen mentioned the voluntary two-day work shops set up for the sensitivity training of professors in response to demand number 13. He also said that sensitivity is a two way process.

Demand number 14, representatives of Afro-American to be placed on the interviewing board for any black staff or faculty, has been changed to, any black considered for a position will be told of Afro-Am and invited to meet with them.

There was much discussion on demand 16 which stated that any staff person who acts in an offensive manner toward any black student will be brought before a reviewing board including black students to hear the case. If found guilty, the person will be fired.

The faculty senate members felt there should be a code saying what constitutes offensive behavior and names different punishments according to the degree of the seriousness of the offense. The Senate also felt that "any member of the university community" should be substituted for "any staff person."

Vacation Over, Nixon Begins Building His Administration

KEY BISCAYNE, Fla. (AP) - President-elect Richard M. Nixon, ending a Florida stay with more meetings on staffing his administration, disclosed plans Thursday for early receipt of task force reports on labor-management relations and fiscal policy.

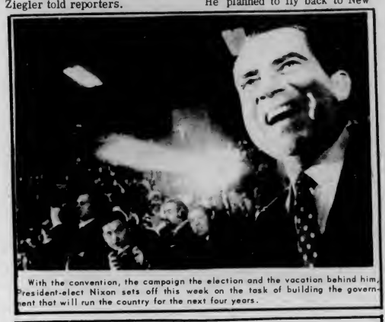
The two task forces, among 10 working on major government problems and recommending solutions, are to report to Nixon by Dec. 1, press assistant Ronald L. Ziegler told reporters.

Reporting dates for eight other task forces will be in early December, he added, and other task forces "primarily in the area of social problems," will also be formed.

Nixon, who appeared for a brief photo session in the morning at a hotel near his seaside rented home, met through the day with advisors on possible appointments to the White House staff, and Cabinet and subcabinet posts.

He planned to fly back to New York in the evening, winding up a six-day stay at his favorite vacation retreat here.

Nixon was tanned and appeared rested at the picture session. He showed reporters a 162-page booklet published by the House Post Office Committee listing the approximately 3,000 appointive jobs he will have to fill.



"I haven't read it," Nixon said, adding, "That is what these fellows have been studying."

When Ziegler told the photographers they would have another 30 seconds, Nixon said, "That'll be the code word of this administration. Another 30 seconds. Get in or get out."

Joining Nixon for the photo session as well as the second straight full day of conferences were H. R. "Bob" Haldeman, who has been named a White House assistant; Lt. Gov. Robert Finch of California; and New York attorney John N. Mitchell, who managed Nixon's campaign.

Ziegler said the labor-management task force, which is also going into manpower programs, is headed by George P. Shultz, chairman of the Center for Advanced Study in the Behavioral Sciences at Stanford University.

The fiscal task force, which also includes budget matters, is headed by Herbert Stein.

With the convention, the campaign the election and the vacation behind him, President-elect Nixon sets off this week on the task of building the government that will run the country for the next four years.

Members of the Student Union Governing Board last night studied the plans for the 11 story Campus Center. The complicated procedured for moving into the center were of prime consideration at the regular meeting of the SUG Board. The Center is scheduled to open Spring Semester, 1970. ABOUT THE NEW MATH... Are you a mathematician or a mathemagician? A mathematician spends all his time proving theorems and deriving equations--truly a dull case. But, a mathemagician is more than this. He is interested in discovering new ways of using math in his future. So, which are you? If you're a mathematician and want to be converted, come to the mathemagician's first coffee hour Monday, November 25th, in the Mathematics Lounge in Arnold House from 3:45 to 4:30. We'll show you what math can do for you. Professor Randall will discuss opportunities in mathematics, and most of the undergraduate advisors will be there and looking for you.

Money Deadlock Broken Nations Move Toward Stabilization

BONN, Germany (AP) - The world-leading financial nations broke a deadlock in the international money crisis Thursday and worked on a package deal to rescue the faltering French franc and ease the threat of harm to the U.S. dollar, the British pound and other Western currencies.

At the same time, West Germany took sharp action to halt the rush of speculators buying marks in the belief they would be revalued upward.

But the deal being worked out in an emergency meeting of the so-called "Group of 10" nations, with Switzerland as an observer, could mean no increase in the value of the mark or any devaluation in the French franc. The two currencies were at the base of the latest international monetary crisis.

But for Germans the deal may mean cutbacks in an economy booming because of heavy exports and modest imports.

The United States was represented in the operation by Treasury Secretary Henry H. Fowler and William McChesney Martin, chairman of the board of governors of the Federal Reserve System.

Karl Schiller, West Germany's minister of economics and the meeting chairman, told newsmen work was completed first on the major element in the package: what West Germany will do to encourage imports and discourage exports and to curb speculation against the franc.

West Germany will slap a tax on exports and reduce its tax on imports. France will be the chief beneficiary, since the two countries do more trading with one another than they do with anyone else.

Other countries will benefit too, notably the United States and Britain. They are also big traders with West Germany, products compete with West German goods elsewhere.

The delegates next went to work on getting together a billion dollars or more in nonfranc currencies to put at the disposal of France so that it can defy the attacks of speculators. This will be a kind of loan of foreign money-mostly marks. France will be able to draw on it to pay off people who want to get rid of francs, without drawing on its own dwindling reserves.

In its move to curb the rush to the mark, West Germany's federal bank announced that the reserve requirement for all incoming foreign currencies will be raised as of Saturday from 9.25 per cent to 100 per cent. This means that banks accepting foreign currency for exchange must turn that currency over to the federal bank in addition to an equal amount in German marks.

The move is expected to cause banks to curb their purchases from speculators because they will not wish to freeze large amounts of their own reserves.

France has already made a gesture toward its creditors by cutting its budget by $360 million. Finance Minister Francois Xavier Ortoli, representing President Charles de Gaulle, may have been making promises of further action.

But the main action has to come from West Germany, despite some deep disagreements within the country on how to proceed. Guenter Diehl, spokesman for Chancellor Kurt Georg Kiesinger, acknowledged that there had been differences between the government and the federal bank, a powerful independent institution.

The bank, he told newsmen, doubted whether the tax measures would be a good enough West German contribution to solving world monetary problems. Karl Blessing, the bank's president, has been reported pressing for an upward revaluation of the mark as a more fundamental measure to help bring about stability.

The United States, Britain and France would also like to see a revaluation.

Mnay experts are convinced it is bound to come, but the Kiesinger government has resisted it stoutly as too hard on West Germany's businessmen. By making their goods more expensive, it might mean the permanent loss of important markets.

Tax measures are only temporary.

After some pressure, the federal bank approved the tax measures.

Chemistry Department Appointments By Dept. Heads

Two major appointments this fall to the UMass department of chemical engineering have been announced by Dr. John Eldridge, head of the department.

James M. Douglas and Robert L. Laurence have been appointed professor and associate professor respectively of chemical engineering.

Dr. Douglas came to UMass from the University of Rochester where he taught for three years. Before teaching for a year at the University of Delaware in 1965, he spent six years with the Atlantic Refining Co.

He earned his B.E. from John Hopkins University in 1954 and his Ph. D. from the University of Delaware in 1960. He did postdoctoral work at Imperial College of Science and Technology in London, England, in 1964.

He is conducting research in the areas of process synamics and control, reactor design and optimization. He has 13 published articles to his credit on these and other subjects and is preparing eight others including a book for Prentice Hall.

Dr. Laurence, a graduate of M.I.T., came to UMass from Johns Hopkins University where he was an assistant professor for three years. He earned his master's degree from the University of Rhode Island and his Ph. D. degree from Northwestern University.

Besides his previous industrial experience as an engineer with the E. I. du Pont de Nemours, Inc. and the General Dynamics Corp., he has taught at the University of Rhode Island.

He is studying diffusion, fluid mechanics and disperse systems and has written extensively for scientific journals in these areas.

Gamma Alpha Kappa Moves Toward Colony Status

ΓΑΚ, (Gamma Alpha Kappa,) an aspiring Greek establishment is located in Baker House. One month ago ΓΑΚ was nothing more than an idea in the minds of a small group of students. Now this organization has become reality.

By the beginning of next semester, the members of ΓΑΚ hope to be fully recognized on campus as an established colony. Judging from the amount of enthusiasm generated by the many interested students becoming involved in Gamma Alpha Kappa, this recognition is likely to be realized.

The reason for the formation of ΓΑΚ was probably no different than the reason for the formation of any other fraternity-a group of friends decided to bring themselves closer together and form their own brotherhood.

Mr. Contino's program will include works by Leonard Bernstein, Alban Berg, Carl Maria von Weber, and Johannes Brahms. This concert is open to the public without charge and will begin at 8:00 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium.

Profs Attend Biography Conference On Editoral Procedures, American Lit

Two UMass professors will play important roles at the fifth Conference on Bibliography this weekend at Pennsylvania State University.

The conference this year, attended by professors, editors, researchers and librarians, will focus on American literature and medieval studies.

Dr. Everett H. Emerson, professor of English and Director of Honors at UMass, has prepared the Early American program. It includes six papers by participants from universities across the country on such subjects as the bibliographical problems in the writings of Jonathan Edwards, Cotton Mather and Washington Irving, early American poetry, and the influence of Thomas Paine in South America.

One session of the program will be devoted to editorial procedures for early American texts, a discussion chaired by Dr. A. W. Plumstead, associate professor of English at UMass. Dr. Plumstead is an experienced editor who has published "The Garden and the Wall: Massachusetts Election Sermons, 1670 - 1775," and is associate editor of the journals of Ralph Waldo Emerson, being published by Harvard Press. Dr. Plumstead came to the University of Massachusetts this year from the University of Minnesota.

Another specialist in early American literature attending the conference from UMass is Dr. Mason Lawance, assistant professor of English, who will participate in the discussion of editing procedures.

Frosh Curfew Discussion on WMUA Forum Tonight

Freshmen curfew will be the topic for open discussion Monday night, 9:30 on WMUA. Comments pro and con will be delivered by four freshmen and two upperclass students.

Paul Silverman, senate president and Ernie Lapore, freshmen class president, will guide the girls' comments on curfew and other matters pertinent to freshmen women. After the discussion the co-eds will be asked questions on their views.

A bill was bassed by the Senate for the abolishment of curfews. However, Lapore feels, it has laid dormant in the offices of the administration too long. According to the freshman president, the discussion should give impetus to the bill by making the campus aware of how the girls feel.

A Time of Realization

One of the most obvious developments of the last several weeks with the confrontation between the administration and the Afro-am Organization has been the lack of awareness on campus and the obvious derisive comments coming in to this paper regarding the issues involved.

Perhaps not all the demands of the Afro-Am Organization were completely within reason and were included to give the major demands a firmer basis but many of their demands have come up before and affect almost every student on campus. Perhaps the most noteworthy of these developments may be the carrying of firearms by the campus police and the proposed no flunk-out policy for freshmen especially those in CCENS.

The latter proposal is indeed worthy because an outgrowth of this proposal may be a revision of the present policy for the flunking-out of freshmen. Those in CCENS should not be judged on the basis of one semester alone because, if their cultural and academic backgrounds are as deficient as their admission to this special program indicates, one semester may not be enough to allow these freshmen to adjust to such an alien environment.

Whereas those in the Afro-Am Organization have been willing to sit down and rationally discuss the issues, many whites on campus have acted completely deaf and callous to the developments and issues involved. Rather than study the issues and perhaps learn about some of the basic problems confronting our society today, these students have shrugged off the issues as nonexistent or fabricated and have ignored the consequences of their apathy. It is time for all UMass students to realize that our society is a racist one and our campus cannot be oblivious to this problem at any level, particularly the campus level.

Student Power

The Student Senate would have us believe that the proper instrument for student power is the Senate. Why then are the residents of Moore-Pierpont and Project 10 denied representation? There are over 450 students involved who have had to pay the student activities fee without having any voice in the expenditure of these funds.

Taxation without representation is still tyranny.

The Senate notes that the formation of a co-ed government is unprecedented. This is true, but if our organ of student power is only concerned with the "way it's always been," can it be effective in responding to the needs of an expanding community?

Why has it taken so long for the apportionment of Senate seats to these two residences? It seems relatively clear that the number of residents within a given constituency determine the number of senators. It is ridiculous to speculate what would happen if Moore and Pierpont did not share a co-ed government, because they do.

The Senate should realize its responsibility to the forgotten residents of Moore-Pierpont and Project 10 and allow them to hold a special Senate election immediately following Thanksgiving vacation. Unless this is done, the residents of Moore-Pierpont and Project 10 would be justified in not paying their student activities fee or seeking some other form of positive protest.

SPECIAL REPORT:

Nixon Stays Neutral

BY ROWLAND EVANS AND ROBERT NOVAK

WASHINGTON--Heartened by a pledge of neutrality on the part of President-elect Nixon, liberal Sen. Hugh Scott of Pennsylvania now has a 50-50 chance to defeat conservative Republican Sen. Roman Hruska of Nebraska for the job of assistant Senate Republican leader.

But much will depend on what Sen. Everett M. Dirksen, the minority leader, decides to do. Should Dirksen throw all his influence to his close friend Hruska, instead of quietly supporting him, Scott would probably be doomed.

Dirksen hasn't said how far he will go for Hruska. Scott backers have given up hope that he will either be neutral or support the liberal Scott, as he supported the now-defeated California Sen. Thomas Kuchel, also a liberal, when Kuchel was elected assistant leader 10 years ago. Instead, Dirksen is vainly suggesting that Scott might be content to be named chairman of the GOP Senate Policy Committee.

This year the stakes are much higher than in 1958. Dirksen is almost 73, has been in poor health for several years. Whoever is elected to succeed Kuchel in January will have a powerful advantage in the battle to succeed Dirksen when he steps down and will set the ideological tone of the Republican party in the Senate.

One obstacle to Scott was cleared away when Kansas Sen. James Pearson, a moderate, decided not to seek the job, voiding a liberal-moderate split that would have elected Hruska.

The neutrality of Richard Nixon is also an essential part of Scott's campaign. Nixon has now let it be known through two intermediaries that he will take no part in this first post-election Republican fight.

A footnote: Moderate and liberal Republicans increased their influence in the Senate in the November election. Robert Packwood of Oregon, Richard Schweiker of Pennsylvania, Charles Mathias of Maryland, and William Saxbe of Ohio slightly overbalance newcomers Barry Goldwater of Arizona, Robert Dole of Kansas, and Edward Gurney of Florida.

Triple-Threat Harlow

The transcendant importance to Nixon of Bryce Harlow, his first publicly-named White House assistant, is evident in the fact that it was Harlow whom President Johnson telephoned the night after he and Nixon sealed their unprecedented compact to act in unison in vital foreign policy matters during the transition period.

Mr. Johnson once tried to hire Harlow as his assistant during the Johnsonian Senate era. The President picked up the phone on Monday night, only hours after he and Nixon had their White House unity-talk, to telephone Harlow in Manhattan.

This gist of Mr. Johnson's message: that if anything happened in Washington or in Nixon headquaters in New York to disturb the Johnson-Nixon compact, Nixon should know it did not emanate from the White House or Mr. Johnson.

Harlow is the only Nixon intimate who has ever been on close terms with Mr. Johnson.

A footnote: Harlow will be on official leave of absence from Procter and Gamble, just as Neil Mc Elroy was when he left that company to become Secretary of Defense. Procter and Gamble has no government contracts.

Disagreement within the liberal Democratic Study Group (DSG) in the House all but guarantees that Speaker John W. McCormack will remain as Speaker next year, even if the effort now being threatened to ease him out is actually attempted.

At least one leading DSG member--Rep. Philip Burton of California--has told DSG chairman James O'Hara of Michigan that he will oppose any fight against the aging (76 next month) Speaker.

Despite this defection, top DSG members met here on Wednesday and decided that if they could make a close contest of it--that is, come within 20 votes or so--they might challenge McCormack.

Attending the meeting were O'Hara and Reps. Richard Bolling, Mo., John Brademus, Ind., Morris Udall, Ariz., Don Fraser, Minn., and Frank Thompson, N.J. A subcommittee was named to see whether Rep. Carl Albert of Oklahoma, the majority leader, would allow his name to be put in nomination for Speaker against McCormack.

The first target of liberal Democrats, however, is not to upset McCormack but to punish Rep. John R. Rarick of Louisiana for having supported George Wallace for President. The second target is to place liberal and moderate Democrats in four Democratic vacancies on the Judiciary Committee. A leading prospect with DSG backing: Rep.-elect Richardson Pryor of North Carolina, a former federal judge.

That will be the business end of the DSG's agenda for the start of the 91st Congress. The battle against McCormack, if it happens at all, will have only symbolic value, with no chance of success.

Campus Comment

SDS Esteem Lowered

To the editor,

The past actions by the members of the SDS can be overlooked in the light that they desire to establish themselves as the campus asses. The project "napalm a dog" which is to take place next Tuesday cannot, however, be passed over lightly. The action is nothing more than a cruel stunt.

The S.P.C.A. should take immediate action against Steve Gaman and Mike Minsky if such an event takes place. If the SDS wants to napalm anyone it should be one of their own members since they have a distinct advantage by already being flaming idiots.

Dan Duarte

SDS Fallen

To the editor:

I was a former "member" of the UMass chapter of Students for a Democratic Society. In the form originally conceived by the Port Huron statement in 1963, SDS would be a powerful student movement dedicated to reworking the government to a new sensitivity of the people. Now SDS has fallen into a rut of radical rhetoric and senseless action which it absolved to destroy.

The latest ploy by the UMass chapter of SDS is to burn a live dog with homemade napalm (one part gasoline to one part Tide detergent). This act, originated by Steve Gaman, shows his personal directionless character. In previous SDS tactics Gaman has repeatedly acted as unsupported and self proclaimed spokesman for the whole organization. In the MDC story of Nov. 21, Gaman declares, "We want publicity." I would like to correct this to, "I, Steve Gaman want publicity."

Every student on this campus should recognize the contradiction of values which SDS has proposed: we are against the immoral acts of our government, but we don't mind committing a few immoral and completely unjustified acts ourselves.

"When College Interferes With Your Education, It's Time To Leave"

Editor's Note: The following article was written by Gena Corea and appeared in the Daily Collegian on Oct. 12, 1967. It is reprinted here in conjunction with a more recent communication which appears on page one.

I've decided that when college begins to interfere with your education, it's time to leave. But I hate to leave quietly and so I want to explain to you why I am leaving.

Let me give you some background in the form of a letter I wrote to a friend at the end of the summer. Please be patient because I have something to say.

In this letter I wrote: "Something is definitely happening to me. I've been living intensely lately and sometimes it frightens me. I don't see things the same way anymore. Everything and everyone amaze me. Nothing is common or ordinary."

All Around Me. . .

I am aware of all the things that are acting on my senses. When I was in New York, I was aware of the fell of my shoes touching the pavement, the smell of the fruit in the open markets, the sound of the traffic, fragments of conversation as people walked by.

Vivid colors. Wrinkled faces. Net stockings and fat ladies and cartoon people.

Marshall McLuhan's book, "Understanding Media" has had a great deal of influence on me. I am very much aware of the impact that the electronic age has on me.

The blinking lights, the pictures that flash on and off, the radio advertisements with their sound effects.

McLuhan has made me look again at things I've always assumed were part of the given world. Words, for example. Printing.

Suddenly I look again at words and see that they're not the end-all and be-all of experience. So many other things act on our senses. Sounds. Blinking lights. Words are not enough to get the message across. So I'm now suspicious of what used to be a very important part of my life.

In New York, we rode on the subway one night. Since we were in the first car, I got up and stood at the front so that I could see the tunnel as we went through it. The driver asked me if this was the first time I had ever been on the subway.

I laughed and said no, I had been on the subway hundreds of times but each ride was an enriching new experience. I said it in a joking way, but I was half serious.

I told him that he should pretend that he was a little kid and that this was his first subway ride. Then he would realize how exciting it really was.

The rear of the train as it whooshes into the station, the feel of the wind on your face as part of the train goes by you. Then it screeches to a stop and you get in.

From then on, it's like being on a ride in an amusement park. It's like a roller coaster when it goes fast and when it goes through a tunnel, it has everything but the ghosts. And when you pass another train, it's like something out of a dream-very surrealistic.

This new world I've been feeling is amazing and I'm very happy about it. But there's a fear there too.

Most of all, I fear death.

We rode on the Staten Island ferry. I stood at the bow and I loved the feel of the strong wind trying to push me over and I loved the sound of the waves hitting the boat and I loved the darkness and the lights and the tall buildings that slowly became three dimensional as the boat came closer to land.

And I Saw Him

And when the boat docked and we were waiting for them to put the ramp down, I looked at one of the workers who was standing on the dock. And I saw him in a way that I will never be able to explain to anyone.

And I didn't want to die.

I will never have enough of living. I will never be ready to leave the wind and the waves and the darkness and the lights and the tall buildings that men like that man on the dock built.

You see, I love this new world I'm sensing and feeling. What is frightening is that I'm alone and it's so different that it's unsettling sometimes.

It's unsettling too because for the first time, I ask why? Why this beautiful world? A world you can smell and touch and see and hear.

And what's with Man? He's so unbelievable. Look what he's done to the earth. His mark is everywhere.

And what's with dreams and the thought process? It's all too much for me to grasp.

I'm really going to burst-not only because of the things I'm experiencing, but because of all the things I'm longing to experience.

Not People Die

I want to fly all around the world in one flight to get an overall view of the whole world. Then I want to go all around the world on the ground and walk in many cities and look into many faces and hear the voices of many people.

There are so many questions I must ask these people before they die because I believe what Yevtoshenko wrote: "Not people die, but worlds die in them."

And I've got to understand. Not only understand, but sense, feel, because my brain isn't enough. I have to live with my whole body.

And there are so many books I have to read and not just once.

School will begin soon and that's going to interfere with my studying."

That's how I felt at the end of the summer. I was alive and I was aware of it. I found life exhilarating and I wanted to understand it. There was so much I wanted to know. I was anxious to study.

But school did begin and school did interfere with my studying.

I had a lot of new ideas (which I couldn't begin to go into here) and I was very excited about them. I thirsted with curiosity and I was not allowed to drink.

I wanted to explore and I was forced to follow a syllabus. I was exploding with idea s and I had to sit down each night and memorize a language I had no desire or need to learn.

STUDENT UNION BALLROOM

"It's Time to Leave"

To get a degree.

The Scared Little Man

I remembered what A. S. Neil had written in his book SUMMERHILL:

You cannot MAKE children learn music or anything else without to some degree converting them into will-less adults. You fashion them into acceptors of the status quo -a good thing for a society that needs obedient sitters at dreary desks, standers in shops, mechanical catchers of the 8:30 suburban train-a society, in short, that is carried on the shabby shoulders of the scared little man-the scared-to-death conformist.

I had bucked at the requirement system before. Two years ago I spent three months researching an article on requirements for "Spectrum". In that article, I quoted from Alfred Whitehead's book, THE AIMS OF EDUCATION:

This overhaste to impart mere knowledge defeats itself. The human mind rejects knowledge imparted in this way. The craving for expansion, for activity, inherent in youth is disgusted by a dry imposition of disciplined knowledge . . . . I have been struck by the paralysis of thought induced in pupils by the aimless accumulation of precise knowledge, inert and unutilized.

Did anyone read this?

Then last May, I wrote a letter to the head of the Russian department explaining why I didn't want to take Russian. He said he agreed with me but he had no power. Go to the Assistant Provost.

I went to the Assistant Provost. This was not under his jurisdiction. See the Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences.

I was not allowed to see him. I was allowed to speak with one of the assistant deans, Dean H. Duncan Rollason.

Home Economics?

He could not refute my arguments against my studying a language. I could refute his arguments(?) for studying it. So he said, "Why don't you switch into the department of home economics? They don't have a language requirement there."

I wrote to Dean Wagner. He wrote back: "A foreign language requirement is a part of the tradition of liberal education and the Bachelor of Arts degree. There have always been students who have disliked foreign language. A hundred years ago they struggled with Latin and Greek; today it is other languages."

That's a very interesting historical fact. It's not a reason. I ask WHY we must struggle with languages. And no one answers.

"The fact remains, Miss Corea, that this is a regulation of the College of Arts and Sciences", Dean Rollason said to me.

So this year, I continued in my frustrated efforts to learn. Then I interviewed Dr. Ryan Drum. He articulated a lot of things that I have been feeling. I, too, found learning a pleasure.

But I found the university perverting learning into a painful chore. And I knew that it was stifling and I knew that it was wrong and I also knew that it would never change.

How long do you think Dr. Drum will last here? He's a dangerous man. He thinks and he speaks.

Maybe in a couple of years the students will give him the Distinguished Teacher's Award and the Administration will give him his traveling papers.

Does anyone remember Della-Grotte?

See, Cry and Leave

I don't see much hope that students will change this system. There are students like me who get tired. They see, cry and leave.

And there are others who are the future bureaucrats of America. They are too concerned with going through the proper channels. And the proper channels are mazes.

Where is the University Reform Committee?

To Dean Rollason: I have no regrets about not switching into home economics in order to get a degree. I didn't come here to get a degree. I came here to learn. You didn't understand that.

To those who remain: Learn your attitudes well. Learn the right words: Maturity and Responsibility. (Euphemisms for obedience?) Grow up absurd. Never question your miseducation.

Talk in fog-bound three-syllable words-the language of inaction. Be an anti-life adult. Good luck in this war and best of luck in the next.

Women's Colleges: Are Female Ghettos on Anachronism?

by ELLEN LONGDEN
College Press Service

(CPS)--Although the place of the sexually segregated college has been questioned since women literally and symbolically began wearing pants, this year's co-education advocates have some rather impressive support.

Recently at Princeton University a committee completed an in-depth study of the merits of co-education. The committee concluded that a male-female education program would "greatly enrich the cultural and social life of (Princeton) students and would tend to develop in undergraduates (of opposite sexes) a sense of responsibility toward one another."

Although the study was complied for use at Princeton, it has served as a model for other colleges, both male and female, who on the strength of their own findings have initiated co-educational programs.

The increasing interest in co-education (among those who don't take it for granted) is due not only to the advancing position of women in the world, but is also a response to the cry for university reform.

The thrust of the "student movement" has been to implement social change through relevant education. In many cases reform has been directed toward transforming the university into a model community which would have ramifications in the city or town in which the school is located. Such an academic community would most of all be diverse--an exchange market for ideas and points of view. One of the most obvious sins against this educational model is the exclusion of the opposite sex. According to the Princeton survey, the sexually segregated arrangement "tends to encourage the view that intellectual activity and the opposite sex are incompatible."

Solutions to the co-educational dilemma have been many. The three primary plans are the multi-college exchange program, the co-ordinate college plan, and total co-education.

According to the first proposal, colleges in a specific area (like western Massachusetts or the Hudson River Valley) exchange teachers and permit their students to take courses at the other colleges. Although it provides diversity in course selection, this plan has failed to achieve an integrated classroom and campus situation.

Reflecting on the five-college plan in Massachusetts, the Mount Holyoke CHORAGOS states that "co-education does not mean simply having boys in class; it means having them--lots of them in the library, the snack bar, the dining halls...as long as their own room is ten miles down the road they will always be visitors."

Fordham, Hamilton, Columbia and Harvard Universities operate on a co-ordinating plan. An affiliated women's college shares classes, professors and resources with the men's college while retaining institutional autonomy and identity. Where the women's college is not built by the existing insitution there is the problem of finding a comparable college to coordinate with.

The final, alternative, co-education, consists of admitting the opposite sex to the established institution. Sarah Lawrence, Bennington and Vassar Colleges (all female) have undertaken such plans. The cost of the project has been estimated at $250,000.

it means increasing enrollment or cutting back on women to allow for the admission of men (or vice versa).

There is no denying that co-education is not easy to implement. Its ramifications financially and academically are frightening. But it is not a token suggestion designed to dissolve the "finishing school" myth surrounding women's institutions of higher learning. It is rather a theory in the mainstream of contemporary educational thought. When universities are concentrating on admitting students of specifically dissimilar backgrounds, is it unreasonable to suggest that they also address themselves to the other fifty per cent of the human race?

University Film Co-op Constitution Submitted to Senate

The constitution of the University Film Co-Op has been presented to the Student Senate for approval. In the near future, the Co-Op will present a budget request of approximately $3400.00. This budget will cover only the bare essentials of camera equipment laboratory charges, and supplies necessary for the production of 16mm films. According to David Newcombe, technical advisor, "16 mm film is more versatile, easier to work with, it's the standard size of student films and the shooting cost is approximately the same as super 8. Since the 16mm processing is much more available to the University community, I feel a switch to 16mm equipment would be our wisest move."

On Sunday, Nov. 24 at 8:30 in 424 Mills House there will be an important meeting that all university undergraduates and graduates, as well as faculty members are urged to attend. The originators of the group Terry Crouch, Bob Morrissey and Steve Soltos, who were also appointed as-hoc chairmen, feel that "The acting membership shows a great deal of concern for the CoOp and it is necessary to hold elections so that the group can become more autonomous.

In addition to the elections, Mr. David Coffing of the School of Education will speak on Sunday night to all students who are interested in structuring a film production course to be offered by the School of Education during the spring semester.

This "course experience" will be both structured and evaluated by the students enrolled and it is open to the University community.

Also planned for the future is a student professional experimental film festival. The Film Co-Op in conjunction with Steve Krinsky and the Fine Arts and Music Committees, hopes to attract a wide range of student films. These films will be judged within certain categories, and the winners will receive cash awards.

The University Film Co-Operative offers a valuable and rewarding means of expression and communication in an exciting media. All those interested are urged to take advantage of the meeting Sunday at 8:30 in 424 Mills House.

Black Seperatism Featured In "Public Debate" Monday

"Black Separatism makes more sense than integration?" will be the topic of discussion for panel members from UMass and Amherst community Monday evening at 8 in Mahar Auditorium.

This is the second in a series of Public Debates sponsored by the university Forensic Society. The public is invited.

Participants in the evening's panel will be Cheryl Evans, a '68 graduate of UMass and president of Afro-Am, who was a Commonwealth Service Volunteer and is presently assistant area coordinator at the university; Marilyn Keane, a junior majoring in English and member of the university debate team; William King, a senior from Shaker Heights, Ohio, majoring in government at the university, who has worked with the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare and the guidance program for inner-city youth in Cleveland.

Also, Frank Sheperd, University of Florida graduate, who is here at the university working on a department fellowship with his specialization in American National Government; John Spencer, a resident of Amherst and a project architect for Campbell, Aldrich, and Nulty, Architects, who is vice-president of the Amherst Human Relations Council, the Massachusetts Council of Churches Committee on Church and Race, and the Methodist Council Committee fund for Reconciliation, and Jack Thompson, an assistant professor in the History department at the university, who teaches Southern History.

Opening statements by panel members will be followed by a discussion and audience question-answer period moderated by Wendy Paige, sophomore member of the debate team.

Viet War Film Debut Highlights Monday Discussion

At a showing of David Schoenbrun's film "Vietnam: How did we get in? How do we get out?" on the Vietnamese War last Monday night, some 150 students engaged in discussion with representatives of the Valley Peace Center in Amherst. Schoenbrun, a former correspondent in Europe and Asia, is now teaching a course on Southeast Asia at Columbia University. His film recorded a speech in which his acquaintance with Ho Chi Minh, presence at Geneva and overall knowledge of that area of the world were used to shed light on the current war.

Held in the Berkshire Club Room in Southwest, the film and discussion is part of a draft counseling program now being offered jointly by the Valley Peace Center and the United Christian Foundation. Both individual counseling beginning at 6:30 in the lobby of Coolidge Tower and group discussion at 7:00 p.m. in the Berkshire Club Room are held each Monday evening.

Meyer and Matuszcak Named Soccer Co-captains

Junior Dick Meyer and Sophomore Rick Matuszcak will lead the 1969 UMass soccer team as co-captains. This was the announcement at the team banquet held last night in the Student Union.

Meyer, a Granby native, hampered by injuries much of the year, played for the most part at halfback, where he was a standout on the strong UMass defense.

Matuszcak, who hails from Chicopee, playing on a bad leg, had two assists during the past season, and displayed good hustle throughout the UMass 4 win, 6 loss, one tie season.

Also honored by the team was goalie Steve Kramer, who was named most valuable player by his teammates.

Kramer a senior from North Quincy, was outstanding in the Redman nets, making 115 saves in 10 games, while leading UMass to a fine 1.6 goals against average.

Soccer coach, Peter Broaca, who was coaching the varsity in his first year, thanked his team for what he termed, "110% effort from a group of dedicated players."

"I'm not disappointed in the season," said Broaca, "despite our record. We could have quit a lot of times because of the injuries, and no one would have known the difference, but we still finished strong."

The coach, said to his team, "You all know inside the effort you gave."

Also speaking at the banquet was Tony Williams, President of the Varsity 'M' Club. Williams gave Varsity 'M' certificates to the five seniors on the squad, Bruce Allen, Bob Dubiel, Kramer, Charlie Stacy and Wilkie Ward, plus team manager Art Segaloff.

Williams, in his remarks, went on to explain the purpose of the 'M' Club. "We are a group of individuals dedicated to the bettering of UMass athletics.

"We want to help the program in any way we can, and we are interested in all sports."

Williams, a former all-Conference third baseman, for UMass, concluded, "This soccer team gave everything it had, and with their returning talent, should be a good team next year."

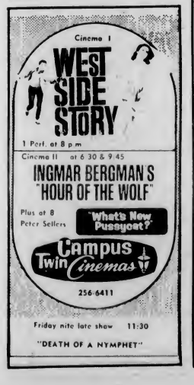
Puckmen To Play Intrasquad Game

The varsity and freshman hockey teams will get a head start on the other winter sport teams tomorrow night when they play each other at Orr Rink at 7 o'clock.

The varsity will be facing a freshmen team which is the result of some heavy recruiting. The frosh can skate as well as do their share of hitting. They also show unusual depth with five lines and three sets of defensemen.

To counter the strong skating of their juniors the varsity will play a close checking game, hoping to keep the frosh from unwinding.



The game will be important to the varsity in the sense that the freshmen will provide the skating ability which the Redmen will have to learn to contend with in order to be successful against teams like Bowdoin, Colby and Army.

The freshmen will not only be skating hard, but they're a team which has proved that they can take the lumps that the varsity has dished out in previous scrimmages.

It can't be expected that any early season game will be decisive about a team's future, but it will be an interesting clash between two diverse styles.

The game, according to an informed source, is drawing not only Eastern Massachusetts hockey men but also a group from Canada.

This year could be the one when UMass hockey fortunes change from their usual circular progress.

It's The Boston College Eagles For '68 Finale

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

Sports

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 22, 1968
VOL. XCVII NO. 55

BY PETER PASCARELLI
Assistant Sports Editor

It would be an understatement to say that this has been a long UMass football season. It's like saying that Boston College is just big. But the Redmen have a final game to try and salvage something when they meet the high powered B.C. Eagles at Alumni Stadium, tomorrow. Kickoff for the 1968 finale will be 1:30 p.m.

UMass will be obviously the underdog in this game. They would be the underdog if they were 7-2 instead of 2-7, and the Redmen would be the underdog if they had everyone healthy instead of being a virtual emergency ward.

It will be the final appearance of 13 UMass seniors. Co-Captains Nick Warnock and Mike McArdle, Randy Robinson, Tim Driscoll, Bill Frye, Bruce Cochrane, Bob Sheehan, Joe Colosi, George Crane, Frank Tavolacci, Al Becker, Noel Schablik and Frank Tudryn will all be dressing for the last time in a Redman uniform.

Actually not all will be dressing. A sign of the season, is the fact that Becker, Warnock, Robinson and Driscoll all will be sidelined with injuries in their final collegiate contest.

UMass Head Coach Vic Fusia who along with his staff has put in many hours this week, has "the highest praise for this senior group. Our efforts in 1965, when we recruited these men," said Fusia, "were not the best, only because we could not get more like them."

Fusia had a special word for his captains, saying, first of McArdle, "He has been hobbling all year on one good leg, and has still given us everything. Although statistically, this is not one of his best years, he has been more valuable to us this season than any other one before."

Fusia said of Warnock, "He had a slow start this season, but was coming on fast when he was injured. There is no telling how much his efforts would have helped us, but we sure have missed him."

The coach added, "All these boys that are injured have to feel badly- they can not participate in their last game."

That last game is, of course, one with a very good Boston College eleven that has been in with the best in the East. Fusia realistically says of the Eagles, "They are bigger, stronger, faster and have more ability than any team we have played."

The coach however is, despite the overwhelming odds agairst his team, still amazed at the team morale, "There is no apparent letdown," said Fusia, "and in a season like this that is a surprise. They were just as enthusiastic in practice Wednesday night as in the first day of practice."

No lineup changes are anticipated for the Redmen other than Dave Walsh at defensive end for the injured Becker. Jerry Grasso may have started at tailback but Grasso, who has just returned from an injury is in bed with the flu. It has just been one of those years.

Adams

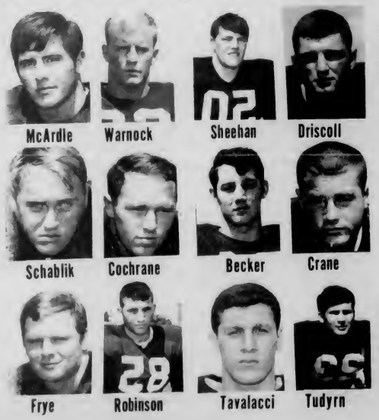
The Boston College Eagle Really Is...

The hue and cry went up last year, "Is the Eagle really a turkey?" and also, somewhat sacreligously, "Is the Eagle really the paraclete?"



Metawampe picked the Redmen to clobber BC, the college that hadn't won all season. The BC eagle became the screaming eagle, but not in time to save coach Miller. The rabid BC alumni went after his job, and Yukica is now the BC coach.

For Metawampe's prediction this year, see Metawampe's Grid Picks at the right.

Seniors Play Last Game Tomorrow

Tomorrow thirteen seniors will ring down the curtain on their varsity football careers at UMass. It will be a sad finale for them after playing on Redman teams used to bringing home the Beanpot to Boyden. Their record stands now at 2-6-0, and the Beanpot will be shared by New Hampshire and Connecticut.

After the Boston College game, Noel Schablik, Frank Tavalacci, Frank Tudryn, Bill Frye, Bruce Cochrane, George Crane, Bob Sheehan, Joe Colosi and co-captain Mike McArdle will hang up their spikes. Co-captain Nick Warnock, Tim Driscoll, Al Becker and Randy Robinson, all of whom are on the injured list, will be sitting on the bench for the final game.

Metawampe's Grid Picks

It was a lonely night last night for the Poetic Muse of Football. As Metawampe stood glued to his pedestal the snows swirled around him, the winds howled and all was gloomy. Things have not worked out this year quite the way Metawampe had planned them.

He was alone last night, a sole, pathetic figure gazing forlornly across the construction and grinding out the final verses for this year. He contemplated his sins of the past, namely all of his mistaken predictions, but not this week.

The Number One Indian at UMass (disregarding the fact of the existence of "that other one"), came up with the most sensational pick of the season, of his career. He picked Boston College over his Redmen. Well, Custer picked himself to win, and he was massacred by feathered friends of Metawampe. Not this week. The Great One is going to have his scalp after Saturday's game. We understand his forwarding address for all fan mail is an unnamed reservatio n somewhere in the Rocky Mts. But have no fear, he shall return another day. Just when, we can't say.

Columbia Point Wins Nod For UMass Boston Campus

BY JOHN HICKEY
News Editor

The UMass Board of Trustees voted 14-4 for the permanent location of UMass-Boston at Columbia Point. The trustees took the action at their Friday meeting in Boston despite the request of UMass-Boston Chancellor Francis Broderick for a two-month delay for further study of an alternative plan which would locate the school in the core city area.

The decision ends a three-year search by the trustees for a suitable site. The trustees had eliminated all proposed sites except Columbia Point at their October meeting, but delayed a final decision to allow newly-appointed Chancellor Broderick to study the proposed sites.

The alternative proposed Friday was developed during the past week by the administration, faculty, and students of UMB with assistance from the Ford Foundation's Educational Facilities Laboratory. The plan was based on the concept of considering the entire city a campus, with university facilities located along the major transportation routes.

The proposed complex would have had three sites initially, using the present Park Square buildings, airspace over the turnpike, and land in the South End. The South End area was made available to the university earlier in the week by Cardinal Cushing, who offered the use of Holy Cross Cathedral and options on adjacent land and Cathedral High School.

Trustee Robert D. Gordon argued for further consideration of the alternative package. He claimed that while Columbia Point was not an "impossible site," it failed to meet the standards of innovation and imagination needed for urban education in the latter part of the twentieth century.

Professor James Ryan, chairman of the UMass-Boston Faculty Senate Executive Committee, informed the trustees that the UMB faculty had voted, 69-10, that they found Columbia Point "an unacceptable site for the kind of public urban university" they envisaged. Ryan stated that the faculty would view a Columbia Point decision as a disservice to the city, to the university and to higher public education."

Stephen Berkowitz, student representative of the In-Town Site Coalition also asked the trustees

Julian Bond To Give Lecture For Distinguished Visitors

Julian Bond, who this past summer gained national prominence at the Democratic National Convention in his attempt to unseat the Georgia delegation and his seconding speech for Senator Eugene McCarthy, will speak in Cu.ry Hicks Cage at 8 p.m., Monday, December 2. His lecture will be sponsored by the Distinguished Visitors Program.

Bond was a founder and later served as secretary of the Committee of Appeal for Human Rights (COAHR), the Atlanta University Center Student organization that coordinated three years of student anti-segregation protests in Atlanta beginning in 1960.

Coffin Urges Students To End 'Lover's Quarrel With Country'

BY ROSS MILLER
Staff Reporter

Reverend William Sloane Coffin in a Distinguished Visitors and Students for Ecumenical Action sponsored lecture entitled, "The Ordeal of Change," urged the college community to lead in bringing about, as he termed, "a lover's quarrel with our country," and in bridging the communications gap which exist between parents and students.

Speaking to a capacity audience in the Student Union Ballroom, Rev. Coffin said he fears that America's greatest crisis at present is the threatened loss of the nation's kids. Parents, he feels, make too narrow paths for their children to follow, thus alienating them. To Coffin, the students should forge new roads and continue, "the tradition of continuity and discontinuity to bring about a foreign policy for children."

The "Generation Gap" perpetuates itself by causing guilt feelings in the parent, for the parent in seeing the student rebel against the status quo of society, reverts back to the old proverbial cliche of "what have I done wrong." The parent becomes defensive and insecure and as a result they send the kids off to college to "blow off some steam, hoping their son or daughter will return satisfied," Rev. Coffin maintains.

"But a university," said Rev. Coffin, "should be a community of social criticism which should be considered education at its very best. Education should thrive on controversy and advance the lover's quarrel with our country." The problem of the university, according to Rev. Coffin, is the need of passionate professors, and less dry education, which would be replaced by more first-hand experience.

Rev. William Sloane Coffin addressed an over flow crowd last night in the Student Union Ballroom and urged students to end the "lover's quarrel with our country" and "to bridge the communications gap between parents and children". See story above. (MDC photo by Wayne Lilyestrom)

Redmen Lose, 21-6, To B.C.

BY MIKE CURRAN
Sports Editor

UMass, led by a hustling defense which was up against the seventh best offensive attack in the nation, held mighty Boston College to a 21-6 margin before an enthusiastic 12,000 at Alumni Stadium Saturday.

The loss gives the Redmen a disasterous 2-8 season, but the performance proved something to the young team. 19 of the 22 UMass starters will return next year, knowing they can and should be a winning team.

For B.C. and rookie coach Joe Yukica it was a fifth win against three losses. They'll finish up next Saturday against Holy Cross at Chestnut Hill.

The Eagles began by taking the opening kickoff and marching from their own 35 to the UMass 13 under the direction of junior quarterback Mike Fallon, who replaced the sensational Frank Harris. Harris, a sophomore had jammed his right thumb in practice and never did see action Saturday.

B.C.'s opening march was halted by a Bill Sroka and Andy Guarino led defense and a 15 yard penalty.

After an exchange of punts, the Eagles were at it again with a first and ten at the UMass 42. Another infraction cost the Visitor 15 yards, and then on a third down play sophomore defensive end Dave Walsh collared the elusive Dave Bennett to force another punt.

The Redman offense, which was also up for this one started rolling suddenly. Jerry Grasso's running

Thompson Hall, Gladchuk Fields Dedicated, State Legislators Attend Ceremonies

BY BILL DICKINSON
Senior Reporter

The dedication of John F. Thompson Hall was held Saturday in conjunction with the annual Legislators Day.

The ten story, $3.2 million building located behind Machmer Hall was named in the memory of the late John F. Thompson, former speaker of the state House of Representatives.

Among those participating in the ceremonies which included the unveiling of a memorial plaque were Mrs. Thompson, Speaker of the House Robert H. Quinn, and Senate President Maurice A. Donahue. President John W. Lederle represented the University.

Lederle told the guests that higher education in the Commonwealth "was given so much by the late speaker John F. Thompson."

In his days in the House, Thompson was considered a "friend on the University" often championing the University's cause

Echoing Lederle's tribute, Speaker Quinn said, "If there's one individual who's done more for this institution, it was John F. Thompson."

Donahue praised Thompson's foresight saying, "Years ago John Thompson had the message: They're out there, let's do something about it."

Thompson Hall, just completed in September, houses the departments of sociology, government, economics and history. The tower section contains 187 offices; a sociology laboratory and nine departmental conference rooms. A wing includes three large lecture halls.

Columbia Point Chosen As UMass Boston Site

for time to study the recently proposed alternative. The In-Town Site Coalition, made up of faculty members and students, will take its fight to the legislature, which must approve the choice of Columbia Point as the permanent UMB campus. The Coalition will also work for a change in the university charter to provide for a separate, Boston-oriented board of trustees for UMass-Boston.

President John Lederle and Trustee Joseph Healey disagreed with the educational philosophy behind the alternative plan, as articulated by Chancellor Broderick and Trustee Gordon. Lederle said that the state university has the primary obligation of educating doctoral candidates, while state colleges and junior colleges have the responsibility for undergraduate education.

Healey, vice-chairman of the Board of Trustees, agreed with the philosophy of education put forth by President Lederle. Healey was asked by Professor James Broderick of the UMB English department to define the role of the trustees in view of their "continued ignoring of the views of the students, faculty, administration and alumni." Healey replied that the trustees had the responsibility of weighing community values and economic factors as well as educational values. Healey reiterated Lederle's opinion that interaction with the city is a matter of personal choice.

Although the opposition to the location of UMass-Boston will continue when the legislature considers the trustee's decision, Chancellor Broderick said after Friday's meeting that the decision was "about as final as anything can be."

ENGINEERS
SCIENTISTS

The New Jersey Zinc Company, pioneer of the zinc industry in the United States and now a highly diversified organization, offers the graduate engineer and scientist challenging and rewarding opportunities to participate in, improve and expand its widespread activities.

As an engineer in the Mining Department, you will be involved in the practical application of many of the engineering skills you have studied. You may be specifically concerned with and participate in mine production, minerals beneficiation, electrical, mechanical, or civil engineering in maintaining, operating and expanding our mines located throughout the country in New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Virginia, Tennessee, Colorado, New Mexico and Wisconsin. The Company and all operations are guided by technically trained staffs, such as yourself, where manpower, equipment and materials must be applied to gain maximum production with safety at lowest cost.

As a member of our Manufacturing Department, you will engage in activities concerned with the metallurgical extraction of zinc, lead, cadmium, and spiegeleisen from our mined concentrates, the production of zinc alloys, powders and oxides, the rolling of zinc, the manufacture of anhydrous ammonia, carbon dioxide, sulfuric acid, diammonium phosphate, and titanium dioxide. Our manufacturing plants are in Palmerton, Pennsylvania; Depue, Illinois; and Gloucester City, New Jersey. Many opportunities exist for metallurgical, chemical, mechanical, electrical and civil engineering, design and construction.

In our Research Department at Palmerton, Pa., you will be associating with some of the top research and development men in the country. You will be assigned to one of the six basic divisions: Chemical Research, Metallurgical Research, Minerals Research, New Product Research, Chemical and Metallurgical Development and Products Application. You will have opportunities to engage in research and development in such major areas as geophysical exploration for ore, mineral processing, chemical and metallurgical processing, applications studies for our existing products and diversification into new products.

Joining New Jersey Zinc means joining a strong, well-established organization built and building for long-term operation. It means joining a corporation which is big enough for you to accomplish big things—and to advance progressively—yet of a comfortable size for you to become a well-known person in your own right at any level of the Company.

There are many interesting things happening at NJZ—things which offer challenging, rewarding careers. We would like to talk to you about them and about NJZ's role in your future.

Julian Bond to Speak At UMass For DVP

In April, 1960, Bond also helped to found the Student Non-violent Coordinating Committee (SNCC) and worked on the Atlanta Inquirer, a Negro newspaper, as reporter, feature writer and later became managing editor.

Bond was first elected to a seat in the Georgia House of Representatives in 1965, but was prevented from taking office by members of the legislature who objected to his statements on the Vietnam War. He won election to his seat in 1966 and assumed office in January, 1967.

He won a third election in Nov. 1966, and the next month the Supreme Court ruled that the Georgia House had erred in refusing Bond his seat. He became a member of the Georgia House in 1967.

Bond is a member of the Executive Committee of the Atlanta NAACP. He was the first co-chairman of the National Conference for New Politics and now serves as a member of the executive board of NCNP

Charles Ryan To Lecture On Urban Developments

Former Mayor Charles V. Ryan.

Charles V. Ryan, former mayor of Springfield, will deliver an address tonight at 7:30 at the Sigma Alpha Mu House at 387 North Pleasant Street. The topic of the former mayor's talk will be "New Directions in Urban America".

Ryan is a graduate of Georgetown University and of Boston College Law School. He graduated from Boston College law first in his class in 1951, and returned to his native home of Springfield to practice law in that same year.

In the late 1950's he became chairman of the New Springfield Committee and led the campaign to change the city's outmoded 108-year-old charter to Plan A, a streamlined, more efficient form of city government.

Following a city-wide referendum vote in favor of the new charter, Ryan ran for mayor and scored what most observers termed an upset victory over the incumbent, Thomas J. O'Connor, to become the City's first Plan A mayor.

Ryan was re-elected by wide margins in 1963 and 1965. As Ryan's third term was drawing to a close, he announced he would not seek another term.

After leaving the mayoralty last year, Ryan accepted the position of Professor of Urban Affairs at Springfield College and ran an unsuccessful campaign for Congress against the incumbent, Edward P. Boland.

This talk is a first in a series dealing with community problems to be sponsored by Sigma Alpha Mu Fraternity.

Intelligence and Method. A Revolution in Protest

As a result of the black students' handling of the situation which occured on campus two weeks ago, we saw what a group of well-intentioned, level-headed students combined with mature and responsible leadership can do for a legitimate cause. We can also see as a result of the past and recent occurances on many of our college campuses, what could have taken place if the involved students had not been of the mind and character that they were. It should be clearly understood that the situation which developed out of the alleged initial incident, the beating incident, on that Thursday night was a potentially dangerous one. In fact if it had not been for the cool, clear-headed actions of the group as a whole and the strong character of the leaders who took immediate control, things could have developed quite differently.

In order for us to fully understand the amount of responsibility and maturity it took for the black students to control their emotions at the time of the initial incident; it is necessary for us to view the incident in its proper perspective. We must understand that the incident was only the immediate cause of the resulting marches and demands. There were many incidences which occured sparadically throughout the year which all went to help formulate the mood which was conducive to the tense situation which occured. So it was no one incident which caused the result, but a combination of incidences sparked by the beating incident. All of the verbal and physical abuses which the black students have had to endure throughout the year had everything to do with what occured. All that the alleged beating incident did was light the fuse on the powder keg, a keg which could have violently exploded had it not been for the intelligence of the people involved.

Most of us by this time know what did occur as a result of the black students' actions following the "sparking" incident. Because of the black students' uniquely executed protest, and of course the just character of the demands presented, positive action is now being taken on the demands. This should be a clear indication to groups such as the SDS and other such organizations of what mature, intelligent protest can reap, for only by such methods can student power really show its ultimate potential. The black students of UMass should be an example to all of us, for they pioneered the way to positive student protest and in doing so benefited not only themselves, but the rest of us as well.

Man's Inhumanity

To the editor:

Well the S.D.S. has done it again. In the past, it had made great strides in exhibiting their lack of any sense, common or otherwise,. Recently they made themselves look ridiculous while protesting at an R.O.T.C. drill, but that was just a harmless prank. However, in their new plans to napalm a dog, they have exceeded all expectations of irresponsibility.

The most blatant example of this was the statement by Steve Gaman that "if the Marines can do it (napalm human beings) then so can we." This is just fine. In that case if a government appointed jury can try a suspect of a crime, a judge sentence him to death, and a public executioner carry out the sentence, then any member of the S.D.S. can take the law into his own hands and act as judge, jury, and executioner. Perhaps this is the type of "free" society desired by the S.D.S. If so, let them establish it someplace where the rights of Americans will not be infringed upon, something the S.D.S. never seems to consider.

One must not overlook the sad plight of the dog which is to be sacrificed for the furthering of the cause of the S.D.S. Just because it is a dog and not a human, does this preclude its right to live?

Last but not least, it is rather ironic that the S.D.S. should protest the same branch of the armed services that has always dedicated itself to the preservation of the freedom which allows protest, and is now trying to assure this freedom for the South Vietnamese, (even though it may not seem worth all the lives it is costing). One should recall that there are many who do not enjoy such freedom. Recently a number of Russian students were reportedly sent to Siberia for merely protesting the Soviet occupation of Czechoslovakia. It should also be pointed out that when the Russians did invade Czechoslovakia, the protest conscious S.D.S. hardly made any noise at all. Oh well, perhaps freedom is too good for anyone except them.

In Defense Of S.D.S.

To the editor:

One wonders what course of action to take in light of the recent ill-considered decision of SDS to engage in a dog burning. I recall about three years ago that I was standing on a field in Fort Hood, Texas holding a rifle rather awkwardly in my hands while a redneck sergeant instructed about five hundred of us, young American patriots, to yell, "Kill!" as we thrust our bayonets about. I wanted to cry, but I was already too calloused and worn and full of despair. Some weeks later, I wandered away from a training excercise and threw my gun into the woods. I sat down under a tree and felt free and human for the first time in months. After two court martial procedures had been initiated and I was faced with a minimum three years hard labor at Leavenworth, I was given a 'choice'. I took the easy way out, completed two years active duty, kept my mouth shut and lost my self-respect.

I am a better person - bitter that a campus will go into an uproar about a dog and not give a damn about the institutionalized murder machine that is our government. Will SDS burn a dog? I don't care whether they do or not. I care about Butch Thompson, who hadn't written from Vietnam for so long. He couldn't write because he died with a bullet in his head. A good soldier. I care about a country that puts you in jail for refusing to kill your fellow man. SDS is obviously trying to find some response to make to the staggering apathy, ignorance, and brutality of America, of this campus. They may be making the wrong response, but they are bringing the cruelty of napalm into this campus and staring us in the face with a challenge. Will we all turn out to save the dog? All the 'concerned' little college kids will save the dog. All the beeries will beat up the SDS people. Justice will triumph at UMass. Meanwhile, some kid will be locked up by the United States Government for refusing to kill people. Meanwhile, ten or twenty soldiers will die in Vietnam. Meanwhile, a hundred young men will kill their first human being. The dog will be saved. . . perhaps it will eventually be burned in a nuclear hollocast. That's OK, that's civilized.

Burning a dog won't stop it. Saving a dog won't stop it. Writing letters won't stop it. Crying won't stop it. Murder goes on all day long. . . at least SDS is trying something, anything, to change a sick world.

Michael Quinlan

STATEMENT FROM S.D.S.

A week ago the UMass chapter of Students for a Democratic Society threatened to napalm a dog on the steps of the Student Union, to protest an inhumane war and one of the agents of that war, the Marine Corps. From the beginning we had no intention of burning a dog, and, also from the beginning, we realized the utter absurdity and cruelity of such an action.

We find it interesting however, that the mere threat to napalm a dog causes more controversy than the daily slaughter in Viet Nam. Death, violence, and war are not things which occur in newspapers or on the radio; they are things which happen to real, living people and they happen because other real, living people make definite conscious choices to allow them to happen. Individual acts of violence are generally considered irrational and extremely cruel; mass acts of violence carried out in the name of the state are considered legitimate and rational.

Innocent Vietnamese people are being napalmed and our friends and relatives are dying in a senseless war, but more people become emotionally aroused over the empty threat to napalm a dog than the fact that the Marines are recruiting to kill in that ugly war.

The outrage of the campus community and the entire state is perfectly just; we now only hope that this outrage can be directed at the real perpetrators of violence.

On Cruelty To Animals

To the editor:

We felt deeply concerned when we read of SDS plans to napalm a dog.

We can't understand how people can be conscientiously AGAINST cruelty, and yet do such a cruel thing to a helpless dog. It surprises us very much to find that an organization which we thought was designed to strive COURAGEOUSLY for a HUMANEsociety would stoop to something so CRUEL and COWARDLY.

Amherst Record Newspaper

Prevention of Cruelty to Humans

To the Editor:

While scanning the Daily Collegian's Campus Comment (Nov. 22), two letters to the editor were the feature attraction with firm proclamations against the napalming act that the Students for a Democratic Society intend to inflict upon one of man's best friends. One gentleman was in fact a "former member" of that organization.

Like so many who proclaim the need for sympathy, understanding and reform in social order and behavior, when the time for action is near with the inevitable public reactions that lead to censure and condemnation of the perpetrators, personal convictions pale and indeed become miniscule in the shadow of the "establishment". It is easier to cast yourself once again into the mainstream of "normal" life and allow yourself to be swept along into mediocrity, obscurity and into the world of "former". Although a few people become "former" while serving their cause and purpose (Martin Luther King, John and Bob Kennedy to name a few), it seems the pursuit of ideals is a risky way of life. "Former" is a safer way of life, you are not subjected to public appraisal or prosecution, you "live and let live". For you, Mr. Former, you are snug and warm in your convictions and obvious lack of insight. As a joiner you don't belong in S.D.S. Maybe an organization like Kiawanis, Rotary, Moose, Elks or the Masons would suit your way of thinking. They have a format that you could adapt to. An action group like S.D.S. definitely is not your cup of tea.

The other gentleman has suggested that the A.S.P.C.A. be called in to avert this "cruel stunt". Once again the lack of in-sight on the part of another person is displayed. It appalls me to think that people on a college level can be so lacking in common sense. Can't these two gentlemen see the obvious intent? Don't they understand? The purpose of the act has been lost to them.

In a society where the huge television media devotes large amounts of time to low level advertising sell gimmicks, that display animals that are coddled, loved, cooed to, petted, fed the goodiest yummy food that ma ma's lovely fuzzy little appetite alarm darling ever had, and the news of the "war" in Vietnam accounts for one or two minutes of a 30 to 60 minute daily news "special", it is no wonder that the animal sentiment seems to tower over the human element.

On the front page of the Collegian, University President Lederle "threatens action against S.D.S. dog protest". The threat of action will no doubt be expulsion on an academic level and monetary punishment on a civil level. What then of those "cruel stunts" of napalming HUMANS in Vietnam by other human beings? Does this make the act human, regardless of who does it? Should the A.S.P.C.A. be brought in? Should they all be expelled or fined for participating in an illegal act?

Bravo S.D.S.! you have accomplished something, you have aroused the public, a hard task these days of illegal war by "advisors", police brutality etc. Now all you need to do is to arouse human understanding and compassion for other humans. Maybe a new group should be formed, The American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Humans.

The Value of S.D.S.

To the Editor:

In the Daily Collegian of Friday, November 8, there were two comments concerning SDS on page 7. Both of these comments were highly critical of SDS, scoring the organization as authoritarian, destructive, cowardly, childish, and generally "low-crawling."

The SDS has been wrongly condemned. I want to point out that SDS and similar organizations are underestimated in their total worth and influence in a society which is striving to achieve a sense of freedom.

The most accepted statement concerning freedom is freedom as a concept is ambiguous.

Similarly, democracy is ambiguous. We must confess that no one person is gifted with the true knowledge of freedom, that in fact there may not be such a universal truth. All an individual can do is accept a general feeling for what freedom means to him. That general notion which includes and/or satisfies the most people of a society is termed popular opinion. It is not the only opinion, nor is it the most clearly defined notion. It is simply the most inclusive, the least precise, and hence the most ambiguous notion.

We need not stop with freedom and democracy, (the course of most ideas which receive public following.) Rarely can it be assumed that one idea is truer than others; rarely can it be said that a public opinion is a precise, definitive idea approaching any degree of "ultimate truth".

The next question then is of accepting ideas. That is, we must understand how individuals come to accept those public notions, and how society even creates such a thing as a public opinion. When individuals relate to form a society and government based on popular opinion, pure rationality is an impossibility.

In order for a man to exist in a society he will accept as many of the ideas that society professes as is possible for him. Each individual's system of rational process will filter out those ideas which conflict with the person's rational conclusion. Furthermore, those ideas which cause constant conflict in a person's life-style will also be excluded, or at least watered down until comfort is restored. For the most part, however, people tend to accept their societies' public notions, and it is in fact this acceptance which creates public opinion.

I have barely gone beyond the surface, however I have shown that the process is complex, never simple; and hence no one can honestly say society is right, nor can anyone decide which segment of society and which idea of society is the most right. We need only to discuss the few of the ideas American society has accepted and does accept. At one time, this society's concept of freedom included slavery. This same society today still believes in this ambiguous freedom while including racism as part of the social consciousness.

We also accept war as a valid means of defending this freedom, or rather concept of freedom, which many Americans are excluded from.

I have mentioned questioning twice so far because it is the main point of this letter. Questioning is the basis of serious thought-formation; that is, if we never question and seek beyond that which we accept, we never think and conceptualize beyond that which we have accepted. Any kind of discovery is then impossible, progress becomes an unreal term, and change ceases to exist.

I see at this point the worth of SDS: it questions that which most people simply accept and deem to be right. It questions not only the ideas, but the value of those ideas, the effects of those ideas, and the processes involved in forming those ideas. In effect, SDS is a greater service than most organizations today which insist that a healthy society is the one which does little or no questioning.

I have tried to point out the complex nature of society and socially accepted ideas. It seems incredible to me that anyone can make simple judgements and easily accept anything. I say to Duen and Shepherd that they have easily accepted everything. They have failed to understand on any level the society they are members of and their own individual thoughts and actions within that society because they have not questioned.

I suggest to these two and to those who maintain similar positions that they think, question a great deal before they accept. Until they enter this process their statements are largely worthless, especially worthless to themselves, and entirely juvenile.

Richard Feldman
Member of SDS

Underneath - A Lesson

To the editor:

The SDS plan to naplam a dog in protest to the napalming in Vietnam has once again caused the UMass community to shed its apathy, momentarily and rise en masse against this inhumane action by the SDS.

Admittedly my first reaction to the plan was that the SDS had finally snapped and was, in fact, insane to propose such a plan. Then the whole genius of the plan struck me. Let's face it. UMass' levels of interest are pretty low, and it takes something dramatic to make people wake up. Now the SDS can say: "Well, hell, if you all get so up in arms about the inhumanity of napalming a dog, why don't you react the same way about the frying of your fellow man in Viet Nam?"

Frankly, I don't believe that SDS ever really planned to burn a dog, unless, of course there was no public reaction to the proposal. The plan was a good way to trap "Alice Apathy" and make her see herself for what she really is.

I am not a member of SDS nor do I fully agree with the purpose of SDS. In this case, however, SDS has taught me and hopefully UMass an interesting lesson.

S.D.S. Outdoes Itself

S.D.S., you did it again! Another UMass first! We really think you have outdone yourselves this time. After your spectacular performance in poor taste earlier this fall on the drill field, we felt quite sure that you would be unable to equal it, let alone surpass it. Imagine our surprise this morning as we read about your upcoming protest.

Unfortunately, however, your present undertaking, although consistent with your past actions, seems to lack both good judgement and originality. As you may remember this particular hoax on other campuses met with no appreciable result. A recent example of this hoax happened at California just a few days ago.

However, more than calling to the attention of the University a deplorable situation, we feel you are trying to regain the focus of attention that the Afro-American Organization, through their sincere efforts, have captured. It shows a lack of good judgement on your part that you must resort to pure sensationalism to recapture the attention you constantly crave and so relentlessly pursue.

Fine Arts Council To Discuss Forming Jazz Association

A meeting will be held tonight 7 p.m. in Room 325B Bartlett Hall to discuss the possibility of forming a new jazz concert association on campus next semester. This meeting has been called by the Fine Arts Council in an effort to see whether there is sufficient interest among students and faculty in creating a new series of concerts dealing with jazz, blues, rock 'n roll and other forms of "modern music" as one student has suggested.

The Fine Arts Council is extremely interested in offering a well-balanced program of fine arts activites to the University community and the area of popular musical programs is of great interest, inasmuch as there have not been regularly scheduled popular music series offered here.

Frosh Ice Varsity 8-4 In Scrimmage

Led by Mike Waldron's hat trick and a three goal outburst at the start of the third period, the UMass freshman hockey team defeated the UMass varsity 8-4 Friday night at Orr Rink.

Waldron, who played for last year's state champions at Auburn, Mass., scored the first two goals for the frosh, both coming in the first period. He added another during the frosh's three goal barrage at the start of the third period.

The winning goal was scored in the second period by Bob Whelden from Falmouth, Mass., with assists to Dan Reidy and Waldron. The latter finished the night with four points.

The first minute and 11 seconds of the third period, proved to be demoralizing for the varsity as freshman Jack Edwards, Waldron and Reidy all scored giving them an 8-2 edge. The varsity added two more goals by John Hartnett and Loring Cook.

Hartnett's goal, one of the two he scored, coming at 8:28 of the third period, was the prettiest of the night. He carried the puck all the way from his own blue line and skated around two freshmen defense men before firing the puck by goalie Pat Flaherty.

Billy McMann was the other varsity scorer. His goal came on a slap shot in the second period. McMann also played a strong game on defense.

Probably the most encouraging sight to varsity coach Jack Canniff was the fine play of Hartnett, a junior from Marblehead, Mass.

The next game for the varsity will be this Tuesday night at Orr Rink against Lowell Tech. The freshmen play their next game against the Yale Frosh at New Haven.

Riflers Remain Unbeaten

The UMass riflemen shot what is probably their highest score ever to defeat URI on Saturday. The Redmen totalled 1297 to URI's 1198. The main strength of the UMass team was the incredible shooting of Capt. John Lacouture. With a 98 prone, 91 kneeling, and 87 standing for a total of 276, John proved he is one of the best marksmen in New England.

This win gives UMass a 5-0 record and boosts their chances of placing this year in the New England finals. The riflemen's next match is against Brown on Dec. 7th and the UMass team are hopeful that this will provide them with the opportunity to at last break the magic 1300 mark.

Redmen Look Good In Defeat

and the passing of Tim Adams to Jim Long and Nick McGarry moved UMass out of a deep hole and up to midfield where the drive stalled.

Eagle sophomore Fred Willis showed his running talents to advantage after Steve Rogers punt as he got off a flashy 17 yard jaunt. The UMass defense rose again however, as Mike McArdle, Don Dotson and Bill Frye came up with tackles to force a fourth and one punt.

Grasso and Adams had the Redmen moving, but a clip forced them into a punting situation.

A fine punt return by speedster George Gill set the screaming Eagle offensive up with a first down at the UMass 33. Walsh, Frye and Russ Wood held Willis to three yards a whack setting up a fourth and one.

Fallon then faked everyone out of their socks as he sent fullback Jim Catone diving into the line, bootlegged the ball to his right, and flipped back to Bennett who scampered 24 yards into the end zone.

The play was called back, however, due to illegal procedure on BC's part and Frye broke up another fourth down attempt.

The Redmen got another good break on the ensuing play as Jim Grace picked off an Adams aerial and ran it back to the UMass 17 before fumbling. UMass recovered.

Pat Scavone and Grasso followed the fine blocking of George Crane and Bruce Fulton for some yardage, but the Eagle defense tightened up once more.

After a 48 yard punt by Rogers, BC got their first td march underway. Flare passes from Fallon to Bennett and Paul Della Villa moved the visitors 77 yards in nine plays with Willis picking up the six points on a one-yard sweep. Bob Gallivan's conversion, the first of his three, made it 7-0.

Another Eagle interception, this one by Gary Dancewicz stopped the Redmen after Adams had connected with Grasso on a 17 yard flare pass.

John Farrelly's fine defensive play held BC in check the remainder of the half as he came up with several key tackles.

After intermission UMass threw a real scare into the Beantowners. Tom York and Marty Scheralis kept up the pressure on BC quarterback Fallon and Steve Parnell came up with a pretty interception at the UMass 20 and returned the ball to the 41.

Bruce Cochrane, running superbly in his last game, picked up long yardage as he hit some big holes opened by Mike Cooney and Pierre Marchando. Grasso then brought the ball to the BC 25 on a sweep led by Crane.

A delay of game penalty then forced the Redmen to go for a long field goal attempt. Scheralis' 43 yard boot had the legs but it was off to the left.

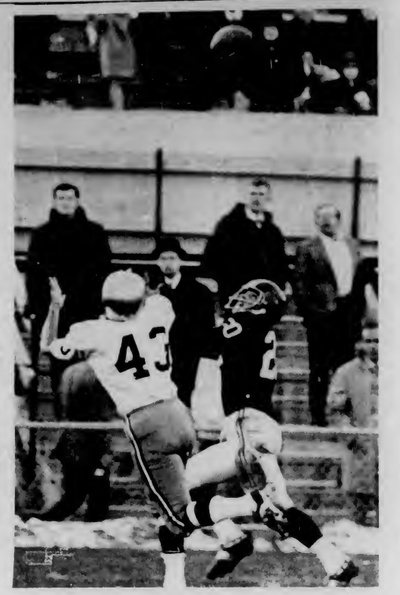
Safetyman Rogers picked off another Fallon aerial minutes later. UMass fouled up this opportunity when offsetting penalties nullified a Cochrane gain.

Farrelly's fumble recovery seconds later at Eagle 28 could have been the play of the game. The Redmen had the momentum and BC had their backs to the wall.

An Adams' to McGarry aerial and a Scavone sweep brought the ball to the BC eight, but the visitors once more rose to the occasion, throwing Grasso for a loss, then blocking a Scheralis three-point attempt.

Boston College took over at their own 35 and marched down the field for a score under the direction of third-strong quarterback Joe Marzetti.

Bennett, Della Villa and Marzetti all broke long gainers on the drive. A third-and-twenty, 31 yard scramble by Marzetti was the key play as it gave the Eagles a first-and-goal as the third quarter ended.



A clipping penalty and some fine defensive work by John MacLean, Dennis Gray, and Parnell threw the Eagles back, but Barry Gallup got loose in the end zone and Marzetti's pass found him to make it 14-0.

A 14 yard sprint by Cochrane moved the Redman offense to midfield after the ensuing kickoff. Then Adams faded back, behind some fine blocking by Bob Sheehan and Dick Donlin, and found Grasso for an 18 yard gain. The junior halfback was injured on the play, however, and this seemed to take the zest out of the UMass offense.

BC threw back the invasion, forced a punt, and marched 80 yards in 13 plays for the clinching score. Key plays on the drive were three Marzetti bootlegs, the last, a nine-yard scamper accounted for the score.

Another visitor interception, this one by Jim McCool gave the Eagles another scoring opportunity. The Redman secondary dwarfed Marzetti's passing efforts, though, and the UMass offense took over at their own 21.

Adams passes to Long and Scavone moved them up to the 49 and then on a third-and-five situation Kenny Hughes took over at the helm.

Hughes hit McGarry for a quick first down. With time running out, the junior QB led Scavone perfectly on a 23 yard pass which split two defenders. Dropping back again, Hughes hit McGarry at the ten, and the big tight end bulled his way into the end zone to put the home team on the board.

Season Is History, B.C. Game Leaves Hope For Tomorrow

by Peter Pascarelli
Assistant Sports Editor

It would have been awful easy for the UMass football team to turn over and play dead, Saturday. The Redmen were playing the last game of their worst season in years and were playing the best team on their schedule. No one would have noticed and not too many people would have cared if UMass had allowed themselves to be bombed, by Boston College.

To the everlasting credit of the team and coaches the Redmen not only did not go through the motions, but played their best game.

Sportswriters from the Boston and Springfield press, who were shutout in efforts to cover the Harvard-Yale game, were probably disgruntled to be covering such an obvious mismatch, They came away, writing, however, of a gallant, determined, etc, UMass team.

UMass coach Vic Fusia, relieved to be through with such a long season, was a proud coach after the contest. Fusia remarked, "It was by far our best game, but more than that, most of these fellows are back next year. They learned a lesson, and received a lot of pleasure about how easy it is to play with that kind of enthusiasm.

"They went after Boston College," he went on, "and this will carry over next year."

Fusia had quarterback Tim Adams running more than usual. This week Adams, due to good pass protection, was running from choice, not for his life.

The coach said, "We had Tim running more because of a weakness they had to one of our formations. Also, being the last game, we did not have to worry about our number one quarterback getting hurt."

Fusia appeared to be a little irritated at a portion of the crowd's displeasure at his decision to go for a field goal with about two minutes left in the third quarter and the Redmen on the Eagle 14.

The coach said, "It was psychologically the best play, the most intelligent play in that situation. We were at a high emotional pitch and had to get on the board. If we had scored there B.C. would have had to play our type of game.

"Besides," the coach went on, "we have not been successful on fourth down plays in that territory and Scheralis will put over anything inside the 30. This was the only choice, if you are trying to win."

Fusia said that Frank Harris' absence due to a thumb injury had no affect on the UMass defense since Harris' replacement at the B. C. helm, Mike Fallon, calls essentially the same type of game.

The UMass mentor, who completed his eighth season as UMass football coach Saturday, had words about another quarterback, little-used Ken Hughes, who came off the Redman bench to lead UMass to their only score.

"He was amazing, and I'm happy for him and the team which was right in there in the final minute and never let up," Fusia added, "Ken just told himself he was going to do something and he did."

Actually no individual should be singled out for UMass. The whole defense was in one word great. It held one of the leading offensive machines in the nation to "only" 21 points.

The offense moved the ball as well as it has all year against a big defense. With a few breaks, it would have put a few more points on the board.

UMass lost a battle Saturday, but the Redmen might have won themselves a war.

REDMAN RATINGS-Seniors Bruce Cochrane, Bill Frye, Mike McArdle and George Crane all had exceptional farewell performances...Steve Parnell saved UMass field position when he blocked a B. C. player who was about to down a punt inside the five...Buffalo defeated Boston U, 13-10, Delaware defeated Bucknell, 38-12...And rumor has it that Holy Cross coach Tom Boisture whose team edged UConn 27-24, is in line for a job at the University of Houston. Houston edged Tulsa 100-6.

Deaver Cites Human Freedom As The Core To Existence

BY JOAN WORSNOP
Staff Reporter

Jack Deaver gave the second lecture in the Maroon Keys' 11th Hour series, "If given a last chance to speak publicly before dying, what would you say?" Deaver teaches French and a comparative literature course at the University.

Deaver began with the statement that death is an undiscovered country from whose bonds no one has ever returned. Some say that death is a commencement, but most people agree that it is a terminal point.

At death, people will ask, "Why?"; what is the meaning of this awful inevitability? If death is an end, "before death one must do all one wants to do, love all, one wants to love." Deaver went on to say, "I do not believe that Satan sired Rosemary's baby...my concern is with the here and now." The individual has to measure traditional truth in terms of personal value.

Deaver's approach to contemporary reality is through what he terms neo-existentialism. He said that THE GRADUATE, Saul Bellow's HERZOG, and the songs of Judy Collins and Donovan are all patently existentialist.

Deaver explained existentialism by saying that man's destiny is up to himself; the limits of his freedom are made according to his situation. Reality is absurd, but you can structure the absurd into something meaningful.

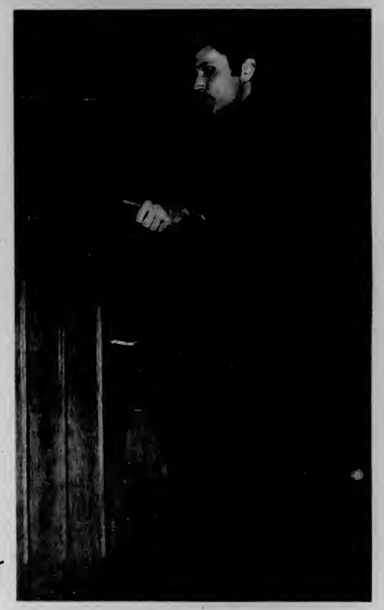
Our generation has put this freedom into the words, "Do your own thing." Human freedom is the core of existentialism.

Deaver said that the Catholic confession and psychotherapy are valuable in that they allow the individual to verbalize his situation. Through verbalization comes lucidity; "the self confronts the self."

Applying these theories, Deaver said our generation encounters reality sooner than others have. If we deal with reality sooner, maybe there is optimism. Deaver summed up the dilemma of our generation through the words to the song sung by Barbra Streisand, "Where Am I Going?"

There are two kinds of subjectivity according to Deaver. The first is primary subjectivity which is ignorance. The person sees reality from one limited perspective; he has not examined himself. The second type of subjectivity is realizing oneself.

Deaver applied the second type of subjectivity to education. You are here "to widen a few horizons," to give reality. You need to absorb all you possibly can in order to cope with the outside world. "Every course in this university is relevant to your personal lives." The fault is with the mediators, that is, the teachers; they must get across the reality.



If you have been able to understand other perspectives, you have been drawn out of the dangerous primary subjectivity, therefore, you have acquired a certain responsibility. You find that you must take a stand on everything that confronts you.

If the "kingdom of the earth is one's only point of reference", this implies a kind of social engagement. "Take a look at the world and choose!" You should find a "total immersion in life."

The most meaningful approach to reality advocates responsible individualism. Education and experience are a means to this end. "Cultivate what it is in you that is unique."

You are going towards death, but you are in the here and now. You have the time and space to find your meaning. "Maybe you ought to construct a person you can live with."

The Maroon Keys will present Putnam Barber in the third of the lectures in the 11th Hour series. He will speak on Dec. 11.

Gas Concentration Builds Up in Mine

MANNINGTON, W. Va. (AP) - Samples of air sucked from the deep recesses of a smoldering coal mine where 78 men have been trapped for nearly six days showed Monday night a deadly concentration of methane and carbon monoxide gas.

"You and I could not live in it," Consolidation Coal Co. President John Corcoran told an evening news conference. He referred to air in Mountaineer Coal Co. No. 9 mine.

There has been no contact with the 78 men since the first explosion shuddered the sprawling mine complex Wednesday morning. The other 21 men on the midnight shift either escaped or were rescued.

Corcoran said analyses of the air samples drawn from the mine through a slim copper tube nearly 800 feet long showed the mine's methane content to be 7.4 per cent. The tolerable limits for methane in humans, he said, is 2 per cent.

Carbon monoxide in the mine's atmosphere was 50 times that which it should be, Corcoran said.

Corcoran reaffirmed what other mine officials had said earlier, that no more rescue teams would be sent into the mine immediately. He said the decision reached earlier "will not be changed, at this time."

Rescue efforts took another setback earlier Monday when a small explosion sent a puff of smoke billowing from one of the mine's portals.

Former Springfield Mayor Address SAM Brothers About Community Prob.

Former Springfield Mayor Charles V. Ryan addressed the brothers of Sigma Alpha Mu and their guests last night in the first of a series of lectures dealing with community problems. Ryan, who was an unsuccessful congressional candidate in this year's election and is presently a professor of urban affairs at Springfield College, spoke on "New Directions in Urban America."

Ryan stressed the need for every individual and group to re-evaluate priorities in the face of the problems facing the nation and in particular the nation's cities. "We cannot afford to just try to 'get our piece'," he said. "Nor can we trust to Divine Providence to supply solutions to our problems. If we do, we are fools."

The former mayor said that while changes in the present social and political structure are definitely needed, the difficulties faced by our cities are too large and immediate to wait for these changes to take place. Men concerned with tackling and solving the problems in the areas of health, housing, air and water pollution must make repeated efforts to bring about the needed improvements and correct social injustices.

Ryan said that these vital concerns are "the peoples' business." Dealing with the peoples' business, he claimed, is one of the highest of vocations. Politics motivated by interest in the welfare of the people is a "long, tedious, and frustrating business, involving a lot of hard work," Ryan reminded his audience.

The only sustaining factor in the career of a concerned person dedicated to the peoples' business, said Ryan, is the conviction that his efforts will effect some difference in the attaining of the desired social improvements.

Smith Will Present Lecture On Photography As an Art Form

The photography of the late Alfred Stieglitz will be the subject of an illustrated lecture at Smith College December 2.

Peter C. Bunnell, associate curator of photography at New York's Museum of Modern Art, will discuss Stieglitz's photography as an art form.

Sponsored by the art department, the lecture will be in Wright Hall at 8 p.m. The public is invited to attend.

In addition to his fame as a photographer, Stieglitz achieved world recognition as an art dealer and as an editor. He was director of gallery "291" on Fifth Avenue from 1905 until 1917 and of An American Place of Madison Avenue from 1929 until his death in 1946. He was editor of the American Amateur Photographer, Camera Notes, and Camera Work.

Bunnell is visiting lecturer at New York University and Dartmouth College as well as adviser in American arts and letters to the University of Exeter, England.

Protestors May Disrupt Interviewer At UConn

STORRS, Conn. (AP) - University of Connecticut President Homer Babbidge, Jr. says "precautions" will be taken so protestors cannot disrupt the work of an Olin Mathieson Chemical Corp. job interviewer again Tuesday.

Some 75 protestors were involved in halting a job interview by an Olin representative at the job placement department of the university Monday. Babbidge later said the Olin interviews have been rescheduled to Tuesday and precautions will be taken "to ensure that they are not disrupted."

State police were called to the rural campus earlier this month when a group of some 300 protestors took over a university administration building. They left when threatened by arrest. That 27-hour protest was related to the continuing controversy over on-campus interviews at the university, which has about 11,000 students.

Babbidge's brief statement Monday gave no indication of what form the precautions might take.

Monday's incident was similar to disruption of a job interview being conducted by a representative of Dow Chemical Co., Oct. 30 by some 100 persons. The protestors said they opposed Dow's manufacture of Napalm used in Vietnam.

Monday's protest was aimed at manufacture of rifles by Olin's Winchester-Western Division, the demonstrators indicated.

The Olin interviewer, who was not identified, was surrounded by some 25 protestors inside a room at Koons Hall Monday. As one protestor beat out a rhythm on the bottom of a wastebasket, the 25 demonstrators chanted "Out, demon out" and "Off the campus," until the interviewer put on his coat and left the building.

Joined by some 50 persons who had waited outside, the protestors followed the Olin interviewer to a nearby university administration building. In a meeting with Dean of Students Robert Hewes they demanded a statement in writing that Olin interviews on campus would be cancelled.

Hewes told the protestors to "take my word for it, the interviews are cancelled." A short time later the Olin representative left the administration building and was walked to his car, where the protestors again surrounded him. They changed "Pray for the dead and they will pray for you," until the Olin representative drove away.

After the Oct. 30 disruption of a Dow job interview, the university began disciplinary proceedings against four faculty members and eight students who took part in that protest.

A chief demand of the protestors who took over a university administration building for 27 hours Nov. 11-12 was that amnesty be declared for the 12. Student and faculty committees still have not announced what action will be taken in the cases of the 12 protestors.

Course Textbooks Are Main Problem For University Bookstore Manager

The University Bookstore sells sweatshirts, toothpaste, records, and magazines and hardly anyone complains about supply or service. But textbooks for all of the courses at the University, the store's main business-is in many ways a source of a giant headache. Professors are responsible for turning in orders for the texts required for their courses approximately two months in advance of each semester, according to Winthrop L. Cummings, book store manager. Each department secretary gives the forms to the professor and either fills it out for him or he does it himself.

To determine the number of books ordered, the professor projects the enrollment of the course from the previous semester. If the professor knows of enrollment change by registration day, the book store will call the publisher and order more books if they are needed.

In addition to ordering new books from the publishing houses, the book store will send to Chicago or New York for used books, Cummings said.

Books are stored in the warehouse near the physical plant and are transported from there when demand necessitates Clerks in the book store check the shelves periodically to determine if stock is getting low.

Cummings said that books will be available in the physical plant again in January. Tentative plans now are that the book store will be moved to the new Campus Center in the spring of 1970. Cummings said that there will be more floor space in the new location and the store will also carry the same things currently in stock.

Students have traditionally complained about the price of textbooks, and the villain is usually the management of the book store. But, according to Cummings, the publishers set a price for each book, and the quantity ordered has no bearing on the price. Books arrive in the store at a list price and for hardbound books only the management can set a sale price below list.

Cummings said it is difficult to reduce the price of paperbacks because the prices would have to be masked. He also said masking the price (putting a sticker over the price already on the front of the book) makes it difficult to return to the publisher.

Books which are not sold, either paperback or hardbound, are returned to the publisher. According to Cummings, paperback books present the biggest problem with an overstock. He said, "Students are more apt to share the paperbacks, especially in such courses as history, which requires a large number of paperbacks." He went on to say that the book store will have more of these books still on the shelves at the end of the semester than hardbound books.

While many students are prone to complain that the book store is making a profit, which could just as well be used to mark down the prices of books, Cummings asserts that the store is making only a very small profit and all the money goes back into the Student Union to help maintain the costs of the building.

Complaints are not confined to the students only, for some of the professors have voiced discontent with the operations of the book store. Of six professors interviewed by the Collegian, most said they would like to see the store become a cooperative run by the students and faculty.

Many of the professors also complained about the trouble which many of them had getting books. In one instance, a professor asserted that the store had sent to a different publisher, than the one he had listed for the book. As a result the textbooks were late in coming and an insufficient number were shipped.

Others said that they have filled the orders properly and turned them into the department secretary in time for the deadline, but that the book store has somehow confused the order. Late arrivals are a constant problem in the opening months of the semester, as is an insufficient supply on the shelves, they stated.

Dept. of Public Welfare Meets with UM Officials

By JOHN HICKEY
News Editor

Representatives from the office of James Carson, director of field operations for the State Department of Public Welfare, met yesterday with UMass officials who have been involved in an in-depth study of welfare allocations.

The meeting between the state welfare officials and Dean of Administration Leo F. Redfern, Dean of Home Economics Helen Connoyer, and Miss Winifred Eastwood, director of the home economics extension staff, was held at 10:30 in the Home Economics Building. The purpose of the meeting was to explore the adequacy of appropriations of the schedules of family allowances in the welfare system.

It was agreed at the meeting that the School of Education will prepare a design for further careful study of family allowances and appropriate procedures for granting allowances. The plan for the study and cost estimates will be completed by January. The plan, if approved, could require a year of field work and analysis.

The School of Home Economics has been conducting a study of consumer prices for low-income families, particularly in the Connecticut Valley. A study of retail prices in Holyoke was recently completed.

Discussion Group Will be Examining Education Problems

The problems in most educational systems are many and varied. While many of the problems are obvious, the solutions which are presented are few.

Next semester Craig C. Lancto will be leading a discussion group in "Understanding Problems In Education."

The class is designed to give a better understanding of the problems and suggest various alternatives. As well as being of obvious interest to potential teachers, it would be of equal interest to future parents, school-board members, legislators, or informed citizens.

All interested students are invited to participate in the twice weekly, three credit discussion group.

Grad Student Shows Versatility In Vocal Performance Sunday

By GALE SAKARIS
Fine Arts Staff

Warren Whitney, tenor, gave a superb masters recital on Sunday, at Bowker Auditorium.

He opened with an aria by Handel and was accompanied by Charles Fussell, a professor in the music department. The aria is technically very difficult but Mr. Whitney performed it with precision and fine articulation.

The Handel was followed with the Samuel Barber Hermit songs. These were the highlight of the program with regards to Whitney's performance. The meaning and the warmth of these songs was very well understood. A great deal of the mood of the cycle was depicted in the piano part which Mr. Fussell performed with great musical ability.

Mr. Whitney also performed on the program a premiere of a set of songs called Michelangelo Fragments by Charles Fussell. The instrumentation set included harpsichord, xylophone, drums and cello played by Charles Fussell Jay Gondelman, Robert Stern and Margaret Rice respectively. The set is very exciting and the ensemble performed them excellently.

Following intermission Whitney sang the Liederkreis, a song cycle by Schumann. In these Whitney showed both versatility in range and musical interpretation, but occasionally the notes in the upper part of his range seemed to be lacking in resonance. The contrasting emotions of happiness, sadness, doubt and fear were clearly shown throughout the cycle.

Mr. Whitney is not only endowed with a voice of excellent quality and ability, but he uses this voice with a great deal of intelligence and musicality that becomes the vocalist of the present.

Osmosis Membrane Possible Solution To Water Pollution

A wisp of a membrane thinner than a spiderweb may be a major weapon in the fight against water pollution, environmental engineers at the University of Massachusetts believe.

They have begun a federally-financed study of the reverse osmosis membrane, originally developed to purify salt water. They hope to develop systems using the membrane for large-scale water treatment that will be capable of removing all pollutants from water, even such trace elements as pesticide residues.

"The membrane process has the capability of producing water of nearly distilled purity," according to the project's director, Dr. Rolf T. Skrinde. "It can remove all visible matter, all bacteria and possibly all virus, organic matter and chemical pollutants including synthetic detergents and pesticides."

Variations of the process purify water for reuse on spacecraft trips and make artificial kidneys work. UMass engineers see two major problems to solve in adapting the process to large scale water treatment: slow rate of flow and build-up of residue on the membrane surface.

UMass environmental engineers will tackle the problem of build-up on the membrane surface through a close study of the flow characteristics of liquids that move across the surface, particularly the laminar sublayer closest to the surface. This study will be done in cooperation with Dr. W. Leigh Short of the UMass chemical engineering department.

Vanderbilt University Approves Student Member

In a dramatic move that might go far in narrowing the generation gap, the Vanderbilt University Board of Trust has approved nominating and electing a senior student to the Board each year.

The move serves a dual purpose: young ex-students can tell it like it is to their fellow Board members, and the students can gain a sense of participation in guiding the university's future.

Three students will be nominated by the Alumni Association and one elected by all eligible students during the Board's Spring meeting.

This new nominating process is apparently unique among America's major universities. The first student will be nominated and elected to the Board next Spring.

The University of Massachusetts Symphony Band will present its first concert on Sunday, December 8th at 3:00 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. Appearing as guests of the band will be the Chamber Singers and the Madrigal Singers. (UMass Photo)

Graduation Information A Must for All Seniors

There are a number of points concerning graduation from the University which in the past have been assumed to be common knowledge among students but which, in fact, have proven to be vaguely known or not at all. The following list is presented in an attempt to inform all potential graduates on some of the points which it is felt will facilitate the transition from student to graduate:

1. Students may be awarded their degree in February, June, or September. However, commencement exercises are held but once a year. This year the date is May 31. All 1969 graduates may attend commencement but only February and June graduates will be listed in the program and have graduation publicity released.

2. The graduation machinery is set in motion by completing and returning the yellow diploma card which is included in senior class registration packets. It is essential that these be returned - some are still outstanding. The Registrar's Office is guided by the information returned by you as to:

A. Your name exactly as you wish it to appear on your diploma.
B. Your correct major.
*C. Your intended month of completion.
D. Your correct degree.

*Students who will require additional semester(s) and have so indicated will be reclassified to the class of 1970 after spring registration. You will not be considered for graduation after the Fall semester unless you coded January on the diploma card.

College of Arts and Science must indicate B. S. or B. A.

3. All degrees are mailed to the home address of record at the time of the student's last enrollment. It is also important that a correct local address be on record.

4. Pre-registration for the next ensuing semester will result in deletion of the student's name from those expected to complete in the current semester. (i.e. a student who indicated completion by February but who pre-registers for the spring semester will be deleted from the February list)

5. Female students who marry have the option of which name will appear on their degree. Marriage certificates must be presented to the Registrar's Office to change the name on the records.

6. Students planning to complete degree requirements elsewhere must file a prior approval form with the Registrar's Office before undertaking such work. This requires approval of the Academic Dean and the head of the major department.

Faculty Recital

Professor Joseph Contino of the Music Department faculty will give a clarinet recital tonight at 8:00 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. Assisting Mr. Contino on the program will be pianist, Estela Olevsky and cellist, Joel Krosnick.

For tonight's concert, Mr. Contino has programmed the following: Sonata for Clarinet and Piano by Leonard Bernstein; Four Pieces for Clarinet and Piano, Opus 5 by Alban Berg; Grand Duo Concertante, Opus 48 and Johannes Brahms' Trio for Piano, Clarinet and Cello, Opus 114.

Oxford Seminar Takes Step Forward To Trinity College This Summer

BY MARTHA CURRAN
Senior Reporter

A quarter of a million dollars was spent to lower the hall at Trinity College, Oxford University, to its medieval foundations. Dr. Ernest Hofer, Director of the University of Massachusetts Oxford Summer Seminar, said the result is a rathskellar, uniquely British; complete with darts and ha'penny port and bitters, it will, for six weeks next summer, belong to 120 students studying under the Seminar Program.

Dr. Hofer reviewed the three-year history of the Seminar; the most significant change, he said, "a great step forward," is the move from St. Hilda's College to Trinity College.

"I'm very fond of St. Hilda's College," Hofer continued, "But Trinity College is at the heart of things in Oxford, just moments away from Blackwell's, the largest bookstore in the world; the Bodelian Library; the theatres, and stores and pubs and people of Oxford."

Hofer, whose enthusiasm is the key to the continuing success of the Summer Seminar, described Trinity: "The College is in the center of the city yet there are two acres of garden and an idyllic Wordsworthian atmosphere. Accommodations for students are ideal, there are two rooms, living-study room and a bedroom for each student. One building for accomodation was designed by Sir Christopher Wren; the other is only two years old. They are designed on a staircase system and provide maximum privacy: two suites on each floor of a winding staircase; no corridors.

Add to all this a baroque chapel, a ballroom, modern plumbing and the chance to study English Literature under Oxford dons and for $820 including air transportation to and from London, plus room, board and tuition at Trinity, theatre tickets and transfers - you can't go wrong.

Dr. Ernest Hofer, Director of the Oxford Summer Seminar forms plans for this year's program at Trinity College. (MDC photo by Mike Alpert)

The Seminar is open to undergraduates with approximately a 3.0 average in ENGLISH and completion of at least 15 semester hours in English courses by June, 1969. All applicants must be at least 20 years old by June, 1969. Students in related majors are also encouraged to apply.

Graduate students should be working for a Master's or a Ph.D. Beginning graduate students may be accepted on the basis of the undergraduate criteria and will be classified a transient graduate student by the University of Massachusetts. Applications and further information are available in Room 160, Bartlett Hall.

The courses offered for the Seminar have been "dovetailed," according to Dr. Hofer, "to correspond with the outside world. For instance, undergraduates will study four Shakespearian plays intensively and see performances of the plays in Stratford or London.

All next year's sophomores, juniors, and seniors interested in participating in the University's Year of Study Abroad in France should contact, before February 1, Dr. Frederick Busi, French Department, Rm. 637, Little Building, UMass-Boston, to make an appointment for an interview. Office hours are on Mondays and Wednesdays from 12:45-1:45 p.m. Mr. Busi can be reached at home on weekends at 868-9031. A cume one of 3.0 is required. Brochures containing additional information may be obtained from the secretary of the French Department at Bartlet Hall.

Jeffersons Attempt "Big Time" With Soon-To-Be Released Record

By ROSE MILLER
Staff Reporter

What an anniversary! It all began a year ago at a UMass social function with the impromptu union of two talented singer-guitarists doing a hastily rehearsed version of the song "Time". Their reception at Crabtree House that night led to the formation of THE JEFFERSONS; further encouragement in those early months led to an attempt at the "big time" and to the making of a demonstration record.

THE JEFFERSONS are primarily a folk-ballad group, consisting of Alvin A. Thompkins, UMass '67 and Barry W. Wendell, a junior at the University. Their expressed goal , as Jefferson Al describes, is to "bridge the gap of hard-folk and popular ballads."

Foreseeing the need of extending their field of performing, Al and Barry started playing in the neighboring towns and college communities. Early last summer, they traveled to Boston to have some "dubs" made of the demonstration tape they had produced. The president of Boston's AAA Recording Studio, Joseph Saia, happened to hear the tape and asked them to allow him to bring the tape to an executive board meeting of Musicor Records in New York. The tape met with such enthusiasm that THE JEFFERSONS were signed to a five-year contract that includes an "exercise of option" clause allowing both parties to review the contract each year.

The master tape of their soon-to-be-released record has been reviewed by music experts from coast to coast, Al pointed out that Don Costa, who has been associated with Trini Lopez and Frank Sinatra, "offered us a contact, but we chose to stay with Musicor."

The song which is being launched as the "push" side is entitled "Bring Me Your Love While You May". The original idea for the song was invented by Barry, who describes the writing process as "thinking of a melody and creating a mood with words and chords to fit the melody. Each song is created with a slightly different concept, but the style is always pure JEFFERSON." The flip side "Changes", was written by Phil Ochs, also of the New England area. The embellishment of sound produced by the background of violins, guitars, flugelhorn, flutes, vibes and percussion adds to a "lyrical sound" which their producer calls THE JEFFERSONS unique quality.

As anniversary highlights, their talent will be displayed on the Brad Davis Show on Channel 3 next month, and the record will be distributed to radio stations in two or three weeks, Barry Wendell said.

For THE JEFFERSONS, "i t was a very good year."

The Jeffersons, Al and Barry, have performed at many UMass functions in the past year.

"Six Characters" Success at Amherst

By SUSAN SCHMERL
Fine Arts Staff

Luigi Pirandello's 'Six Characters in Search of an Author" presented by the Amherst Masquers this past weekend, is a novel approach to what the layman usually thinks of as the "typical" play format. The audience is quickly absorbed into the play without really being aware of its beginning. This effect was handled very well by the actors as was the entire play.

A play within a play, "Six Characters" brings under scrutiny the eternal nagging quest for the nature of reality and man's relationship to it. Also within this play is a conflict between an actor (man) versus a character whose life is already defined and calculated. Life for man is trasitory, however, and is not contained within such a fixed orbit. The past for him is vague and relatively meaningless to what may be done in his future. According to Pirandello's view then, this is the character's tragedy. He is not given man's escape in the flow of life and the knowledge of his eventual death. Rather he is trapped "like a fly beteen the screen and the window glass," futilely searching for an exit. And man, in order to effectively portray a character, can do little more than a poor imitation of physical gestures, unless he is able to feel these emotions and torments within himself.

Living Theatre Play Shocks Audience at Smith College

BY TIM NEY

There is good theater and bad theater. there is serious theater and absurd theater. The Living Theatre is a combination of the four.

Things have not gone well for the Living Theatre, even by an anarchist's standards. Four years ago, after performing "The Brig," a controversial play about brutality in military stockades, the Living Theatre was forced to leave the country for lack of back taxes. Back after a long absence, they were arrested in New Haven and cancelled in Boston, where their productions caused a near riot.

Performing "Paradise Now" at Smith College last Friday, Julian Beck and his repertory company came close to achieving the total theatrical anarchy they desired. Although the play began an hour late due to the late arrival of the performers from Bennington and the moving of the performance to another building due to the large audience, I still wonder if the audience thought it was worth waiting form

"Paradise Now" begins with members of the company walking through the audience repeating phrases, first in whispers, finally in shattering screams. The sentences were chosen to show "where our society is at," Beck said. They illustrate the restrictions, inhibitions, and frustrations of the individual - "I can't travel without a passport," "I don't know how to stop the wars." "You can't live if you don't have money," "I'm not allowed to smoke marijuana," And, "I'm not allowed to take off my clothes," (I was subjected to a sixth sentence by a uniformed non-actor - "You're not allowed to take photographs without written permission.")

Instead of ending this ritual by taking off their clothes, to the legal limit, and urging the audience to do the same as has been done elsewhere, Julian Beck and his wife answered questions from the audience. He stated that he hoped that his play had "flipped you out." The aim of "Paradise Now," he went on to say, was to get away from the typical mechanical theater and closer to the ultimate in theater where there is "no audience and no reality."

At one point in his talk, Beck asked the audience why there were police in the back of the auditorium. A bearded professor answered they were required for gatherings of more than fifty people. Someone else said they were there to enforce No Smoking regulations. I was tempted to say the y were there to keep people from taking photographs without written permission. When Beck directed his question to the embarrassed police, he was interrupted by a young student who asked something about "rational process" on the stage.

After the question and answer period, the group asked the audience to try going through the first sentences themselves to see what happens. Asked why, Beck replied, "Because it feels good." One Amherst student, aware of what had happened elsewhere, remarked, "I don't want to get busted." "Neither do we," said one company member, "it is the duty of the revolutionary to see just how far he can go without getting caught." Beck added "Paradise Now" was related to the right-part voyage to final anarchist revolution, from dream to action, (reader should note significance of Beatle's song Number Nine).

About half of the audience, who had probably come expecting to watch and be entertained, got out of their seats going up and down the aisles like the performers had done before them. The most dramatic moment was the plea of one long-haired boy about nine or ten, who shouted, "I don't know how to stop the wars." No one laughed or tried to answer him.

Ironically, "Paradise Now" came to a quick and quiet end. No one took off their clothes or risked arrest. The Smith girls who had shouted about regulations and rules left, not to march into the streets, but to be on time for six o'clock dinner. Seeing the end had come, the members of the Living Theatre left the auditorium and walked into their bus. Students ate dinner and dressed for their dates. Nothing had changed in Northampton.

ROTC: The Lower Learning

'Virtue Is Not Absorbed Through The Feet' -- Mayer

Compulsory military training on U.S. college campuses, which had been on the decline during the 1950's, has made a comeback in the 1960's because of the war in Vietnam, according to an expose of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps written by UMass' Milton Mayer and published in the December issue of THE PROGRESSIVE magazine.

"In 1962," Mayer writes, "compulsory ROTC programs (which forty per cent of the students always found one way or another of ducking) had a seventy per cent dropout after the required two years. Not now; four years of being fired at with blanks by college chums has a certain contemporary charm. Draft-age patriots would rather be red, white, or blue than dead.

"The once high hope of getting rid of Rot-cee has gone glimmering," Mayer writes. "As a better 'ole than Vietnam it is cosmeted into the campuses of 250 colleges and universities across the country. It has, of course, no more to do with the higher learning than it ever had. It has to do with marching up the hill, and, if you haven't had your head shot off at the top, down again."

A regular contributor to THE PROGRESSIVE whose writings on social, religious, and political developments frequently have stirred up controversy, Mayer is presently on the UMass English faculty. He has taught at the University of Chicago, Frankfurt University in Germany, and on the Comenius Theological Faculty of Prague. His most recent book, WHAT CAN A MAN DO?, a collection of his articles and essays, won praise from many reviewers.

The PROGRESSIVE, a monthly published at Madison, Wisconsin, since it was founded in 1909 by Senator Robert ("Fighting Bob") LaFollette, now circulates in all 50 states and 120 foreign countries. It has published Mayer's articles on a wide range of subjects since 1940.

Mayer writes in his article, "ROTC: The Lower Learning," that the program "does not produce good officers, because virtue is not absorbed through the soles of the feet. The only way the Army--any army--can get good men to be trained as officers is to dragoon them. And this it can't do on the campus.

"Beginning in 1923 (when the University of Wisconsin threw it out) compulsory ROTC faced from all of the better (and most of the worse) institutions at the rate of twelve units a year. It faded fighting, though, until, the attrition unabating, the Army finally 'approved of' voluntary programs in spite of the fact that the changeover means an instantaneous drop of never less than eighty per cent of the enrollment.

"Two years before the compulsory program was dropped by the University of Massachusetts in 1962, it was opposed in a student survey by seventy-five per cent of the males and by ninety per cent of the conscript cadets." Mayer reports. "In wartime 1942, eighty per cent of the draftees selected for Officer Candidate School were college graduates; less than six per cent of them were Rot-cee products."

Faculties "generally despise" the ROTC program, he claims, and "Where academic bodies have the opportunity (as they did at Boston University this spring), they strip it of its credits, reducing its positive student appeal to the money they get if they stick it out. Occasional professors of engineering, looking for scholarships for their fledglings, fancy the Army's magnanimous grants for advanced training, but the Engineering Council for Professional Development strenuously opposes Rot-cee credits toward an engineering degree."

From the Army's standpoint, the eighty-one million dollars spent yearly on college ROTC is "bargain-basement public relations," President Johnson "recently upped that figure by at least one hundred million by extending the program to 12,000 high schools."

Mayer describes the content of both "academic" and military courses given under the college ROTC program. He quotes this description--taken from an Army manual used as an ROTC text--of an antiguerrilla unit: "a hunter-killer outfit capable of beating the guerrillas at their own game... The problem of creating the ideal soldier for the hunter-killer units is the most difficult part.." This "ideal soldier" employs both friendly persuasion and Armed Propaganda. The latter, the textbook says, "is the tactic of intimidating, kidnapping, or assassinating carefully selected members of the opposition in a manner that will reap the maximum possible psychological benefit."

Mayer confesses that "I have not been able to find out exactly how the five-hour course in counter-insurgency teaches the American college boy to intimidate, kidnap, or assassinate carefully selected members of the opposition. The syllabus of the Special Forces course, though it includes Escape and Evasion, jungle and Arctic Survival, and St. Patrick's Day Parade, does not list kidnapping or assassination as such."

Summing up the case against ROTC, Mayer writes that ROTC "may be able to liberate nations. It cannot liberate men, because men are liberated by reason, and it is not the soldier's (including the five -star soldier) to reason why. It cannot liberate men because reasonable men are free to choose for themselves."

Mt. Holyoke Prexy Resigns

Students Going "Over His Head" Gettell May Have Resented

South Hadley, Mass. (CPS) - Mount Holyoke College president Richard Glenn Gettell abruptly announced his resignation here recently, amid a flurry of rumors that a decision by the college's Board of Trustees to consider alcohol and parietals on campus was 'the last straw."

The Trustees recently formed a committee of two trustees, two administrators, two faculty members, and six students to develop proposals for alcohol on campus and parietals (male visitors in dormitories). The Trustees also said they would meet in mid-December to consider the proposals. Many students speculate that liberalized policies on alcohol (now forbidden on campus) and parietals (men are now allowed only in the public rooms) will go into effect second semester.

President Gettell, who has been at Mount Holyoke since 1957, had originally announced his intention to retire "not later than June 1969."

However, his announcement came as a complete surprise to this private women's college, although he has since explained that he had long ago told the Trustees privately that this meeting would be his last. Gettell has also been in poor health recently.

Pressure for liberalization of the school's antiquated social rules began last September with the announcement of a year-long drive by the Student Government Association to restructure the college, both in the social and academic spheres. The student position paper, "The Case for Participation," prepared in October by the SGA Executive Board, included proposals for greatly liberalized social rules, as well as the right of students to determine their own social policies.

The "Case" was mailed to the Trustees last month by the Executive Board. Apparently in response to the "Case" the Trustees called a formal meeting with the Executive Board, the first such meeting in history.

Gettell has been strongly opposed to parietals. He claims they are "immoral," that young ladies should not entertain young men in their bedrooms. He has also said publicly that "the College will not provide 1700 necking nooks."

Students have grown particularly restless this year, as near by Smith College does have weekend parietals, and this year instituted liquor on campus at meals, mixers and parties.

Student Government sources say Gettell resented having the students go "over his head" by mailing the "Case" directly to the Trustees. He is also reportedly upset that the Trustees formed the study committee which so obviously went against his wishes.

Blood Drive Results

The Red Cross Student Blood Drive conducted on the UMass campus last week brought 592 pints of whole blood into the Red Cross's Blood Bank. Mrs. J. T. Clayton, co-chairman of the Student Blood Drive, said that the workers from the University Women and the sponsoring student organizations were grateful for the willing response from all parts of the campus community.

"Boy, If Only He Had Put Up That Kind Of Resistance In Vietnam"

INSIDE REPORT:

O'Brien To Stay?

BY ROWLAND EVANS AND ROBERT NOVAK

WASHINGTON--Chances are better than even that Lawrence F. O'Brien will finally agree to stay on as Democratic National Chairman, ending any chance of a bruising battle for control of the defeated Democratic party machinery.

Vice President Hubert Humphrey probably could dictate selection of a new chairman in any event, but internal pressures on him are growing from different factions, each with a claim on Humphrey's loyalty.

If O'Brien agreed to stay, that would end the matter. Just back from a vacation trip to Ireland, O'Brien had all but decided to get out of politics and into a lucrative private job.

Among Humphrey men who want the party chairmanship are William Connell, his long-time administrative assistant; Sen. Fred Harris of Oklahoma, his preconvention co-chairman; and Robert Short, chief campaign fund raiser. Another claimant is Missouri State Chairman Delton Houtchens, promised the post by Humphrey in return for the support of Missouri's convention delegation.

But Houtchens, although contributing some $10,000 of his own money to Humphrey's campaign, infuriated the Humphrey camp by taking a soft line on George Wallace and failing to work hard for Humphrey.

Other Democrats with some support include former Gov. Terry Sanford of North Carolina, who headed Humphrey's citizens' committee, and Ohio's defeated senatorial nominee, John J. Gilligan, who was privately sounded out last week by California National Committeeman Steve Rinehardt.

Although a few party pros were critical of O'Brien's performance early in the campaign, it is inconceivable, if Humphrey can persuade him to stay on, that there would be any resistance.

Nixon Housecleaning

A major patronage housecleaning of perhaps 2,000 top-grade Federal jobs, exempted from the usual civil service safeguards, is high on President-elect Nixon's priority list of ways to rebuild the Republican party. Oddly enough, some Democratic professionals are not unhappy about Mr. Nixon's plan. These party men are still sulking over the fact that neither President Kennedy nor President Johnson took full advantage of civil service loopholes. They want Mr. Nixon to reestablish an old principle--to the party belong the spoils.

But it won't happen overnight. A sudden housecleaning of sub-Cabinet officials could bring the government almost to a standstill.

This caveat won't change the underlying policy now being drafted by Nixon aides who are scouring the country for Nixon-style Republicans to feed into the Federal bureaucracy, particularly in jobs outside Washington. An executive order expanding the list of exempted Schedule C jobs (now about 1,200) and the top-level non-career job list (now about 500) is a strong possibility to open up more field jobs, particularly regional and branch chiefs.

A footnote: The incestuous relationship between many congressional staffmen and middle-level bureaucrats who have done lucrative favors for them and their Congressmen over the years will be a real hazard for the house-cleaning now in prospect.

FINCH'S JOB

Blocked from running for the Seante in 1970, California Lt. Gov. Robert Finch will take a Nixon Cabinet post, most probably the Department of Housing and Urban Development which will get some new functions in the anti-poverty field.

Finch was told last week by Sen. George Murphy that Murphy's health is no bar to a second term and that he will run. A primary race against Murphy is out of the question.

As for Governor, Finch isn't interested. Gov. Ronald Reagan is expected to run for reelection anyway.

The problem is that Finch's resignation as Lieutenant Governor will create a giant political problem for the Republican party in California. State law gives Reagan power to name a successor, but to avoid angering either the right wing, which made him Governor in 1966,or the party liberals whose support he will need in 1970, Reagan will have to walk on eggs.

If the obvious candidate, Assembly Minority Leader Robert Monagan, left the Assembly(which the Republicans captured by the razor-edge of 40 to 39) his seat would predictably be filled by a Democrat, costing the Republicans their slender majority.

One long-shot possibility: Gordon Luce, head of the State Transportation Agency and a San Diego conservative.

SPEAK OUT

Dining Commons Battle

This is FLASH reporting to you the most recent battle in the never ending war of the 1:25 Dining Commons battle. Even as I write this I can feel the hot breath of six excited women, on the back of neck, and I know if I try to light up my after dinner cigarette they will attack, with smelly rags and ammonia. Even in the face of this peril I shall dare to bring you an account of the tragic events which have occurred thus far. For this report let's turn to my colleague Robert Mush.

Er, thank you Flash. I have just finished my interview with Mr. Johnny Anemia, It was cut short however, when Mr. Anemia turned a light shade of pale and began running for the exit door. The following is a transcript of the interview;

R.M. - I say Mr. Anemia, you don't look too well. Is there something wrong?

J.A. - Well, B.M., if all you had to eat for the past three weeks for lunch was jello, you wouldn't look too well either.

R.M. - You mean to tell me that all you've had to eat for the past three weeks for lunch has been jello?

J.A. - Well, thats not exactly true. I managed to find a potato chip left over on the counter the other day.

R.M. - I see, well that's much better. For a moment there, I thought you were going to accuse our beloved dining commons of not having enough selection for our late lunchers.

J.A. - Perish the thought! Why just the other day I overheard someone raving about how good his one cm.2 piece of mystery meat was. He came at 12:10 p.m.

R.M.- Is that right! Well Anemia, lets get to the question that's on the tip of everyones tongue, namely, what happens when you are a late luncher?

J.A. - Well, R.M., on a typical day you leave your 12:20 class at 1:10 and sprint across campus to make it there before the fair maiden with the gold key locks you out. If the wind is blowing the right way, i.e., 150 mph in the general direction of the commons, you can sometimes make it by 1:29. You tiptoe up the ramp hoping against hope that the meal is a particularly, shall we say, exotic one, so that you don't have to battle the throngs of people who are desperately trying to grab a morsel after tickling their throat with the first helping.

Oh yes, I can still remember the tears that well in the eyes of grown men when, after standing in the seconds line from 1:25 to 1:31, they are denied sustinence even though it sits there tantalizing their souls. It is certainly a terrible sight to see these men kneeling on the track with their hands and noses pressed against the hot glass window, dreaming of what it would be like to be able to eat till your hearts desire. After viewing this you seem to lose all interest in life yet the pain in the pit of your stomach causes you to become ruthless.

You drive on relentlessly, cutting off those weaker (those for whom the wind was blowing the wrong way the day before) and if you are very fortunate you may be able to snatch up a bowl of jello before that awe-inspiring light goes out. Breathlessly you carry the tender jello to your seat along with a glass of milk which took you 8 minutes to fill because the cow was running dry. The atmosphere is electric with the sweet music of the 1930's as you finish the cherished delight.

It is usually about this time when the white army begins its offensive. They march from behind the counters with an aura of hate surrounding them. Your stomach sinks as you watch them carry out their battle plan. One group splits to the left flank, another splits to the right flank, and the third group attacks head on. Gradually their pincer attack closes in on you and they begin to attack using chemical warfare. The piercing smell of ammonia fills the air. They stare at you eagerly hoping that they may get back some of the food for supper but you battle the overpowering naseau that follows the gas. Closer and closer they advance armed with smelly rags and tin cans. At this point fear overcomes even the best of us and we must flee for our digestive tract's sake. I, er, I.....

R.M. - Well thank you Mr. Anemia. And so we conclude another episode in the continuing tragedy of the 1:25 late lunchers....

Needed: A Peace Agency

To the Editor:

Most of the news you read is bad news. This letter if good news about an event that has gotten little press coverage.

On September 10, the DEPARTMENT OF PEACE ACT was introduced in the House by Rep. Seymour Halpern, (R.NY) and 21 other House members of both parties (HR19650);

On September 11, the DEPARTMENT OF PEACE ACT was introduced in the Senate by Senators Vance Hartke, Mark Hatfield, and Ralph Yarborough (S 4019).

Concern for some kind of peace agency in government is almost as old as our country. In 1799, Dr. Benjamin Rush, a signer of the Declaration of Independence, wrote "A Plan of a Peace Office for the United States"; since then the idea has been put before Congress by such men as Alexander Wiley, Everett Dirksen(as a House member), Jennings Randolph, Karl Mundt, Hubert Humphrey, and others. Why did these proposals fail?

(1) The need for such an office was never as urgent as it is now.

(2) Some peace people -- including many Congressional doves -- have insisted that peace should be the concern and commitment of the whole government; true, but a general commitment to justice, or national defense, or good health, has not obviated the necessity for executive offices to administer these commitments. Peace is everyone's concern but, so far, nobody's job.

(3) Without imputing any sinister motive to existing departments, it's clear that no administrator ever wants to let go of any function, authority, or budget; opposition to a Peace Department rests on the determination of strongly entrenched interests to keep the decision-making process in their hands. But twenty years ago, the Congress overcame equally stubborn opposition and reorganized separate military establishments into the Department of Defense. What was done then for war must be done now for peace, and the new office must be both independent of, and equal in rank to, any other cabinet office. Title I of the Department of Peace Act transfers from State such programs as the Peace Corps, the Agency of International Development, the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency; from Commerce, administration of the General Agreement on Trade and Tariffs; from Agriculture, the International Agriculture Service. Another title will establish a Peace institute to supply professional peace leadership as, for generations, we have trained military leaders in the service academies; another title incorporates the proposal of Senator Javits and others for a Peace by Investment corporation. The Act also establishes a joint Congressional committee on peace and S 4019 includes a title on the Export-Import bank. The legislation has been referred to the House and Senate Committees on Government Operations.

Start now to enlist friends across the country in support of a Department of Peace; express YOUR support to the sponsors of these bills, and write your own Congressmen urging them to join as sponsors when the bills are reintroduced in the 91st Congress. A well-organized effort on the part of peace people, church groups, and academic experts on violence and aggression in human society, has brought the idea this far; but only with your help will the idea of a Department of Peace become an actuality, a functioning arm of government, an office to represent and enlarge the peace constituency of this country.

United Behind Nixon

To the editor:

I want to admonish the staff of the DAILY COLLEGIAN for its consistant choice of articles, cartoons and editorials lambasting the president - elect and vice president-elect. These jabs were funny during the campagin when most of us were strongly behind Humprey or, at least, strongly AGAINST Nixon, but enough is enough.

After an election in which the popular vote was so close and in which a third party candidate drew so many votes, showing general dissatisfaction with BOTH major party candidates, everything possible must be done to reunite this country under a new administration. An administration which may not quite fit your ideals is certainly better than anarchy. If the country is to survive the next four years, which indeed look bleak, we must all stand behind what government we have.

Despite the cries of "playing politics!" at the Republican Convention, Nixon had obviously shown a capability to handle the office or they would have never nominated him. Agnew, too, has shown his competence as Maryland's governor, though many who have heard him put his foot in his mouth may wish he had stayed governor. But the people of United States have shown enough confidence in these two men to elect them to the highest offices in the land.

Yes, dissent is good, but only if it is constructive, only if it puts something better in place of the old. Let's face it, nothing short of assassination is going to remove Nixon from office within the next four years, and, considering the alternative, no one wants THAT. The president-elect is going to have a hard term ahead of him. Instead of punching him below the belt with meaningless insults, we should unite behind him. If we must criticize, let us criticize his policies, not the fact that he looks as if he needs a shave. And we should save our witty insults for 1972 when they might do some good in replacing him with someone better.

The Campus Chest

To the editor:

The annual Campus Chest Drive for nineteen sixty eight will be held in conjunction with this year's Sophomore Week activities. As in the past, members of the sophomore class have undertaken the responsibility of spearheading this drive. The item that most people do not realize is what Campus Chest is and who it affects.

Campus Chest is the only opportunity during the school year in which the members of the university community can demonstrate their spirit of good will towards charity. To keep within the idea of "the spirit of giving" this year's drive has been changed from the perennial time, the month of March, to the month of December. In doing this we hope to connect the spirit of giving with the idea of Christmas.

It is true that Campus Chest is for the most part organized by the sophomre class, but it can not be emphasized enough that Campus Chest is an ALL CAMPUS EFFORT. Unless each and every member of our community takes an active part in our campaign, either by contributing a little from his pocket or by helping with the various money raising projects planned for the week (December 1 - 8), our primary goal of $3,000 will not be reached. Our objectives, as you can see, is rather optimistic. However, we feel that with your assistance we can not fail!

If you or any member of the organizations that you are connected with are willing to help reach our goal, please contact Dick Palomba through the R.S.O. office in the Student Union. Your assistance will be greatly appreciated.

Thank you!

Ordeal By Fire-Jan.69

It's clear that almost everyone is against the burning of dogs--a few people are even against the burning of humans. The original idea of shocking these people may have been sound, but like all things that can get a response here at UMass, this method of fire shock could be carried too far:

Jan. 1, 1969: S. D. S. announces that it will burn a pile of wood.

Jan. 2: The American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Firewood announces that it will prosecute any S. D. S. member who tries to light a bon fire.

Jan. 3: R.O.T.C. recruits announce that they will burn an S.D.S. member.

Jan. 5: Commons workers plot to burn a meal in protest over criticism of their food preparation.

Jan. 8: Commons workers carry out their plan, but the protest goes unnoticed by students eating in the Commons.

Jan. 9: Commons workers are arrested for cruelty to animals.

Jan. 10: Commons workers are released after discovery that a regular Commons meal was mistaken for a burnt dog.

Jan. 11: Three students are arrested in the Commons for cruelty to animals, while feeding dogs from their plates.

Jan 13: In protest over required courses, a group of students burn trash--their English 111 books.

Jan 15: Southwest tower residents protest, and burn an elevator.

Jan 16: Ten thousand UMass students protest conditions on campus walkways, and burn several tons of mud.

Jan 21: The Commons gets into trouble again, this time for a menu announcement--hot dogs.

Jan 23: Protests by fire spread outside the campus, as New England residents burn candles in protest over rising electric rates.

Jan. 25: Television advertises a new child's toy--matches. "Look, kids! Be the first on your block to own this swell new toy! Look at the fun you can have! Burn your house! Burn your friend's house!

Jan. 27: Congress cracks down on burning protests, as the country becomes endangered by air pollution.

Jan. 30: Smokey the Bear burns a person to protest the burning of animals--because this may damage the poor trees.

More About Nixon

To the editor:

Ever since the night of the election I have been periodically seized with fits of nausea, severe cramps, and nose bleeding. What's worse, I hallucinate Nixons in my sleep, one hundred of them, all jumping over a fence. For those of you who are suffering from the same ailments and the same president, you'll be glad to know there IS a cure. Read the following words, and see if it doesn't restore your faith in American Democracy. . .thousands are realizing every day that Nixon IS the best man for the presidency.

" As figure head rather than working head of our government (the president) bestows medals on flustered pilots, lights the nation's Christmas tree, buys the first poppy from the Veterans of Foreign Wars, gives the first crisp banknote to the Red Cross, throws out the first ball for the Senators (the harmless ones out at Griffith Stadium), rolls the first egg for the Easter Bunny, and in the course of any month greets a fantastic procession of firemen, athletes, veterans, Boy Scouts, Campfire Girls, boosters, hog callers, exchange students, and heroic school children...Sunday is not Sunday if the President and his lady skip church; a public-works project is not public until the President presses a silver key in Washington and explodes a charge of dynamite in Fort Peck or Hanford or the Tennessee Valley."

Should We Try Again

To the editor:

A great emphasis has been put on the obvious apathy of the students of the University. But enthusiasm was definitely shown by the people throwing cards out of the card section Saturday at the B.C. game. There are not many who, looking at the situation today, could give valid reasons for the action of these people; but the fact is that is did occur.

A number of people put time, and energy, and the University's money into planning Saturday's card section. A card section could promote support for the team as well as a kind of spirit for the school as a whole.

No respect or pride of our Alma Mater was shown in section 17. Primarily though, was the disregard of self respect and the rights of others. The only people in the section who appeared to be concerned were the ones who were hit in heads, necks, and faces with cardboard. Injuries ranged from the inconvenience of being hit to two girls being taken to the infirmary. From supposedly educated people this is worse than apathy.

It is important to consider what impression was given to the state legislators who were attending the game as well as to B.C. Beyond that, we wonder what Saturday's fiasco indicates about the attitude of the student body. Should we bother to try again?

Stated Differently

To the editor:

After reading the various opinions of those persons who commented on the SDS threat to burn a dog, in Monday's Campus Comment, I find that I have been particularly struck by one response which surely demonstrates exactly the point SDS was trying to make in its threat. That response was from Karl T. Dussik.

Mr. Dussik and anyone who thoroughly agreed with his comment surely are the people whose attitudes call for such lessons by SDS. I have come to this conclusion after reading one especially naive line in the letter. That line questioned "Just because it is a dog and not a human, does this preclude its right to live?" If Mr. Dussik examines the issue, he will see that the question better stated would be "Just because one is a human and not a dog, does that preclude his right to live?" Maybe, Mr. Dissik, we should let SDS kill the dog, and try to save a human.

Singers Sam & Dave Will Appear To Highlight End of SENDOFF '68

Sam and Dave, who will appear for SENDOFF '68.

Sam & Dave have been performing together as a team since 1961. In the seven years they have been together, they have created a remarkable reputation as the most exciting twosome on the soul music scene. Billed as the "Double Dynamite" duo, they have thrilled fans throughout the world with their fast and furious in-person act, and they have secured their hold on their followers with hit after hit recording on the Memphis-based Stax label.

Sam Moore and Dave Foster both made it the hard way, working since they were youngsters as professiona l entertainers. Sam Moore hails from Miami, Dave from Ocilla, Georgia.

Stax Records issued Sam & Dave's first record back in 1965, a driving item called "It Was So Nice While it Lasted". That first record was an R&B hit, and their subsequent hits brought them to the attention of pop fans as well.

Their first gold record was earned in the fall of 1967 with the sensational hit "Soul Man". This record leaped to the top of the trade paper charts in a few short weeks, and sold over one million copies. Their follow-up album, "Soul Man", quickly burst into the best-selling classification after it was issued in October of 1967.

Sam & Dave offer a simple explanation for their great act: "We simply try to do a little more than required. We want everybody to remember SAM & DAVE".

Sam and Dave will be appearing as a part of SENDOFF '68 on Saturday, December 7 at 8:00 in Curry Hicks Cage. Tickets will be on sale at the Student Union ticket office for $2.50. For SOPHOMORES Nov. 25 and 26, and for all the campus Nov. 27 and Dec. 2-5.

Vacationing Students to Examine Institutional Racism of Schools

WASHINGTON (CPS) - More than 200 students from colleges and universities around the country will give up their Thanksgiving weekends to meet and study what they call "institutional racism"--the inherently racist nature of white institutions.

The place is the University of Notre Dame in Indiana, where the National Student Association is sponsoring a conference it hopes will shed some light on institutional racism and launch more widespread study of the problem.

Five major areas of university life and organization are suggested for examination.

--Curriculum - Are courses in black history and culture, ghetto psychology and African language offered? Are there courses dealing with white racism and prejudices? Do law school courses include some on the legal problems of discrimination, exploitation and the welfare systems? Do schools of education attempt to deal with issues like decentralization and community control of schools?

--University policies off campus - Does the university profit from exploitative landholding policies? Are hiring practices and wages discriminatory? Does the school support the "racist" draft system? Does it offer draft counseling on campus?

--Discrimination - In hiring of professors and their promotion, in admissions and recruitment, in scholarships, in athletics, in fraternities and sororities, in housing policies, medical facilities, work-study hiring, placement, in dealing with non-academic personnel?

--University power structure - This entails investigating the business interests of trustees and administrators and whether they engage in racist or anti-union practices, investigating the activities of banks at which university money is kept, and examining the attitudes of churches with which schools are affiliated.

- Is the cultural bias of the campus so white that black students must necessarily feel alienated? Can black students feel comfortable in their own life style?

The last question is one that cannot be documented with statistics, but the one NSA considers most important. The cultural bias of the campus and other such agencies, "is the atmospheric, life-giving gas of the white problem."

And the problem in NSA's view, IS a white one, a problem to be studied and solved by whites. While black insights will be helpful, the conference considers the racism question one that will have to be confined to whites "because it is a white problem."

"Working against racism," NSA says, "has to do not only with making it possible for the black man to control his community and his life; it also means asking ourselves what it means to be a white person in a white supremacist society."

SAIGON (CPS) - If and when a ceasefire is reached in the Vietnamese war, how will the political problems of South Vietnam be solved? Which of the major groups and parties will be best equipped to govern?

1. THE NATIONALISTS

The recent alliances of nationalist parties in South Vietnam are proof that nationalists recognize the dangers in the coming political struggle after a ceasefire is readied.

Many observers and politicians are pessimistic about this struggle, because until recently the nationalist parties had not prepared a strong unified platform. Some say there are more than 60 parties in South Vietnam, but most of these are only small political groups without any real organization or firm ideology.

It is true there are parties which have existed for a long time - the Kuomintang party, the Dai Viet party, etc. But they have divided into many branches, and these small branches are slowly dying because they lack substantial financial support. They also lack the power to call meetings, for the present government has the right to prohibit meetings of more than six people.

The nationalist parties are now trying to convince the press of their power. Their primary purpose is to demonstrate their ability to maintain a government. They see the need to unify in order to avoid repeating the costly experience of 1946, when nationalists fought communists.

The nationalists will be against both the present government and organizations which issue from the former elements of the NLF. Because they don't have a strong organization or, as yet, considerable power, they will use two means to reach their goals: propaganda and militant demonstrations.

In order to get the support of the people, the nationalist parties will play upon the suffering of the people in order to attack the present government, thereby trying to prove to the people that the government is corrupt and dictatorial. And to get the support of the Free World, they will claim they are strongly anti-communist.

This claim perhaps will injure the possibility of the co-existence of many political parties and the possible unification of all Vietnam.

A well-known Catholic politician has said: "The lesson over many centuries is always the same. We must know how to unify; if the nationalist parties fail in this political struggle, it will be because they fight internally, and they will not be able to cover up their faults without appearing foolish."

Some observers who are more pessimistic concerning a nationalist alliance foretell that for the nationalists to hope to struggle against the communists will be like throwing an egg against a stone wall.

In the troubled period after the ceasefire, the fanatic parties will not succeed in maintaining real power. But whatever party will develop a realistic way to reform society, will have to have a plan for a complete revolution reflecting the Vietnamese culture and character - a revolution that will have the confidence of the people.

2. THE COMMUNISTS

After the ceasefire, whatever political solution is reached, former communists who return from the NLF will have a part in it. President Thieu refuses to acknowledge the NLF, and calls them 'rebels'. However, to absorb this group into society, perhaps the government will change the name of the Open Arms Ministry to something like the Popular Unification Ministry, in order to allow NLF members to return as citizens. To do this would save face, as well as be an attempt to maintain control over the returnees.

If this ministry does legalize cetenship of NLF members, these new citizens will begin immediately to move into the political system. The communists will endeavor to profit as much as possible within the limits of the law to carry out their true purpose: to control the government.

The communists will first work towards destroying nationalist party power, and then toward destroying the government structure as it now stands. They will use two familiar tools: the people and international opinion.

A famous political leader said recently: "The immediate effects of a ceasefire will be infiltrations of the communists into political life. For the elections they will choose as candidates certain radicals as straw men, whom they will back, by force or suggestion, to carry out their goals."

The Communists will profit from any freedom allowed the press, and from their own propaganda "speak straightly, speak the truth," to attack the corruption of the various governments preceding the ceasefire -- the truth of which no one can deny. Their second objective is to attack the nationalist parties' platform and play upon the divisions between politicians.

"I think the communists probably will win the elections because, for example, at a precinct election, if there are two communist candidates, one will resign to throw all his votes to the other. In the same election, if there are ten nationalist candidates, all ten will campaign so that their votes will split up and the nationalists will lose the battle," said one political thinker.

The communists will use all their cadres of former NLF soldiers, to realize a well-defined social program, including, to name only two aspects, land reform and massive public education. They will continue to apply their "Three Together Policy" - that is, "live together, eat together, work together."

This policy, which had been the basic philosophy behind all VC activity for many years, has been so completely successful that it would be impossible now for the Americans or for the present government to gather a single cadre in the countryside which would be loyal to them, no matter where or how far they searched.

3. THE RELIGIOUS GROUPS

Throughout Vietnam's history religions have played an important position in her political life. The revolution of November 1, 1963, for example was strengthened by Buddhist participation. Currently the Catholic "Greater Unification Force" and the An Quang Buddhist group are preparing to plea for peace abroad.

After the ceasefire it is certain that religious groups will continue their struggle for popular interests. But how successful will they be?

One veteran politician stated: "I don't believe religious groups can do much outside of social work. I have little hope they could do much against the communists."

Another politician, however, well-known in Catholic circles since 1953, is more optimistic: "We, the Force of Citizens of A-1 Faiths, are prepared to notify our cadres whom to vote for at every level of government. With the united forces of the Catholics, the Buddhists, and the Hoa Hoa and the Cao Dai, we are confident we can win any election."

4. CONCLUSION

After the ceasefire, ther e will be a political war, amid dire economic and social problems, no less fierce than the military combat so recently ended. Terrorism, deaths, use of people as the medium for a war of ideologies, will continue. Political groups will take regrettably rigid stands.

Possibly, however, the inertia of the Vietnamese people will act as a brake to slow down the rumbling machinations of a frantic political world. For more than ten years South Vietnam's nationalist elements have been polarized, divided and duped. Perhaps in the coming political struggle they will unite under a strong ideology.

It is to be hoped that the American government will carefully re-examine its policies in South Vietnam. The Vietnamese people hope to see them, in the near future, release their tremendous grip on the political life of this country which they call its 'ally', so that this demi-country can choose for itself the road to development after many long years of war.

If the war was caused by a deadlock of politics, politics must not now be an obstacle to independence for this people. It is hoped that the American government will not be so obsessed with the fear of communism that they will make more uncorrectable mistakes in the new war: the political war.

The hope for the future of South Vietnam lies in the character of the Vietnamese people. Their patience with the nationalist regime in the trying days ahead will be critical. It can only be hoped that the communist and capitalist leaderships will not sacrifice between them the Vietnamese people in their struggle for power.

Yippie Hoffman Found Guilty of Desecrating American Flag

BY TOM MILLER

WASHINGTON (CPS) - Yippie mythmaker Abbie Hoffman was found guilty this week in the Criminal Division of the D.C. Court of General Sessions on a charge of "desecrating the American flag."

The charge stems from an arrest in early October while Hoffman was on his way to testify at a session of the House Committee on Un-American Activities (HUAC). He was wearing a commercially bought shirt with red and white stripes and a field of white stars on a blue background.

The charge was the first ever brought under a new law signed last July, providing for penalties of up to $1,000 fine and up to one year in prison, or both, for "desecrating the flag of the United States."

Judge Andrew J. Howard, Jr. sentenced Hoffman to 30 days in jail or a $100 fine but stayed the sentence pending appeal.

After hearing the verdict, Hoffman told the court, "This means every drum majorette and July 4 Uncle Sam figure is a criminal." He also said he had seen Phyllis Diller on television wearing a red, white and blue mini-skirt.

Judge Howard said if Miss Diller were brought to court he's find her guilty, too.

The pertinent part of the U.S. statute reads "Whoever knowingly casts contempt upon the flag of the United States by publicly mutilating, defacing, defiling, burning or trampling upon it shall be fined not more than $1000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both."

The prosecution's material evidence consisted of three photographs and half of the shirt in question. The shirt had two political buttons on it; "Vote pig--Yippie in 68!," and "Wallace for President--Stand up for America."

At the outset of the trial, attorney Lefcourt moved to dismiss the case because the statute does not mention wearing the flag specifically. After the prosecution rebutted by quoting from the closing lines of a Broadway show ("Without our traditions and symbols we'd be like a fiddler on the roof"), General Sessions Judge Andrew Howard, Jr., denied the motion.

Hoffman then took the stand and replied to questions about his activities over the past five years and why he wore the shirt. He said he worked for the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee in the mid-sixties on voter registration and freedom schools in the deep south. Following this he moved to New York "where I became what I guess you'd call a hippie. I started to do revolutionary organizing among young whites. Since then I've helped plan and participated in peace demonstrations all over the country." He went on the say he's been arrested between 25 and 30 times, but only convicted once.

Hoffman said he wore that particular shirt that day because he didn't consider HUAC in the American tradition, nor did he consider that the House of Representatives was presently in the American tradition. He went on to say that by wearing the shirt he was showing that he was in the spirit of the founding fathers as he saw it.

Hoffman's final comment to the court was, "I regret that I have but one shirt to give for my country."

Marketing at IBM

"Working with company presidents is part of the job."

"I'm pretty much the IBM Corporation in the eyes of my customers," says Andy Moran. "That kind of responsibility's not bad for an engineer just two years out of school."

Andy earned his B.S.E.E. in 1966. Today, he's a Marketing Representative with IBM, involved in the planning, selling and installation of data processing systems.

Plenty of business experience

"Engineering was my first love," Andy says, "but I still wanted good business experience." So far, he's worked with customers involved in many different computer applications, from engineering to business. His contacts go from data processing managers all the way up to the president of his largest account.

"At first I was a little nervous about working at that level," says Andy. "But then you realize you're trained to know what he's trying to learn. That gives you confidence. You're helping him solve his problem."

With his working partner, the data processing Systems Engineer, Andy has helped many customers solve their information handling problems. "I get a broad overview of business because I run into every kind of prob'em going. Sometimes I know the solutions from experience. Other times I need help from my manager.

"That's one of the best things. My manager is more of a backup than a boss. He's there when I need him. Usually, I pretty much call my own shots."

Andy's experience isn't unusual at IBM. There are many Marketing and Sales Representatives who could tell you of similar experiences. And they have many kinds of academic backgrounds: business, engineering, liberal arts, science.

They not only sell data processing equipment as Andy does, but also IBM office products and information records systems. Many of the more technically inclined are data processing Systems Engineers.

Wonderful Wope Rounds Out UMass Coeds

By Marsha Gallo

This article is dedicated to all you flabby young ladies who revel two or three times a week in physical pleasures - that is, the pleasures of WOPE. Opportunity for exercise, that boon to the sagging figure of womanhood, is offered to you in varied and interesting forms in order that you might trim up those lazy muscles and tighten up those sagging contours.

For two full years you can indulge in basketball, tennis, field hockey, all kinds of strenuous activities, designed to give you the figure of your dreams. Well, that is, you can indulge in them provided you pass the proficiency swim test, which you very well may not do since the time and energy spent in treading water along (while the examiner is trying to figure out how to use the stopwatch) is enough to kill Don Hollander, in which case you may wind up taking swimming for the rest of your life. What, you say you smoke and you can't breathe after the fifteenth lap? Give it up, then, girl. Smoking is evil.

There is nothing more invigorating than jumping out of bed at 6:45 for your Tues-Thurs-Sat. 8 o'clock WOPE, hiking from S.W. in your boots (oh, someone snagged your boots from coat room the last time you went?), hiking in your patent leathers through mud and slush and construction through driving rain and snow, to WOPE, wriggling painfully out of wet nylons, slithering into that tailor-made tank suit and sliding into that comfortable 33 degree F. swimming pool.

How clean and refreshed you feel after your thirty-nine laps even though you can barely walk after flutter kicking for fifty minutes. Your shoulder is permanently bent from trying to keep your bathing suit on during the sidestroke, how fresh your skin feels, all in its bland little folds, look like striped toothpaste. But water is your natural element--remember that as you slosh your way to SBA not having had time to dry your hair.

If, however, you manage to pass the swimming test, the field is open and you have a number of delightful alternatives. You may wish to elect tennis because you need to strengthen those strawlike arms.

Squaw Talk

Another equally beneficial course is field hockey. Not only do you shape up those elephant legs and ankles but you experience a remarkable lesson in the art of self preservation. While you, in your sincere perserverance, are dutifully galloping the length of the field, conscientiously keeping your eye on the ball, inevitably some less enlightened creature twice your size is committing sticks all over the place, swinging left and right. Heedlessly in her innocent zeal.

Somehow or other her wayward stick lands with unmitigated force between your shoulder blades causing you to gasp for air and flail desperately (as you head for the dirt) for your glasses released by the blow from the province of your nose. But as you crawl in your blindness you hear a sickening crack and you know that your glasses have been mistaken for the ball, and you hear a cheer as they go sailing past the goalie. Don't lose heart--it's just another of life's tricky little twists--think of all the water weight you're losing with those tears of pain and frustration dripping down your muddy cheeks, and can't you just feel the energy of your shattering nerves just peeling away that excess poundage?

Now, if you prefer a milder form of exercise, there is ways ski conditioning. To m you lithe and graceful on the lopes you follow a relaxing e rcise program with reasonabl andards. Well, actually it's th Royal Canadian Air Force physi fitness program. But jus hink, you are given the chance t rove that women are not the aker sex. You may kill yours , but at least it will be in def se of a principle.

There are innumerable ot enjoyable courses offered-tak enc- ing for instance. You get bbed in the most remarkable places. Or take basketball. So what if you're 4'11" and the big girls step on you. YOU know YOU'RE not playing dirty and it's not whether you win or lose, right? So wear your black and blues proudly. No one may ever see you after they put you in traction but YOU'LL know.

If you're interested in the more socially oriented aspects of WOPE there's always CO-ED bowling at Boyden. So maybe you did have to stand in line for six hours to sign up for it, but isn't it worth it? Okay, so you can't lift any more than ten pounds and the lightest ball is eleven pounds. Details! So your instructor is the grad student you stood up twice last year, you're both adults, right? He just happens to have mistakenly marked you irreparably overcut for the semester. Well, nobody's perfect.

And by the end of two fleeting years when you bid farewell forever to the hallowed halls of the building that looks like the Queen Mary complete with portholes, you'll be trim and fit and rid of that "chicken fat." And just think, you'll be qualified to graduate. Physical fitness, that's the trend. So you've developed a trick knee, you're petrified of the water -- details. . . . .

Students Guide to Dining Out

Jack August's

Are you an ichthyophagist?

If so, you'll certainly enjoy dining at Jack August's, "The House of Sea foods", at the corner of Bridge and Hawley Streets, Northampton.

Jack August's consists of a fish market, takeout department, and restaurant - all operated in one large room. There is no partition between the dining room and kitchen except a refrigerated display chest for fresh fish products. Deep-frying is done just inside the front door of the restaurant.

The walls of the dining room and the booths that line those walls are marine blue. The tables are covered with red'n'white checked cloths. Anchors, harpoons, ship models, sea pictures, photographs of Jack August and his famous customers and framed citations and awards, almost completely cover the walls.

The best part of this restaurant's atmosphere is the host and hostess - Jack and Eva August. One impressed customer had written to Gourmet Magazine, "Mr. and Mrs. August are usually and usefully in evidence." Both Mr. and Mrs. August are extremely cordial and add a personal, homey touch to the meal. According to one of the Jack August slogans - "You may come a stranger - We hope you leave as a friend."

Once a woman has given you her heart, you can never get rid of the rest of her. (Sir John Vanbrugh)

The menu states in the upper corner "Sorry! No meats or liquors-Just Good Sea Foods". Under the title of "Jack August Features" the menu offers, baked stuffed jumbo shrimps, fried shrimp stuffed in crabmeat, Shrimp Diablo, Lobster Diablo, and Bouillabaisse Jacques (French fish stew). Maine lobster specialities are served broiled, stuffed, hot or cold boiled, or in a variety of lobster plates.

According to the menu, Jack August suggests such dishes as genuine cape scallops, broiled shrimps and "our famous Boston schrod". Pure vegetable shortening is used for all deep-fried sea foods. The menu lists both fried fish, and fried shell fish, and a speciality "Pick O' the Sea" - a mixed plate - a little of every fried sea food. Most entrees are served with coleslaw, French fries, rolls and butter.

Other foods served include: shell fish, either oysters or cherry stones; stews, your choice of lobster, clam, scallop or oyster; chowder, clam or fish; cocktails; shrimp, lobster or herring fillets in wine sauce, and a limited number of seafood salads and sandwiches.

The two dishes that we sampled, shrimp diablo and fried clams, were fresh, tender, tasty and very delicious! The clam chowder is creamy - it's no wonder it's one of the many Jack August canned sea food products.

The service was very good. All menu items are reasonably priced.

We noticed one outstanding characteristic of the restaurant - the cleanliness. There was no odor of fish at all.

Jack August is open Sunday from 11 A.M. to 8 P.M., from 11 to 7:30 on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, and from 11 to 8:30 on Friday and Saturday. The restaurant is closed all day Monday.

Stop in and visit Mr. Seafood himself - Jack August's for quality sea food meals.

Family Planning Hailed As Human Right

Montreal, Can. (WMNS) - Before the World Assemble for Human Rights meeting here, Mrs. Helvi Sipila of Finland, a member of the Status of Women Commission, explained why she believes that family planning is a fundamental human right. She said:

. It is a human right because it affects the dignity and worth of the human person;

. It is a human right because it affects the equality between men and women and between human beings of either sex;

. It is a human right because it protects and safeguards the family as the natural and fundamental group of society;

. It is a human right because it is inextricably related to such other rights as health, housing, education, and employment;

. It is a human right because, as United Nations secretary general U Thant pointed out, unless families have the help they need to plan their families they are without any real choice with regard to family size; and the right of parents to free choice in this matter is a fundamental human right.

Female Spirits Visit Campus

By C. C.

Two reported supernatural events on campus this month have aroused the superstituous and have made those who deny the existance of "spirits" to reconsider their faith in "reality".

The first supernatural occurrance happened in a girl's dorm in Southest. Reportedly, there was a spirit which wandered around one of the corridors at night. This particular spirit did no harm. It was however at various times, heard laughing and screaming. At one point the spirit was reported to have entered the body of one of the girls.

The girl later reported, "I was torn between two forces. I didn't want to believe that it happened but I couldn't deny what I actually felt."

It was later discovered, through the use of a ouija board, that the spirit's name was Sonja.

It was established by one girl's grandmother, a medium, that the spirit was only mischievous.

The second reported spirit on campus was discovered in Thatcher. This spirit is supposedly that of a girl who killed herself in that dorm several years ago. The girl hanged herself in the closet.

Apparently, the trouble with the spirit, started when the men living in the room were troubled by a light that danced around the room at night. They also heard bumping noises coming from the closet that sounded like feet kicking the walls, as might be heard if someone were hanging from a rope inside.

In the hopes of solving this mystery, some of the boys found a witch craft rite for conjuring up ghosts. Four men in the room practiced the rite, and two of them became hysterical when the spirit entered them and made them go through the physical agony of being hanged.

No one on either side of the room in question heard a sound, even though the two boys were screaming.

Mermaids Win Fifth Meet, Set 8 Marks

The Albany Invitational Swim Meet held this Saturday, saw the UMass Women's Team emerge victorious over seven schools, including Skidmore College, University of Vermont, SUNY at New Paltz, SUNY at Geneso, Green Mountain College, Castleton College, SUNY at Plattsburg and SUNY at Albany.

The first event of the meet set the pace, as the UMass 200 yd. medley relay team of Witwicki, Berger, Shockley and Reid cut 16.8 seconds off the existing pool record, by turning in a time of 2:09.6. The individual events followed and UMass captain, Janey Shockley, led the way by setting two pool records in the 200 free with a time of 2:12.5 and the 200 IM time of 2:31.5.

Becky Fall, a freshman, turned in record breaking times to capture two first places in both the 50 and 100 yd. freestyle events. Following Miss Fall, Sue Berger and Ginny Hepp (diver) captured first and fifth respectively, in the 50 yd. breaststroke. Marie Witwicki, emulating her teammates, proceeded to set two pool records in the 50 and 100 yd. backstroke events, followed closely by teammates Janet Reid and Jan Yoke who took second and fifth places in the 50 fly.

Though placing second, Janet was also under the previous record.

The final event saw the freestyle relay team of Urban, Yorke, Fall and Reid capture second place with a time of 2:01.4. In addition, consistent diving by Genny Hepp gave UMass second in diving and wrapped up the championship.

Totalized, the team set 8 pool records, won 8 first places, 2 seconds, 1 fourth, 2 fifths, and 2 sixths to give them a total of 89-1/2 points for the first place team trophy. The nearest competitor, Skidmore, had a total of 63 points giving them the runner-up trophy.

The win is the third in four starts for the girls.

Hoopmen Open At Rider
Broncs Lack Experience

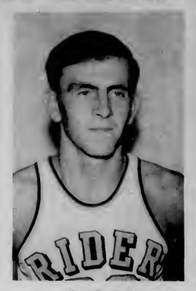
By MIKE CURRAN
Sports Editor

Coach Jack Leaman may consider this year's group of UMass Redmen as young, but they look like a bunch of old men when compared to Rider's hoop roster.

The Broncs of Trenton, N.J., under Head Coach John Carpenter are rebuilding. Greg Cisson, one of the best players in the school's history is gone, along with Ron Cooper, Bill Wood, Dick Snyder, Dale MacArthur and Chuck Higgins. These boys formed the backbone of last year's 9-15 club.

Of the 15 players on this year's club, eight are sophomores, six are juniors, and only one senior. That's what's known in sports as youth.

It's also called inexperience and Carpenter knows that only too well. He believes his hoopsters, "have better overall talent and speed," stressing however that, "rebounding is going to be a problem, but our biggest handicap is inexperience."



Saturday night's starting lineup against the Redmen will have Bob Teti, a 6' 5" JC transfer from Mercer Community College, 2nd in the nation last year, at center.

Teti will probably be joined in the forecourt by a pair of sophs, Jim Barrett, a 6' 4" Baystater from Melrose and Ed Wenker, another 6' 4" forward.

The backcourt features "veteran" junior Rich Wallace, who stands 6' 2" and averaged 8.1 points per game after missing the first eight contests with a broken collar bone. Wallace is accompanied by Robin Francavilla, a 5' 10" playmaking sophomore.

Both the guards are hometown products. Francavilla played with UMass Jack Gallagher at St. Anthony's in Trenton.

Other Broncs ticketed for plenty of action are forwards Glenn Albano, the leading scorer on last year's freshman team, and Ray Ramsey, and backcourtman Steve Garvick, the only senior on the squad.

DOUBLE DRIBBLES--Coach Leaman's tentative starting lineup has Co-Captain Pete Gayeska at center, Ken Mathias and Gallagher at the forward slots, and Co-Captain Joey DiSarcina and Ray Ellerbrook at the guards...John Shocko and Dennis Chapman are the sixth and seventh men...Last year UMass beat Rider, 78-55 at the Cage...Rider's Alumni Gymnasium has a 2,200 capacity and even with the 3,500 school enrollment gone home for Thanksgiving, a good crowd is expected.

Fusia Looks Back On Season, Praises Attitude

By PETER PASCARELLI
Assistant Sports Editor

"I have already started on plans for next year," That was the message from UMass head football coach Vic Fusia, two days after completing a disasterous 2-8 season.

A little more relaxed than he has been in the last nine weeks, Fusia reflected upon his worst season without rancor or bitterness. On the contrary, the coach saw a bright spot in what was a long period of darkness.

"A lot of things can happen when you have such a season," said the coach, "but we stayed free of many of them.

"Not once did I hear of any locker room lawyers, and never was the staff in disharmony. For these reasons," said Fusia, "I have nothing but praise for the whole squad."

The coach added in the same vein, "In situations like this some people will desert a sinking ship. These people, however, stayed right with it and it is a testimonial to the type of student-athletes, we attract here at the University in all sports."

The coach, in answer to a request to pinpoint the factors that could have caused such a season, reiterated, "It was combination of many complex factors."

Once he got warmed up to the subject, however, Fusia was able to find a few things.

"Firstly, Fusia said, "It was almost inevitable from the time the 20 formula conference scholarship regulation was introduced, that this would happen.

"Secondly, we had a bad recruiting year in 1965, in that nine of our top prospects did not last through various reasons. When you bring in so few, and then have so many leave, you are in trouble."

"Thirdly, of course were the injuries."

"Another thing was a number of walkoffs, some of which we were depending upon for depth."

"Finally," Fusia said, "we had much inexperience at several positions. Many of our starters were in there for their first time around."

The coach understandably wanted to put this season behind him and look toward next year. He saw last Saturday's great effort against Boston College as being a big building block for next season's plans.

"These young men learned quite a lesson Saturday, by getting a taste of the joy in giving an effort that is a little bit more than 100%. Eventually this will evolve into triumph."

Fusia added optimistically and confidently, "It may be a few years before we will be where we were a few years ago, and I'm not saying we will be world beaters, but we'll be on the winning side of the ledger next year."

STEVE ROGERS-UMass safety set a new UMass record by intercepting his eighth pass of the season Saturday against Boston College.

M Club Winners Announced

Varsity 'M' Club awards for outstanding performances in the B.C. game will be awarded this week to Bruce Cochrane on offense and Bill Sroka on defense.

Cochrane, a senior fullback, closed out his UMass career with a solid performance as he picked up valuable yardage while doing a fine blocking job. It was his second such award of the year.

Sroka coming off a leg injury, played an excellent game at defense as he helped hold the high scoring Eagles to 21 points. Sroka has improved steadily all season since getting a starting breath.

Hockey Team Opens At Home Meets Lowell Tech Tonight

By KEN SCHWARTZ
Staff Reporter

Even in losing to the freshmen, the UMass varsity hockey team has shown themselves to be improved over last year. What now remains for them is to prove it and their first opportunity will come tonight at Orr Rink in a 7:00 game against Lowell Tech.

The Lowell team is much the same as the Redmen in that they are young and building. They will also have the advantage of being fresh off a victory. The visitors took the measure of Amherst College last Saturday, 7-3.

In order to rebound from their loss on Friday, UMass will have to play better defense. Injured goalie Larry Walsh, who didn't play against the Frosh, may be ready tonight. Regardless of this, the defensemen will have to play more aggressively in front of their goalie in order to keep Lowell players from milling around uncovered and untouched.

Offensively, the Redmen will be bolstered by the return of center Ken Reddick, who is a fine skater and passer. They will have to cut down on off sides if they are to keep their attack flowing smoothly. This was a major problem against the freshmen. At one time while the varsity was enjoying a two man advantage they suffered from three off-side calls.

Overall, the Redmen have shown considerable improvement over last year. The defense will be the big question mark again this year. If they are able to play smart aggressive hockey, the varsity could win consistently. Otherwise.....

Racism Will Be Examined In Special Education Course

One of the new special offerings in the School of Education for the coming second semester is entitled "The Fire Next Time." It will be a course in which participants will examine the problem of racism. The course will focus on personal feelings and attitudes, and will be supplemented by information from history and the behavioral sciences relevant to the problem.

The School of Education, in cooperation with other members of the University staff, will offer this 8-week course on race during the Spring semester. In order to accommodate both large numbers of participants and provide small group meetings, the course will be repeated in the final 8 weeks of the semester. Those interested should register for Education 392, section 12 (undergraduate); or Education 753 (graduate) - 3 credits.

The formal outline of the course is as follows: Four hours of group meetings comprised of 1) one hour of lecture before the large group, 2) three hours of small group discussion, 3) student-initiated discussions, and 4) required readings. In the large group meetings, Prof. Daniel Jordan will present a series of 4 lectures, "What is Race?," "Racial Myths," "Dynamics of Prejudice," and "Program Prerequisites to the Elimination of Prejudice." Large group presentations V, VI, VII, and VIII will be of films, panels, videotapes and other events.

The small group meetings will represent the major thrust of the course - these may be used to perform many kinds of services for their members. The small group meetings will be designed to utilize many kinds of resources for developing sensitivity to the problem of racism.

The course will be offered to a maximum of 600 (300 per 8-week session), while maintaining a 1 to 8 instructor-student ratio. One group of 300 will meet for four hours once per week (in the evening) for large-group presentation during the first hour. These presentations will provide, in part, some of the background material for the small group discussions in the remaining three hours.

UNH Faculty Senate To Add Students

DURHAM, N.H. (AP) -- The University of New Hampshire faculty senate reversed a previous vote Monday and approved 47 - 5 a proposal to add 25 students to the senate which now is made up of administration and faculty members.

President John W. McConnell said the vote is subject to ratification by the university trustees.

The vote came at a meeting which drew a large attendance of the Coalition of Student Political Unions and Afro-American organizations, who were urged by their leaders to attend and protest last week's vote rejecting the proposal.

The meeting adjourned after two hours without taking up the question of what companies would be allowed to recruit on the campus. The senate affirmed at last week's meeting the open campus policy which has been in effect for years.

Some student groups are protesting this. The Dow Chemica Co. had recruiters on the campus Monday but there were no incidents.

Demonstrations Cancel Classes In N.Y. School

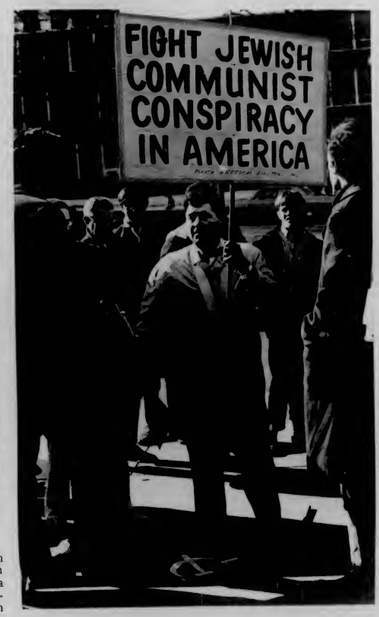
SYRACUSE, N.Y. (AP)--Classes were cancelled at the racially mixed Central Technical High School Monday after white pupils - chanting "W-H-I-T-E" - demonstrated outside the school and demanded police protection from alleged assault by their Negro schoolmates.

The school has an enrollment of 1,647, including about 600 Negroes.

The demonstrators, numbering about 300, gathered around a sign that read : "White is Wonderful."

Heavy Fog Cancels Julian Bond Lecture

It was a foggy day and night at UMass yesterday, but the worst part of returning to school, at least for some people, was the cancellation of Julian Bond's Distinguished Visitors Program lecture last night.



The lecture entitled, "THE NEW POLITICAL COALITION", was scheduled for 8:00 in Curry Hicks Cage. Braving a fog so thick the campus pond ceased to exist, students made their way to the Cage, where they were told the lecture had been postponed until 9:00. At 8:15 they were told that due to the massive curtain of fog over Kennedy International Airport in New York, Julian Bond was unable to fly to Springfield.

Although a brief biography of Mr. Bond can not alleviate, in any way, the disappointment of not hearing him speak, perhaps a brief account of what Mr. Bond has done will acquaint the readers with some of the reasons why he became a central figure at the Democratic National Convention.

Julian Bond, a Tennessian by birth, at age 28 has been active in civil rights since 1960 when he helped to found the Student Non-Violent Co-ordinating Committee (SNCC). His political career began in 1965 when he won a seat in the Georgia House of Representative, but he was prevented from taking office by members of the legislature who objected to his statements about the Viet Nam War. After being refused his seat a second time, Bond finally was granted his membership in the Georgia House of Representatives when the United States reviewed his case and decided unanimously that the Georgia House had erred in their refusal to seat him.

At the Democratic Convention in Chicago, Julian Bond along with other members of the Georgia Freedom Party challenged the credentials of the delegates from Georgia headed by Gov. Lester Maddox, the so-called Georgia regulars, and was successful in gaining seats on the convention floor for his Freedom Party. During the course of nominating Vice Presidential candidates, Julian Bond's name was placed in nomination and did collect some votes.

Those disappointed people in the Cage can only hope for rescheduling of the lecture. No DVP members were available last night to comment on plans, if any, to reschedule Mr. Bond's address.

"Famed" Polish Freedom Fighter, Josef Mross, paid UMass a visit last Tuesday and planted himself in front of the Student Union where he burnt a Soviet and Israeli flags. But instead of attracting attention, along with who SDS had planned to napalm a dog at noon, but changed their plans, he became the lone spectacle of rapt, if not dismayed, onlookers. Legality of Birth Control Law Questioned in Bill Baird Appeal

BOSTON (AP) - The constitutionality of Massachusetts' 89-year-old birth control law is being considered by the state Supreme Court.

Arguments were heard Monday by a full bench of seven judges in an appeal by William R. Baird, 34, of Hempstead, N.Y., who was convicted Oct. 17, 1967, in Superior Court of violating the law.

The law prohibits the distribution of birth control devices or information to all but married women who have a physician's prescription.

Baird was arrested at a Boston University rally in April, 1967, after he displayed birth control devices and a contraceptive to an unmarried student.

If his conviction is upheld, Baird faces a maximum sentence of five years in prison and a $1,000 fine.

Baird's lawyer, Joseph Balliro, argued Monday that the law violates guarantees of freedom of speech and assembly and interferes with an individual's "private right" to protect his health and life.

He said its enactment was an arbitrary decision of the legislature.

"Unless this statute is struck down, we will continue to be faced with a very monstrous thing, the effects of unwanted pregnancies," he said.

Balliro said such pregnancies are a greater problem than venereal disease or general morality.

Asst. Dist. Atty. Joseph R. Nolan argued that the object of the law "certainly is morality and morals" and that any change in the statute should come from the legislature, not the courts.

"If ever there was an open invitation to promiscuity and sexual license, it could not have been better made than by the defendant's own remarks" at Boston University, Nolan said.

He said "the argument that free birth control information will reduce illegitimacies is unsound."

Balliro said the law "amounts to a complete and sweeping prescription against any and all birth control activities."

Baird, who has been free on bail since his conviction, was accompanied in court by his wife and two children.

Approximately 20 supporters marched outside the court house, some carrying signs calling for abolition of the law.

Baird is a director of Parents' Aid Society, a group involved in family planning and other matters.

San Francisco St. Resumes Classes Despite Scuffles

SAN FRANCISCO (AP)--Classes resumed Monday at long-troubled San Francisco State College despite a sound truck scuffle involving its new president and an abortive invasion of the administration building.

The latter was accompanied by a flurry of rock throwing that shattered two of the building's windows.

Two students and one nonstudent were arrested as police confronted but made no physical contact with a handful of Negro and white demonstrators.

Dr. S. I. Hayakawa, newly named acting president, made good his promised 8 a.m. opening of the college, disrupted by violence and vandalism since a strike called by the Black Students Union Nov. 6.

Hayakawa personally climbed onto a sound truck operated by the Students for a Democratic Society, and jerked the wires from one of its loudspeakers.

Smiling, he descended, and police arrested Ernest Brill, 23, a student, and Juan Rivera, 24, a nonstudent, who were operating the truck. Police drove the truck away.

About 200 strikers picketed building entrances but most students ignored them.

At lunchtime the Black Students Union started a rally with a loudspeaker on the campus commons, opposite the administration building.

A broadcast from the building ordered the crowd to disperse.

Instead the group converged on the building steps, and about 60 Negro and white activists burst through the doors.

English Department Initiates New Student Advisory System

Strange things are happening in Bartlett, and the much-maligned Art Department can't be blamed for all of them. As Counseling Day looms, hundreds of UMies make resolutions to do their own counseling. This year it may be different.

The English Department has taken a fatal plunge. For it. Like the effervescent George Sulzner in Thompson Tower, it has initiated a student advisory system. This is designed to ease the nominal burden of its faculty members and to release them for more pressing chores, like talking to the students they teach. Freshmen are no longer assigned a personal Virgil to lead them through the hell of being an English major, and anyone in need of an autograph can theoretically obtain it more easily now.

Ten or fifteen upperclassmen called Undergraduate Assistants (that is, like Work Study, only fancier) are stationed most of the day in jolly Jules Chametsky's office, Bartlett 380, and are also available in (predictably) the affluent areas, Southwest and Orchard Hill.

These kids have heretofore functioned as a "think tank" for the department, as brilliant (honors students--whatever that means at UMass) representatives of 1300 nonvocal and ungrammatical English majors. They have the great advantage of being paid independently of the Department, and have, thereby, NO DIRECT STAKE. (It is also noted that the function of Critique is left to the individual advisor.) These work under the efficient and humanitarian direction of the Messrs. Silver, Moran and possibly Sanders, busy people who are trying hard to eliminate certain cannibalistic practices of their organisation. Twelve idle but informed faculty members have also been appointed to work with this program, all of which comes under the splendid category of Undergraduate Studies (i.e. the study of undergraduates).

The whole movement is, on the surface, paradoxical--at a time when even our placid campus is demanding personal relationships between students and the "others," in small ways we are eliminating what SOMETIMES is a valuable one, the advisor system. The new program still leaves some room for it though, and it is only on trial for this year at least. If it works, this---and a faculty forcibly assigned to committee drudgery--all promises happier English majors. At least it looks better than the inchoate (but MAM-MOTH) House of Student Representatives.

ATTENTION
ENGLISH MAJORS!

Faculty advisers will be available for consultation at all times during the week. In addition, ten upper-class student advisers will hold office hours throughout the week. Both groups are prepared to help you in all matters of interest to English majors.

Do drop in to chat with a faculty or student adviser at your convenience. You can check who is on duty from the advisers' schedule in the lobby of Bartlett. As an additional facility for those who live in Southwest or Orchard Hill, we will hold counseling hours once a week in each of these areas - Monday, 6:30 - 8:00 in Coolidge Tower; Tuesday 7 - 9 in Eugene Field.

UMass Professor Uncovers Medieval German Manuscript

Middle High German manuscript material not yet brought to the attention of medieval literary scholarship has been discovered in Europe by a UMass professor and his graduate assistant.

The discoveries followed a systematic search of the manuscript collections of several monasteries in and near Salzburg, Austria, by Dr. Joerg Schaefer, associate professor of German, and his doctoral candidate Joseph Purkart, who specializes in medieval studies.

The search was made while Dr. Schaefer was on sabbatical leave at the German University of Tubingen and Mr. Purkart was a student at the University's Atlantic Studies Center in Freiburg, Germany.

The works in which the two UMass researchers are chiefly interested include a late medieval manuscript of an epic on Alexander the Great, two manuscripts of a German translation of Sir John of Mandeville's famous "Travel to the Holy Land," and extensive fragments of an epic by a knight of the Teutonic Order, Heinrich von Hesler, on the Evangelium Nicodemi, a "gospel" attributed to Nicodemus, a work widely known in the Middle Ages.

Dr. Schaefer and Mr. Purkart feel that some of the material deserves publication and further investigation.

Police Dismissal Not Enough To Prevent Street Violence

CHICAGO (AP) - The director of a study team which reported to a presidential commission that the bloody street disorders during the Democratic National Convention was a "police riot" said today that "the suspension or dismissal of a handful of policemen will not be enough" to prevent recurrences of violence.

Daniel Walker, 46, a vice president of Montgomery Ward & Co., and director of the study team appointed by the President's commission on violence, told a news conference: "This community should not settle for less than prompt and severe action against these offenders."

Walker's 345-page report, released Sunday, found that demonstrators provoked police during the convention week disturbances but "the weight of violence was overwhelming on the side of the police."

"I understand eight or ten policemen have been suspended or dismissed," Walker said. "More than a handful were involved... their lieutenants and sergeants know who they are."

"The blue curtain cannot be permitted to stay down," Walker said. He added that there was no estimate available of how many policemen may have been involved in violence actions.

"But like many Americans, I believed that the only violence took place in front of the Conrad Hilton Hotel," he said, "until I began reading the statements we collected."

"I was stunned, shocked and amazed when I learned of the violence that took place in the streets and alleys of Chicago," he said.

Walker, chairman of the Chicago Crime Commission, said he could not agree with a statement by Mayor Richard J. Daley of Chicago that the report's summary was "misleading."

He added that the entire report was "my opinion and I stand unequivocally on the entire report." He said the President's commission on violence might "evaluate" the report and form other opinions. The commission released the report without comment.

"The report is not aimed," Walker said, "at people who have prejudices on either side. It is aimed at thoughtful people who will read the facts and I hope they will learn from it."

He said that the reaction by Chicago police stemmed from conditioning which included the rioting following the death of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., in April, Mayor Daley's shoot-to-kill order regarding arsonists and an April peace demonstration which erupted in violence and charges of police brutality.

He also said that the police "have not been properly trained.

Sendoff Will Present Martha and Vandellas

A few years back, Martha Reeves and the Vandellas were presented a music plaque by comedian Phil Silvers. The presentation was in recognition of the trio's sizzling rock classic, "Heat Wave", then nominated for a "Granny Award" as the best Rhythm and Blues record of the year.

Five best selling albums and twelve hit singles later, the trio had become one of the hottest recording acts in the nation. Indeed, they are one of the top properties at Motown Record Corporation, where every group under contract ranks as an internationally acclaimed headline act.

In Detroit, their hometown, Martha Reeves and the Vandellas are easily cited as perennial Motown Sound favorites.

Their status is continuously being enforced, as was evidenced when they recorded their first live album "Martha and the Vandellas Live!" at one of Detroit's leading nightclubs.

When it was announced that the girls would appear at the club for three nights of record, public response was overwhelming. The club's management was unable to handle reservations.

Growing with the "Sound of Young America," Martha Reeves joined Motown as a secretary, harboring her talents until one day an emergency studio session prompted her to volunteer her services, along with those of two classmates she sang with in the school choir.

The impromptu session served as an ample audition. Motown president, Berry Gordy Jr. and the producing executives present took note of the clarity displayed by the three harmonious voices that were musically concordant, yet distinctive.

Instead of a cordial "thank you" at the end of the session, the trio was extended a future recording date.

A later fulfillment of the offer resulted in the popular disc, "Come and Get These Memories."

The list of recordings following the initial release ring out with familiarity to fans of the trio, "Dancing in the Street," "Quicksand," "My Baby Loves Me," "Ready for Love", "Jimmy Mack" "Love Bug Leave My Heart Alone," and their current hit release, "Honey Chile."

'CONVENIENCE FOODS'

Food Services Director Announces New Changeover Meal-Planning

Four million meals a year is a lot of food--too much, the UMass Food Services has decided, to be prepared in traditional ways.

The result is a major changeover at UMass this year to "convenience foods"--frozen, freeze-dried, dehydrated or canned products that require a minimum of preparation. "We buy our potatoes peeled, our pies frozen, and our chicken freeze-dried," said Joel Stoneham, food services director. "About the only things we still prepare in the traditional way are roasts."

A labor shortage--beginning to pinch now and expected to pinch more in the next few years-- is the major reason for the shift, Stoneham said. UMass, with 9800 of its 16,500 students living on campus, is now the largest residential institution in New England. Its location in a predominately rural area gives it a limited labor market to draw on.

During this academic year the five dining commons will serve an estimated four million meals. At the planned rate of University growth--1500 students per year--the estimate is 12 million meals a year by 1975. At the same time the labor squeeze is expected to increase. "The labor supply used to be within a radius of 10 miles. Today we have extended in some directions to almost 40 miles and we can't expect to extend much farther," Stoneham said.

Stoneham, who holds faculty rank as a lecturer in the food and nutrition department of the School of Home Economics, explained that before this year, the use of convenience foods was restricted to such items as bakery mixes, dehydrated foods, pre-peeled potatoes and others.

The use of prepared entrees began in the fall of 1967 on an experimental basis, first one entree at each of the three weekend meals, then at all weekend meals. During the latter part of that academic year convenience entrees were served by way of an experiment at luncheons attended by the UMass Board of Trustees, the president and other administrative officers. Reaction from all was favorable, according to Stoneham.

"To date we have tested over 350 products and have judged only 51 entrees as acceptable to meet our particular quality standards," the UMass food services director said.

The change-over has not resulted in anyone losing jobs, Stoneham emphasized, but it has cut creation of new jobs. For example, he said, two years ago the food services staff numbered approximately 400.

A shaver that gives almost twice the shaves per charge is worth some study.

Our Rechargeable 45CT (below) gives you 3 weeks of close shaves on a single charge. (Which is nearly twice as much as any other rechargeable.)

And it gives you the choice of using the cord, or not.

It also has a lot of things in common with our new Tripleheader Speedshaver® 35T.

Both shavers have 18 rotary blades set in three new 'floating' Microgroove™ heads, that follow the contours of your face.

And they both shave you as close or closer than a blade in 2 out of 3 shaves. (As tested in an independent lab by some very independent men.)

They also have some extras that make shaving a lot easier. A separate pop-up trimmer, snap-open cleaning, a handy on/off switch, and a 110/220 voltage selector for travel use.

Whichever you choose, you can't get a closer shave.

Following the same procedure as in recent years, the Town of Amherst has again imposed a ban on all-night parking on town ways, effective from Sunday, December 1, 1968 through Monday, March 31, 1969. This prohibition is to facilitate snow removal during the winter months. Any vehicles parked on the streets after 2:00 a.m. will be removed by police at the owner's expense. It is the responsibility of residents of Amherst to inform overnight guests of this restriction.

Towing of illegally parked cars is authorized under provisions of Chapter 40 of the General Laws Section 22D, as amended. This section was adopted in 1962.

Horace Mann Award Recipient Will Aid Teacher Education

The first recipient of the University of Massachusetts Horace Mann Award and Lectureship in Public Education Policy was announced today by Dr. Dwight W. Allen, dean of the UMass School of Education.

He is Harold C. Lyon, assistant deputy commissioner of education in the U.S. Office of Education, who will assume the chair in January, 1969.

Lyon will teach seminar courses and aid in planning innovative programs for teacher education at the University under the direction of Dean Allen. Under the provisions of the Government Employees Training Act of 1958, Lyon will serve one year at the University beginning in January, 1969, after which he will return to federal service in Washington, D.C.

A 1958 graduate of the U.S. Military Academy at West Point, he completed his graduate work in public administration at George Washington University. Prior to his federal appointment in the Office of Education, he served as special assistant to the president of Ohio University.

He was instrumental in initiating and developing a program at Ohio University which received over $500,000 of federal support for the training of teenagers to work as teacher aids with preschool children from poor families. He has served as consultant to the White House Task Force on Education of the Gifted, and as guest lecturer at West Point, Ohio University, the University of Maryland, and the Industrial College of the Armed Forces.

The annual award and chair was established this year by the UMass School of Education to recognize outstanding leaders in government service and to provide new avenues of dialogue between the academic community and the federal government.

'Tevya' To Conclude Smith Film Series

A movie that inspired the Broadway musical "Fiddler on the Roof" will be shown Tuesday (December 3) at Smith College.

Title "Tevya," the Yiddish film with English subtitles will be screened at 8 p.m. in McConnell Hall on the college campus. The movie is open to the public without charge.

The film's showing marks the conclusion in a series of programs entitled "Portraits of a Vanishing Era: Jewish Life in Eastern Europe," sponsored by B'nai B'rith Hillel Foundations at Smith and Amherst College with the Northampton Jewish Cultural Center.

Want to Work For "Stars and Stripes"?

(This passage, from a letter, was written by an Army Private stationed near Vietnam's De-Militarized Zone. (The spelling and grammar are faithful to the original.) The serviceman attended Highland Junior College in Kansas before joining the Army. We think the letter speaks for itself.)

BY THE

"...I'm writing for the "Stars and Stripes" now, and am really glad I received the chance to do this. I'm at a base camp about 12 miles from the D.M.Z. We get his without a let-up. But it seems like an everyday occurrence now....

I'm a combat writer. I gather facts, record interviews and take photos. This is the first time I've worked with cameras and find it very rewarding. There is no limit with pictures.

The "Stars and Stripes" puts out about 500,000 copies a day, and is really "bigtime." I'm really lucky to be writing for them. They take each of the small newspapers and when they see someone progressing good, they interview them and if everything works out they put you on their staff.

The way I got on was really crazy. We were all sitting around the office and doing nothing. I just sat there thinking what I could do to really stir up some news. Just about this time we received a report that heavy ground action was taking place in the D.M.Z.

I just thought, "Man, you only live once!" So I grabbed a portable tape recorder, my M-16 and a chute. I ran out to a chopper and begged them to take me into the D.M.Z. They wouldn't land, so I jumped from about 2,000 feet up.

I guess this really blew some minds to find out some dude was jumping out of a helicopter at 2,000 feet right in a fire fight. I was so scared I didn't know what to do, this being my first time to jump. When I hit ground, this captin crawled up to me and asked me what I'm doing here. I said, "I'm a reporter." This just down right blew his mind, he said, "You're a what!"---

Anyway, I crawled into a hole and started recording. A platoon had about eight V.C. pinned down. But the V.C. had plenty of ammo.

I started talking to guys while the machine guns blared overhead. I stopped and was talking to this dude and right in the middle of the interview he got hit in the arm. This only added to the confusion and made the tape even more exciting.

Soon the V.C. took out running and we really opened on them. I even picked off one myself. Hell, why pass up the chance.

Somehow, I got back to the base camp the next day. Man, I was so tired I hadn't even replayed the tape yet.

I just handed the tape to someone and went to my hut and crashed. About half an hour later my major walks in. This dude is so excited, he looks like he's really going to spring a leak. He's half laughing, half-standing there like I just stole his last cigar. And all he can say is "You're crazy, you're stone nuts!"

Well, from that I knew the good old tape turned out O.K. But little did I realize that it would be playing on every radio station in Vietnam in two hours. The bad thing is I slept through the whole thing. I was just exhausted.

That night about 8, I had a call from "S & S" saying they wanted to talk to me in Danang. Well, everything went good and now I'm a writer for good ole "Stars and Stripes...."

WFCR May Shorten Maintain Service Hours

During November, WFCR, the non-profit Five College Radio Station hoped to raise $10,000 in new memberships and contributions in order to maintain its current broadcasting services. Thus far only $3,500 has been raised.

Al Hulsen of WFCR told the Collegian, "if the $10,00 is not raised two things would have to be considered. One, the curtailment of some of the broadcasting hours in order to cut production and engineering costs or two, a deletion of some of the more expensive programs, such as the Library of Congress Concerts. Also being discussed is the possibility of being off the air for one full day a week, most likely Saturday." Hulsen said, "nothing had been decided upon and everything would depend on future developments."

WFCR in their attempt to raise funds sponsored concert violist and pianist Ernst and Lory Wallfisch, of the Smith College music faculty in a Benefit Concert on December 2.

Membership is still open to all persons who contribute $5 or more to the station's operation. Checks should be made payable to the Western Massachusetts Broadcasting Council, Inc. and sent to: Five College Radio-WFCR, Hampshire House, UMass, Amherst, Mass. Members receive 12 issues of the monthly WFCR Program Guide.

"I never feel like a rookie"

"Sure it's my first year with B&W, but I've been too busy to think about that. I've been working in my field all along, and the training sort of blends right in."

If Randy Trost sounds like a B&W booster, you should hear what his supervisor says about him.

We're looking for aggressive, talented young engineers like Randy. We want you if you want significant responsibility from the start. In fact, we need more engineers than ever before. That's because we're growing faster. Sales were $560 million last year. Up 17 per cent.

That's how it's been from the beginning. We started out making steam generation equipment. That led to atomic power stations, nuclear marine propulsion equipment, refractories, specialty steel, machine tools, computers, and closed-circuit TV. (And we still make the best boiler in America.)

If you'd like to talk with Randy Trost about B&W, call him collect at our facility in Lynchburg, Virginia, AC 703 846-7361.

In the meantime, be on the lookout for the B&W recruiter when he visits your campus.

Evaluation Day

The Daily Texan at the University of Texas recently ran the Student Evaluation blank you see to the right of this editorial. We feel that the day before counseling day is an excellent time for us to follow it.

All Semester Students have been given a chance to demonstrate how much they have learned from their professors by creatively but perfunctorily regurgitating class lecture notes, and by cleverly memorizing chapter titles and indexes of assigned reading lists. Perhaps now is a good time for the game of "turn-about-is-fair-play."

Fill out this sheet (with or without your name) and leave it on the lecturn in the classroom, or slip it surreptitiously under your professor's door or through the mail slot.

Professors at this critical point in the semester should be given an indication of how well they have been performing their job. And contrary to the well established, pre-historic, ivory tower notion, students are capable of judging the effectiveness of a professor. That is, after three months of listening to a professor two or three times a week, a student has a basis for judging how well a professor is presenting the material to class, and how effectively that professor answers questions and explains complex material to the class.

Perhaps professors will learn something from this, if they have not creeped past the learning age. Professors just might be surprised to discover that the teaching method they so meticulously perfected 20 years ago is no longer effective.

So, students, register your complaints now before the end of the semester so that just possibly a professor might take note of the feeling of his class and "change his ways," or at least, honestly strive to improve the course for those who will take it next semester and in years to come.

And although there are rumors circulating to the contrary, hopefully professors are interested enough in "teaching" and "their students" to respond to student criticism.

A Policy Change

From now until the end of the semester, the Daily Collegian will run only those editorials it deems to be of the "utmost importance" as " policy statements", and as such they will represent the views of this newspaper. All too often, as circumstances will have it, the staff has been forced to "fill space" even though there is no important topic upon which to expound. Such an editorial usually proves to be uninteresting to the reader if not downright inane. And it definitely is not reflective of the talent of our editorial writers or the opinions of our editors.

Our staff will continue to make observations regularly in our new column "Speak Out", and soon we will be providing the campus with opportunities to express its opinions in forms other than "Campus Comment".

What we are ultimately looking for is a more intense, intelligent dialogue among all segments of the campus community.

INSIDE REPORT:

The Schwartz Doctrine

By ROWLAND EVANS and ROBERT NOVAK

WASHINGTON - On Oct. 17, three days after the adjournment of Congress and a week before full resumption of U. S. military aid to Greece, a middle echelon Pentagon civilian put on paper the hitherto unwritten doctrine of Washington's permissive attitude toward right-wing military dictatorships.

The doctrine was laid down by Harry H. Schwartz, former policy planner at the State Department and now a deputy assistant secretary for international affairs in the Defense Department. Implicitly, it equated the repressions by the military dictatorship in Greece with actions by U. S. authorities to quell civil disorders. By this logic, Washington has no more business poking into the death of Greek democracy than the Athens colonels have in telling Washington how to handle black rioters.

With Congress in recess, the Schwartz doctrine has not received much attention on Capitol Hill. But those Congressional liberals who have read Schwartz's words regard them as the first articulation of what is now U. S. policy and therefore a matter of profound importance.

Indeed, some students of foreign policy view the Schwartz doctrine as a corollary of the doctrine laid down in Warsaw by Soviet party chief Leonid Brezhnev. Just as the Brezhnev doctrine asserts Moscow's authority to intervene in the internal affairs of what the Kremlin grandly calls the socialist commonwealth, the Schwartz doctrine makes clear the U. S. will not interfere with extra-constitutional, totalitarian rule by Western governments. Combined, the two doctrines paint the picture of a grim new world of Stalinist tyranny in the East and military dictatorship in the West.

The Schwartz doctrine was unleashed through a press conference in Washington Sept. 28 by Elias Demetracopoulos, an exiled Greek journalist and severe critic of the ruling military junta. Correctly predicting the resuption of heavy U. S. arms shipments to Greece, Demetracopoulos, attacked the sham plebiscite scheduled the next day on the junta's draft constitution.

Rep. Donald Frasier of Minnesota, a liberal critic of the Johnson administration's foreign policy, immediately fired off letters to Secretary of State Dean Rusk and Secretary of Defense Clark Clifford asking for comment on the Demetracopoulos charges. A routine, non-responsive reply came back from the State Department; what illuminated U. S. policy, not only in Greece but worldwide, was the Pentagon reply to Fraser by Schwartz.

While assuring Fraser that "we have repeatedly urged the early return of the Greek government to a constitutional system and democratic processes," Schwartz wrote that the Soviet-bloc invasion of Czechoslovakia "made clearer our priorities for mutual security." He added that "NATO is once again closing ranks to maintain the collective security of all," then came up with this eye-opener:

"We respect the efforts of individual members of NATO to solve their domestic difficulties just as they respect our efforts to solve our own internal problems. Addressing each point in Mr. Demetracopoulos's statement would not serve that purpose."

These words were no slip of the tongue. High government officials have assured us that the Schwartz doctrine of non-interference with military dictatorships represents official policy, exemplified by the quick embrace fo the new military juntas in Peru and Panama and resumption of arms aid to Athens shortly after Schwartz's letter to Fraser.

In fact, working-level officials in the State Department and U.S. embassies long have maintained fondness for military dictatorships such as the Athens regime- a telltale sign of which recently appeared in an article by ex-diplomat David G. Nes.

Protest Is Vital

letter to the editor:

A short while ago, as I viewed the film, "Dr. Zhivago," thereby witnessing an enactment of the beginnings of the Russian Revolution when people marched through Moscow, bearing signs proclaiming Brotherhood and Equality in direct opposition to the repressive Czarist regime in existence at that time, I couldn't help but think of our present-day S.D.S. The individuals involved in the beginnings of the Revolution envisioned a better world; their proclamations were noble ones. Were the results, however, commensurate with the goals?

I guess I am one of those individuals deplored by those in S.D.S., for I tend to agree with them in theory, but not in practice. Perhaps I have been brainwashed to a large degree by my somewhat static environment, perhaps my idealism is weaker than members of S.D.S., or perhaps it is stronger. It is my belief that a change in values can be wrought without the complete physical destruction of society.

I don't agree with our fight in Vietnam, I see a myriad of changes that could improve our society and after Chicago and Nov. 5, I don't pretend to believe that we have "a government of the people, by the people, and for the people." I do believe that the protests, marches, teach-ins, etc. that have occurred in recent months are some of the best things that have happened in this country since J. F. Kennedy. Both vocal and physical protest are vital to progress.

I do not believe, however, that atrocities like dog-burning will serve as the modus vivendi for a new governmental structure or a new moral system for our nation. Such an act does have shock value and may be analagous to certain Vietnam occurrences, but exactly how far the analogy goes, I am not sure. It is possible that such shock treatment may abruptly awaken some individuals and perhaps, if it awakens merely one individual it can be said to be legitimate. It seems more probable to me, however, that such an act would have relatively little effect on few. Those who are already opposed to the War will remain as such. Those supporting the war will never believe Americans purposely commit acts of cruelty. The suggestion of such by the S.D.S. will do little to alter the views of such individuals. Perhaps it is necessary to go one step further in criticism to say that war in general is the very embodiment of cruelty and barbarism. Why limit it to one war and barbarous acts perpetrated by one side?

If S.D.S. wants an upheaval in American society, it must be willing to lead Americans in positive ways toward positive goals. Rarely can important and worthwhile changes be wrought through mockery, mirror-image atrocities or violence for its own sake. Improvement will more likely come as a result of atttudinal change, partially through shock treatment and emotional impact, but also through a sane dissemination of information and rational action. Unless S.D.S. members make such a realization, I doubt whether S.D.S. will ever be the chief focal point for change. Instead, it will continue to be labelled by a majority of Americans as "that radical bunch of college kids."

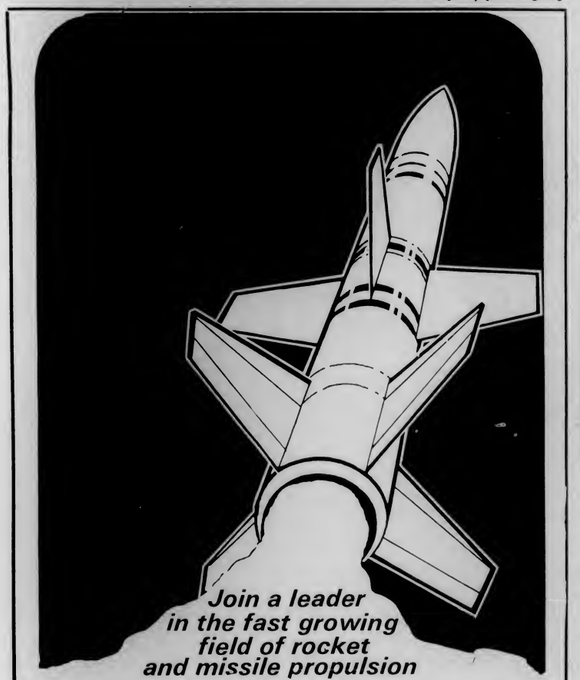
Rhona Schecter

American Cruelty

To the editor:

One of the most revolting stories of American cruelty I have heard to date. . is the one that U. of M. members (I refuse to call them people) intend to burn alive a helpless, protesting dog to protest the use of NaPalm in Vietnam. Dear God have we made no more progress in our civilization than this? Living Sacrifices DO NOT belong in an educated world; nor do they produce the hoped for results as witness the Buddhist's fire deaths in the recent past. Thus far your advanced education has not brought home to you the fact that we cannot make progress with destructive and ignorant acts but that our only hope is in constructive thought and behavior. It is impossible to erase an ignorant act with another equally ignorant act.

Whom do you expect to arouse by your sadistic behavior? Not those responsible for your venom but the decent, little man and woman..like myself.. who hate all atrocities and war with it's stupid cost in the wasted abilities, health and lives of our beautiful young people as well as the vicious agonizing of miserable Vietnamese. We also despise unaccountable madness in perpetrating cruelty on an innocent and helpless captive who wouldn't consent - if allowed to. Like child abuse, this is inexcusable.



What has happened to us that we no longer pray to God. Here is your means to begin a concentrated focusing of world-wide thinking to produce a power strong enough to stop all selfish wars. Why doesn't your student body begin a movement throughout all schools, all cities, all nation - gain the advantage of organized religious churches through the cooperation of the Pope, Billy Graham and other church heads to set aside a specific time each day (dependent on the various time zones), when all people can pray for peace wherever they are, whatever they are doing. GET OUT and collect money for radio, TV and printing expenses. GET OUT and do something worthwhile to prove that you REALLY CARE.

Your plan only brings about one thing. . .people learn to hate you. . in a world that already has enough hate in it. It become difficult to remember your original purpose in mutilating as painfully as possible a helpless, living as a senseless, useless means to end another senseless cruelty. I wonder why you didn't choose to kill yourselves? Was it because you knew it would be just as ineffective as the Buddhist's deaths were? You only help RETARD our efforts at civilization! For God's sake clean up your thinking, and help us to live a good life.

Sincerely,
Mrs. H. Ferrand Keefe

WOMEN AND WHEELS

Marsha Gallo

In any conversation, dissertation, meditation, etc. having even vaguely to do with motor vehicles and their operation or misoperation as the case may be, the hackneyed irresolvable question inevitably arises--who are better drivers, men or women?

In this article we wish to alter this question a trifle, to render it more honestly and to promote perhaps a higher level of empathy from each group in viewing our treatment of the other, to alter it therefore, to read--"who are worse drivers, men or women?"

Now any self-respecting, subjectively socialized, superiority oriented male will shrug his shoulders and tell you with undeniable certainty that women drivers should be run off the road, that whoever first let a woman behind the wheel should be shot, and that women are incompetent menaces to safe driving (as performed by males, understood). And any red-blooded, halfway perceptive and double standard disoriented female will tell you that man is by nature a superiority oriented creature, following his blind instincts to prove that anything woman co do he can do better.

Now all this may be very true, but cheer up, men, we're on your side. In a world overrun with women drivers one can't help but go mad and it's better to be blind. In everyday life the female of the species is a simple creature, leading her innocuous life, navigating her way through pedestrian situations, harming no one, but placed behind the wheel she becomes a lethal forerunner of nervous tension, anxiety, chaos, heart failure and all sorts of other choice symptoms of male reaction. Have you ever driven with Sally Suburbia who drives along a main thoroughfare stopping and starting suddenly, much to the dismay of the thirty cars behind her bumper to bumper, while she hunts for a gas station with stamps or giveaway games? Or maybe you're with her when the kids are playing stoop tag in the back seat and she's caught and she has to stoop way down to where eye level is the ignition. Or you must have seen her on her way to pick up her husband after work, putting on makeup in the rear view mirror and then she stops at the intersection to alternately file and polish her nails; meanwhile the light changes and the policeman signals her to get going but she's discovered this run in her stockings which she just has to get with that nail polish, which she proceeds to do with ultimate fastidiousness as four miles of cars lined up behind her land impatiently on their horns. Try to go around her and you slam into the right turning traffic and cause a pile-up in both directions. As the policeman is blowing his whistle madly and jumping around, Sally sits calmly behind the wheel and sails through the red light sideswiping the pileup and very nearly the policeman. For miles around her the disadvantaged males growl obscenities and chew their ulcer pills, helpless.

And then we always have Caroline Curlers who bops along Rt. 128 with her chief gossiping partner. They hit a ramp with a yield sign, but Caroline, because she automatically assumes that of course women have the right of way, zips right out, leaving in her wake swearing, swerving cars of nervous unagressive drivers who narrowly miss each other and roll in turn across the center strip. Meanwhile in the course of her incessant chattering she suddenly gasps--"Oh, I just HAVE to tell you this!" as she slams on the brake at 75 m.p.h. for emphasis.

Last but not least as the cliche goes, we have Madeleine Multiversity. Home for the holidays, she and her girl friends spend nine hours driving up and down the main drag of their city. As she is busy pulling down her miniskirts and checking out all the store windows, she is also actively engaged in looking for Joe high school, her current throb. Having found him, she proceeds to giggle and point for the benefit of her companions. She jumps up and down to check her makeup in the mirror and fixes her fall with both hands all the while calling and waving to him. She thinks the car is in the right direction, so it comes as quite a surprise to her as she plows into a hydrant taking the car parked next to it with her. She's also the one who watches the boy behind her in the rearview mirror and takes turns with her friends to see who can drive the furthest on the expressway with her eyes closed.

And you, men, you ask, but how can anyone get away with such atrocious behavior? Well, have you ever been with a woman who gets stopped by the law? Caroline Curlers immediately slumps over the wheel in a dead faint, Sally Suburbia sniffles and says, "Oh my husband will kill me, what will I do, officer?" and Madeleine simply bursts into tears and says I'm sorry, and the poor officer, executer of justice, confronted by such blatant examples of helplessness and contrition with a gentle rebuke of "be more careful" sends them away.

So you see, men, pop your pills and say what you will, but it's a losing battle and if you want to play at all it's by their rules--it's not whether you hit or get hit, it's how you play the game that counts.

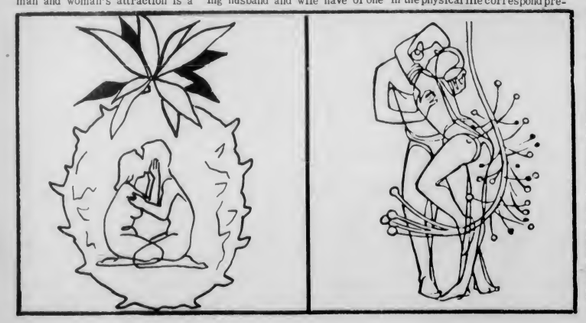
THE MEANING OF MARRIAGE

Is there a "marriage crisis" today? What have been the effects on the modern marriage of the "sexual revolution" with its newsstand detail approach to human intimacy?

American psychologists have been intensifying their studies of the emotional functions and purposes of marriage. Many of their scientific findings about the dynamics of married life closely resemble the pragmatic wisdom of thinkers like the philosopher and scientist turned theologian, Emanuel Swedenborg.

As one of the marked idea influences on such men as Jung and Adler, Swedenborg said of marriage that the "powerful root of a man and woman's attraction is a necessity for completion and fulfillment. "Furthermore," he continued, "what man wishes to reach in himself he can find only in her... and she can realize the more manlike attributes through him."



This has a very modern ring--compare the statement of the renowned psychologist, Dr. Erich Fromme, who maintains that "men and women marry because the family provides the emotional security essential for man's survival." Further echoing Swedenborg, Fromme declared that "enjoyment of marriage and domestic life must be in terms of understanding oneself." He continues, "even though a successful marriage depends on the understanding husband and wife have of one another, this rarely exceeds their ability to understand and control themselves." Both the modern psychologist and the philosopher agree that a foremost aim or fulfillment of life is self-knowledge and self-control. They also agree that the enduring satisfactions of marriage, both material and spiritual, develop in direct proportion to the achievement of a harmonious balance between the emotional and intellectual aspects of the relationship.

Of course sex exists, and Swedenborg stated the obvious that 'sex and eroticism are self-evident..."However, he also emphasizes what is less self-evident: That the nature and functions of sex in the physical life correspond precisely with the nature and functions of the feminine (emotional) and masculine (intellectual) elements in mankind's psychological structure. A man may have a greater share of the feminine (emotional) element that a woman--or vice versa--(Male and female created he them - Genesis 1:27) though not as a rule. The predominant female characteristic is generally recognized as affectional and that of the male as mental. Goethe was well aware of this as demonstrated in the famous closing lines of the second part of Faust: "The Eternal-Feminine exalts us." He was not speaking of the earthly female, but clearly of godly love, which warms and cheers. The "Eternal-Masculine," then refers to the wisdom of God, which enlightens our minds. Either way, the cooperation of these two psychological-or physical-components is indispensable for any creative endeavor, whether a housewife is preparing a lunch or Rodin is carving out a masterpiece! First the "drive" and then the "know-how." The know-how determines the form which the drive will take. If the will and the understanding are incompatible the result will be destructive rather than creative.

In Swedenborg's view, "love of sex is found with natural man and marital love with the spiritual man." Dartmouth University psychologist, Dr. Francis Merrill confirms that "man marries, animals mate..."-the human relationship is deeper, more permanent than a hormonal holiday, or Hollywoodian experiment. Dr. Robert A. Harper, a ranking educator and marriage counselor states that "the 'sheer joy' goal in marriage is not a very realistic one..' 'cow-like contentment' is not to be hoped for in marriage"-and the modern pursuit of these fantasies appears to be a major cause of the 50% or more of marriages that end in separation, divorce, desertion or unhappiness. Dr. Harper considered that "a reasonable goal in marriage is to achieve a fairly adequate adjustment," which is concomitant of Swedenborg's view that a marriage can be truly happy only when emotional and intellectual drives are harmonized and can cooperate on the basis of mutually shared standards and values.

The essential marriage message of Swedenborg is a truth that has bee n expressed in all lands throughout the centuries:"...for when two minds are conjoined so as to be one mind, there is love between them and this love...is the love of the spiritual marriage." A combination of male and female principles-the intellectual and the emotional-the unity which makes a complete person.

Swedenborg emphasized that "Real marriage is the uniting of the creating (male) and the sustaining (female) aspects of the divine." As a result, he believed, "in the union of their lives, each can realize their inner aspirations in the other person." Modernist psychiatrist Dr. Edmund Bergler made the same point that "what human happiness mortals can achieve they can achieve only in happy marriage. In the prophetic words of Longfellow "Useless each without the other."

NEWS ANALYSIS

The Crisis at San Fransisco State

By PHIL SEMAS
College Press Service

SAN FRANCISCO - Classes at San Francisco State College have been shut down three times during the past month because of the college's "inability to resolve some of the social needs of students and of the turbulent community in which we operate."

That is the view, not of a student radical or even a liberal faculty member; but of Robert R. Smith, who was the object of much attack from students leading the movement at San Francisco State before he resigned as president of the college.

Smith points out correctly that it is this basic problem, not the suspension of English instructor and Black Panther George Murray, which brought about the confrontation at San Francisco State.

The suspension of Murray by Glenn S. Dumke, chancellor of the California state college system, did give student radicals an additional issue around which to build support. Murray, who is by all accounts a good teacher, was admittedly being fired for his political statements about black liberation. This angered many liberal students. And faculty members who might not otherwise have been sympathetic to the student strike were angry because they felt Dumke has ignored their traditional prerogatives.

REASON BEHIND STRIKE

But the strike was called before Murray was suspended, and its basic aim was (and is) to get the college to deal more directly with the social needs Smith was talking about--specifically through a Black Studies department and admission of more minority group students.

Black studies classes at San Francisco State were begun about two years ago in the student-run Experimental College. Since the fall of 1967, black students have been pushing for a black studies department. The college began moving on the plan last year and now plans to launch the program next fall. A number of black studies classes have been set up in individual departments.

Although the administration says this is "unusual speed" for launching a new program, the Black Student Union is unhappy because the department now has only one faculty member, and because they must get approval for courses from what they regard as racist administrators in other departments. They want the department to be set up this spring with 20 faculty positions, faculty and staff control over hiring and firing, and a full professorship for Nathan Hare, a well-known sociologist who is head of the program and presently its only faculty member.

The BSU and Third World Liberation Front, the organizations leading the strike, are also demanding admittance of more non-white students this spring and of all "third world" students who apply in the fall of 1969. San Francisco State's student population is 16 per cent non-white, but 59 per cent of the city's high school students are non-white.

OTHER REASONS TOO

The strike is also based on student dissatisfactions not directly related to the racial controversy. One of these is a proposal by Chancellor Dumke to give his office control over all student funds and programs. He has justified this in the name of "efficiency," but the students point out it would allow him to kill any student program he didn't like, and give him power to censor student publications.

This is a special concern at San Francisco State, which has 3,000 students involved in a large number of student-run programs, including the Experimental College and long-standing community service and action programs.

The strike also indicates a more general student dissatisfaction with education at San Francisco State, even though it is regarded as the best and most progressive college in the state.

BSU strike leaders say they hope the black studies program for which they are fighting will "act as a vanguard for educational change." They say students want "an education that is relevant to us. Students are saying, 'We're not part of the elite and education for the elite is not relevant to us.' "

The students say education for non-whites would make them capable of being leaders in their ethnic communities, not educate them to fit better into the white man's world. What the white students want is an education that will let them examine all ideas--including George Murray's--and not just indoctrinate them to accept the status quo.

Some of these issues are complex and difficult, but the faculty and administration have been trying to resolve them. The faculty has asked that Chancellor Dumke rescind his order to suspend Murray, and that all faculty positions for the black studies department be filled. They also called two convocations to discuss the issues.

FUNDS NEEDED ALSO

Smith, too, seemed to want to try and solve some of the problems, but he was hampered in many ways.

One was funds. The administration says the college will wind up $400,000 in the hole at the end of the year, even without doing anything about the student demands. Smith said it will take $1.5 to $2 million "to dig ourselves out of the existing deficit and have elbow room next spring in which to extend our operations."

The striking students do not believe that, however. They note that the administration managed to find $17,000 to run an athletic program after the student government withdrew its support. "It's not a matter of funds," one student wrote in the daily newspaper being published by the strikers. "It's a matter of will."

They also think Black Studies is important enough to drain off money from other departments, while the administration says it doesn't want to hurt other programs.

Smith says another of his problems was his perspective as "a social liberal." He explains that problem this way: "Some styles of action are outside my view of institutions. I think we need to cope with the needs that minority groups have outlined, but I disagree that it is necessary to revolutionize the entire institution." As he points out, that theory is directly contrary to the views of militant students. "There is no room for social liberals any more," says one of the students.

TRUSTEES BIGGEST PROBLEM

But Smith's biggest problem was the state college trustees.

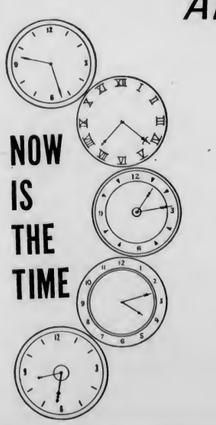
The trustees are much more susceptible to the influence of Governor Ronald Reagan and other leaders of California's right-wing Republican leadership than are even the University of California Regents. One reason may be that they are appointed for eight-year terms, instead of for 16 years as are the regents. They are thus more subject to political pressures.

Reagan has dismissed the San Francisco State crisis as the work of a few "professional agitators." He said some of the students' demands are "utterly ridiculous," and has refused to acknowledge that there may be deeper problems or real grievances behind the strike.

Similarly, the trustees have been almost entirely unwilling to discuss the issues behind the strike. When they held a meeting on Nov. 18 they did discuss black studies, but at the end of the morning session Reagan said, "Our purpose here is to get that college re-opened."

That was the last that was heard of the Black Studies department.

Smith commented after the meeting that the trustees' failure to deal with the issues demonstrated "how hard it is for them to consider the implications when we talk about a college trying to function in a revolutionary urban context."



Worst of all, the trustees' zealousness to keep the campus open has castrated two attempts by Smith, faculty and students to try to resolve the issues through discussion at campus-wide convocations.

The first convocation broke up in campus violence because of the trustees' order that classes be kept open. The faculty had voted to call off classes, and the student strike leaders agreed to participate in the convocation on that condition. When they found out Smith had ordered classes to continue, they first objected, then stalked out trying to shut down the school again. More violence resulted, that could have been avoided if Smith had had the option of calling off classes--an option denied by Reagan and the trustees.

Mark Rudd Tentatively Rejected After Pre-induction Physical

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) - Mark Rudd, leader of last spring's Columbia student revolt, was tentatively rejected for military service here Monday after a pre-induction physical.

Major Clement St. Martin of the Army Administration Center in Newark said Rudd could be ordered back for another examination in 30 days.

Major St. Martin said he cannot disclose the ailment that doctors discovered in examining the leftist student leader.

Rudd promised at a news conference last week he would go into the Army and continue his revolutionary activities if found qualified after the examination.

Rudd, 21, lost his student deferment and was reclassified 1-A after he was suspended from Columbia. He said at that time he would seek an occupational deferment as a "revolutionary." His appeal was denied.

He is the son of a retired Army colonel.

Focus on Student Problems In Next Issue of SPECTRUM

The next issue of SPECTRUM, the UMass magazine of general interest, is now being prepared, according to Editor-in-Chief Barbara Ditkoff. The magazine is supported by the Student Activities Tax and is made available free to all undergraduates. Contributions to the magazine come from students, faculty, and former members of the university community.

The upcoming SPECTRUM will focus on student problems.

Additional members for all the SPECTRUM staffs are being sought. Miss Ditkoff said that a publicity manager and a business manager are urgently needed. Recruits for the fiction, non-fiction, poetry, art, photo, and layout staffs are also needed.

Anyone interested in joining are asked to attend a meeting tonight at 6:00 in the Council Chambers of the Student Union.

YanCon Hoop Teams Prep For Start

MASSACHUSETTS-Coach Jack Leaman's Redmen are slight pre-season favorites. Good height and depth. Must replace Tindall, last year's leading scoring and rebounder. Ray Ellerbrook (15.6), Peter Gayeska (9.2), and Joey DiSarcina (9.2) are the returning starters. Juniors Jack Gallagher, John Shockro, Dick Samuelson, and Dennis Chapman will also see plenty of action. Top sophomores-Ken Mathias, Bob Dempsey, and Billy Greely.

RHODE ISLAND-Tom Carmody, former freshman coach at Duke, takes control. Last year's co-champions along with UMass will be trying to replace Art Stephenson and Larry Johnson with Junior College transfers. Big John Fultz, only sure starter. Frontline could also include JC grads Ron Louder, 6'8, and Claude 'Snowflake" English, 6'4. Veterans Joe Zaranka. Mike Schanne, Leon Mintischenko and Joe VanOudenhove return in backcourt. A year away from great team, but good enough to win this year. Top sophomores-5'5 Ed 'The Flea" Molloy, and 6'6 Bud Hagard.

VERMONT-Art Lochel lost only Bill Librera from last year's unit. Backcourt of Dave Lapointe and Frank Martiniuk returns along with center Aldo Salati and reserve Bob Hutton. 6'6 Ray Bueb has had middle-ear problem, so one forward spot is still open. Last year's leading freshmen, Dick Liela and Steve Kars may not be playing for academic reasons, Earl Seligman could be key reserve. Top sophomores-6'4 Tom Clay, 6'4 Mike Device, and 6'2 Earl Seligman.

CONNECTICUT -More headaches for Burr Carlson! Graduation of Bill Corley leaves the Huskies without good big man for the first time in memory. JC grad Steve Koski, senior Gerry Bilodeau, and junior Tony Budzinsky will do their best at the post. Co-captains Jack Melen and Fred Malan are only sure starters. Bob Staak, transfer from St. John's, has good outside shot. Top sophomores-Forward Ron Hrubala and guards Lou Glayer, Bob Boyd, Tom McCrocklin, and Dave Yager.

Gymnasts Open Season Tonight

BY JAN CURLEY
Assistant Managing Editor

With their sights set on bettering their fifth place standing in Eastern competition last year, the varsity gymnastics team will open its season tonight at Southern Connecticut at 7:30 p.m.

Coach Eric Kjeldsen has a talented group of sophomores, but warns, "We lost a lot of experience through graduations, and you can't replace that. But we have the talent in the sophomores." At this first meet, it will be up to the sophomores to show they can stand up under the varsity competition.

Returning from last year's team will be the co-captains, Dick Del Gallo and Mike Kasavana. Del Gallo competes in the floor exercises and rings, and Kasavana in the floor exercises and long horse.

George Siebert competing on the rings and the horizontal bars is another returnee from last year. Bill Estes, who lettered as a sophomore, but did not compete last year is also expected to see some action.

Joe Reed was last year's outstanding all around man and he will have some help from Norm Vexler, a sophomore. "He shows promise of becoming an outstanding all around man," said Coach Kjeldsen.

The junior nucleus consists of Frank Dean, side horse; Steve Cary, parallel bars and long horse; and Don Bradbury on the horizontal bars.

In addition to Vexler, the sophomore contingent features Rick Riley, side horse; Bill MacAuley, floor exercises and Mile Pelouin, rings and parallel bars.

Ed Jones, Robert Henry, Glenn Seibert, and Bob Therique will all see regular competition and Dana Hastings, Steve Margil and Lewis Benn will see some spot competition.

DETERMINED COACH-Varsity wrestling coach Homer Barr will lead his third team into combat this afternoon in a match with Coast Guard at New London, Conn. Barr may have his best team yet, because last year's New England frosh champs are eligible for the varsity.

Second Half Redmen Explosion Dumps Rider, 78-49

VOL. XCVII NO. 58
TUESDAY, DECEMBER 3, 1968

Gayeska, Mathias Shine Zone Defense Effective

By MIKE CURRAN
Sports Editor

TRENTON, N.J.-A UMass second-half rally turned into a rout as the Redmen, unveiling a devastating zone defense, crushed Rider College, 78-49, before 1200 at Alumni Gymnasium Saturday night.

UMass started slowly. Co-Captains Peter Gayeska and Joe DiSarcina were the whole show in the early going. 6'10" center Gayeska scored ten points in the first ten minutes, mostly on rebounds shots.

Rider, with some good out side shooting by Rich Wallace and Ed Wenker, held a small lead for much of the half. The Redmen seemed a little jittery in their debut and were getting outhustled by the smaller opponents.

At one point the hometown Broncs put a string of eight points together to give them a 23-20 lead, but outside shots by Dennis Chapman and Ray Ellerbrook kept the game in reach.

Rider's Jim Barrett and Redmen sophomore Kenny Mathias traded first varsity hoops to keep the visitors up by one, then Wallace canned a 12-footer with four seconds remaining to give the Broncs a 31-30 intermission edge.

The second half was a different ball game. UMass was literally all over its opponent on defense. Rider had trouble getting off shots and when they did shoot, they missed.

Mathias hit the boards with a vengeance. Two follow-ups by him, a 20-footer by Jack Gallagher, and a hook by Gayeska pushed the visitors into a 44-37 lead.

With 13 minutes to go Gayeska picked up his fourth foul and it looked like the young Redmen would have to go without one of their leaders. They were up for the occasion, however, and three minutes later rattled off 12 points in a row to burst the game wide open at 59-43.

Mathias picked up eight of these points on these points on two buckets and four free throws. Center Dick Samuelson and reserve guard Dick Starsiak each canned a hoop.

Another string of points, this one good for eight, put the game on ice. A pretty hook by Gallagher accounted for the markers to make it 67-45.

Rider struggled desperately to get back, but they only succeeded in giving the visitors more foul shooting practice. Chapman and Bob Dempsey picked up four and three free throws respectively.

Hoops by Frank Schaffeld and John Dreyer closed out the scoring, leaving UMass with a convincing, yet well-earned 78-49 victory.

DOUBLE DRIBBLES-DiSarcina battled the flu all day Saturday, but still turned in a scrappy performance. Ride shot 56% in the first half and 2?% in the second. And who said defense doesn't pay off?...UMass went 27 for 60 from the floor and 24 for 35 from the line...Gayeska and Mathias each hauled down 11 rebounds...The Redmen had a staggering height advantage. UMass front line, 6'10, 6'6, 6'5-Rider 6'5, 6'4, 6'4...Red Raiders mopped up in the last four minutes.

THE PRODUCERS - Peter Gayeska (left) and Kenny Mathias combined for 30 points and 22 rebounds in Saturday's win against Rider.

Quintet Eagerly Awaits Home Opener With AIC

by peter pascarelli
Assistant Sports Editor

With one win under their belt the UMass basketball team and their coach Jack Leaman prepared for their home opener tomorrow night with American International.

Leaman paused to reflect on this year's edition of the Redmen, a team many people believe to be the finest UMass hoop contingent in years. The third year coach surprised a lot of people last season bringing the Redmen to a share of the Yankee Conference title, with an 8-2 Conference mark while posting a 14-11 overall record.

But the former Boston University star hopes for more this season. He says, "We are aiming to win at least 15 this year, and want the whole piece of the Conference title."

The coach was faced with a problem going into the first game. His team was in shape, but Leaman was a bit pessimistic that the Redmen had been ready for too long. Leaman said, "I was scared we'd be ready a little too soon and it has been a mental problem because we had been so anxious to start. But this team is ready."

Everyone knows that the biggest void to be filled was the hole left by Bill Tindall, who ended his great career as the second leading scorer in UMass history. What a lot of people do forget is that the Redmen lost three other forwards by the graduation, Gary Gapserack, Jim Girotti, and Rick Perkins.

Leaman says he has three men to fill the two starting spots. They are junior Jack Gallagher, sophomore Ken Mathias who was leading scorer in Saturday's win and transfer Dennis Chapman.

Leaman says that Chapman has worked into the UMass system "real well". He added that he will use John Shockro up front as a "trouble shooter" and also use John Dreyer. Leaman said of Dreyer, "he has played very well in spots."

The Redmen are set with starters back and Connecticut, who in Leaman's words, "had the best freshman in the Conference last year." Leaman added, "UMass will be tough too."

The Redman coach is optimistic about this team. He says, "I doubt if this is as good as the 1963-64 team which was 15-9, but if these young kids come around, we are going to be all right. We have good personnel."

Leaman however, made a sort of appeal to the students when he said, "We need spirit from the team but we also need spirit from student body. The greatest experience I have had up here was last year's Rhode Island game up here, when we had such a great crowd and came up with an outstanding performance."

In line with student support, the class of 1971 will sponsor a rally for the team tonight at 7 p.m. at the South Terrace of the Student Union. Leaman and his squad will attend as will Associate Dean of Students Mark Noffsinger.

Sophomore class president Joe Tobacco promises firewords, participation from the Revelers, Patriots, Scrolls and Maroon Keys, pieces of the UMass band, and special effects. It is Sendoff weekend and the UMass hoop team should get a good send off tonight.

Hockey Team Divides In Opening Two Battles

By KEN SCHWARTZ
Staff Reporter

After beating Lowell Tech last Tuesday night, 11-2, the UMass Varsity Hockey team narrowly missed upsetting Colby College on Saturday in Waterville, Maine, before losing 2-1.

The Redmen had Colby on the ropes in the first period on the strength of Charley Hanifan's fourth goal in only two games.

The second period proved to be disasterous for UMass as they could only put three shots on the Colby goal while the Mules were busy getting both of their scores, the second of which came when the Redmen were playing with one man short.

According to UMass coach Jack Canniff, Sophomore Goalie Larry Walsh played an outstanding game for the Redmen. He made 29 saves while allowing but two goals.

The Varsity was almost even with Colby in shooting as they had 26 shots on net, 23 of which came in the first and third periods, and no less than three UMass shots hit the inside post of the Colby goal.

Last Tuesday night was a different story. The Redmen scored 6 goals in the first period and coasted on to an 11-2 win over Lowell Tech.

Most students attended regular classes for the second day since the strife-torn college was reopened Monday.

Dr. S. I. Hayakawa, named acting president after President Robert Smith resigned last week, vowed to keep classes open with whatever force was needed.

The campus has been shaken by violence since Nov. 6 when the Black Students Union called a strike supported by the students for a Democratic Society and the non-caucasian Third World Liberation Front.

The most bitter struggles yet seen erupted at lunchtime when dissidents attempted to storm a class building, erected barricades around a speakers' platform, and showered police with rocks, half-bricks and broken furniture.

"If there is no reduction in tension there will be no reduction in force," Dr. Hayakawa told a late afternoon news conference.

"I am determined to break up this reign of terror.

"It has been a rough day for students and faculty, who are trying to continue the educational process, for police, who are trying to keep peace on campus, and for anarchists who have dropped their disguise of interest in constructive change..."

The strikers are demanding an autonomous Black Studies Department, admission of all non-white students regardless of educational background, and reinstatement of Black Panther George Murray as a teacher and graduate student.

Police Officials Were Often Unable To Control Their Men

During the week of the Democratic National Convention, the Chicago police were the targets of mounting provocation by both word and act. It took the form of obscene epithets, and of rocks, sticks, bathroom tiles and even human feces hurled at police by demonstrators. Some of these acts had been planned; others were instantaneous or were themselves provoked by police action. Furthermore, the police had been put on edge by widely published threats of attempts to disrupt both the city and the Convention.

That was the nature of the provocation. The nature of the response was unrestrained and indiscriminate police violence on many occasions, particularly at night.

That violence was made all the more shocking by the fact that it was often inflicted upon persons who had broken no law, disobeyed no order, made no threat. These included peaceful demonstrators onlookers, and large numbers of residents who were simply passing through, or happened to live in, the areas where confrontations were occurring.

Newsmen and photographers were singled out for assault, and their equipment deliberately damaged. Fundamental police training was ignored; and officers, when on the scene, were often unable to control their men. As one police officer put it: "What happened didn't have anything to do with police work."

The violence reached its culmination on Wednesday night.

A report prepared by an inspector from the Los Angeles Police Department, present as an official observer, while generally praising the police restraint he had observed in the parks during the week, said this about the events that night:

"There is no question but that many officers acted without restraint and exerted force beyond that necessary under the circumstances. The leadership at the point of conflict did little to prevent such conduct and the direct control of officers by first line supervisors was virtually nonexistent."

He is referring to the police-crowd confrontation in front of the Conrad Hilton Hotel. Most Americans know about it, having seen the 17-minute sequence played and replayed on their television screens.

But most Americans do not know that the confrontation was followed by even more brutal incidents in the Loop side streets. Or that it had been preceded by comparable instances of indiscriminate police attacks on the North Side a few nights earlier when demonstrators were cleared from Lincoln Park and pushed into the streets and alleys of Old Town.

How did it start? With the emergence long before convention week of three factors which figured significantly in the outbreak of violence. These were: threats to the city; the city's response; and the conditioning of Chicago police to expect that violence against demonstrators, as against rioters, would be condoned by city officials.

The threats to the City were varied. Provocative and inflammatory statements, made in connection with activities planned for convention week, were published and widely disseminated. There were also intelligence reports from informants.

Some of this information was absurd, like the reported plan to contaminate the city's water supply with LSD, but some were serious; and both were strengthened by the authorities' lack of any mechanism for distinguishing one from the other.

More Clashes at San Fran. State As Most Students Attend Class

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) - Student strikers, enraged at the reopening of San Francisco State College, stoned police Tuesday and in return were bloodied by swinging clubs in a wild afternoon of intermittent clashes.

Five policement and three other persons were injured.

Police arrested 20.

About 300 activists among the college's 18,000 students appeared to be involved, with up to 2,000 others as onlookers or underfoot in the milling mob scenes on the main quadrangle.

Police Chief Disagrees With Walker Report

CHICAGO (AP) - Chicago's police chief disagreed Tuesday with Walker report criticism of his force and urged Chicagoans to read the report and reach their own conclusions.

"I am confident that the overwhelming majority of Chicagoans will agree with me that the police performed well in a most difficult period in our city's history," Police Supt. James B. Conlisk said in a written statement.

The report on street violence during the Democratic National Convention in August described the disturbances as "a police riot." Daniel Walker, committee chairman who made the report, agreed that demonstrators provoked police to attack them but said "the weight of violence was overwhelming on the side of the police."

Walker urged that offending policemen be purged from the force lest violence be repeated at confrontations with dissenters yet to come.

"I reject Mr. Walker's conclusion that the police were the rioters of convention week," Conlisk said in his statement.

"To speak of 'a police riot' is to distort the history of those days in August," he added. "The world knows who the rioters were."

"My disagreement with Mr. Walker should not be interpreted

Education Student-Faculty Group Exchanges Ideas on New Ed. Courses

By JOHN HICKEY News Editor

Mark Cheren explained the content of a new course, the Fuller-McLuhan Experience, which will attempt to examine the messages of Buckminster Fuller and Marshall McLuhan as twentieth-century generalists who have something of import to say in regard to education. A group will carry on a discussion on stage before the larger group, in an effort to combine the best of small-group learning with large-scale participation.

A number of new approaches to the standard education block will be tried next semester. Richard Konicek said that there will be six alternative "blocks" for elementary ed teachers and several for secondary education teachers.

Liberty School in Springfield will accept sixteen interns from UMass, who will live in Springfield and teach there five days a week, under local supervision. Another group of interns will live and teach in Hartford, under the supervision of five UMass doctoral candidates who will serve as administrative interns.

The secondary education block will consist of one hour of lecture, the remainder of the time being spent in micro-teaching. Students from the Amherst-Pelham area schools will participate as subjects for the practice teachers.

Students and faculty members from the School of Education and other departments packed the Education Auditorium last night to exchange ideas on several of the new and proposed courses to be offered in the School of Education next semester. Spokesmen for the various courses presented brief outlines of their plans for next semester in the informal and progressive style that is becoming increasingly characteristic of the new School of Education.

Jeff Wood, president of the Education Club, which sponsored last night's Student-Faculty Night, announced that the planning committees now operating in the School of Education are open to everyone and encouraged strong student participation.

Bob Andrews outlined the material to be covered in a new Problems in Special Education course, which will serve as an introduc-

UMass Theatre Present The Tragedy "The Changeling", A Rare Opportunity

The UMass Theatre announces that its box office is open for sale of tickets to "The Changeling", a Jacobean tragedy by Thomas Middleton and William Rowley.

'This is the strangest trick to know a maid by!", says Jasperino, in 'The Changeling," opening at the UMass Theatre on December 11. Whether Jasperino is speaking of masquerades, murder, or "virginity tests", "The Changeling" is full of "strange tricks".

The director of this production, Gary Stewart, sees "The Changeling" as a taut, penetrating, and subtle psychological study principally of two characters (Beatrice and DeFlores), how they work on one another and how they relate to a particular society. Beatrice has been characterized as a pampered, irresponsible child with adolescent notions of love and life. She is too ingenious to understand the pathology of a man like DeFlores, too amoral to know that murder is a nasty business, too immature to realize that acts have consequences. DeFlores, on the other hand, is clearly a pathological type, a study in abnormal sexuality.

This production affords a rare opportunity to area residents and to students of the history and literature of England, for it will be richly costumed and performed as an important part of the heritage of the English-speaking portions of the world.

"The Changeling" is considered by many critics to be one of the great tragedies of the Elizabethan drama. T. S. Eliot says of the play: " . . . in the moral essence of tragedy . . . in this play Middleton is surpassed by one Elizabethan alone, and that is Shakespeare."

"The Changeling" by Thomas Middleton and William Rowley, will be presented in Bartlett Auditorium, December 11 through December 14 at 8:30 p.m. Tickets are on sale at the Box Office from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. weekdays and from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. on the days of performance (telephone 545-2579). Students - $1.50, Others - $2.00.

tion to special education and delve into the psychology of the mentally retarded and emotionally disturbed.

Poetry in Education, a new course conducted under the direction of Lloyd Kline, will consider the message of the avante-garde arts and their relationship to education.

Other courses discussed at the Student-Faculty meeting were the Non-School, Urban School Curricula, and Education 2000: The Living Theatre. Atron Gentry spoke about The Fire Next Time, a race relations course to be offered in the School of Ed.

Experimental courses will explore such diverse topics as self-realization through group confrontations, the sexual myth involved in black-white male-female relationships, and the possibility of establishing a center for student community and a research control center.

Speech Dept. Offers Special Courses Dealing with Race

The Department of Speech will offer two special courses in the Spring semester, 1969.

THE NEGRO
IN THE AMERICAN THEATRE
Doris E. Abramson

This course will be concerned with the black man's contributions to all aspects of the American theatre, playwriting, acting, and staging. The African influences in the American Theatre, and the image of the Negro as projected in the work of white playwrights, early black playwrights, and the current group of angry young black playwrights will be examined.

Miss Abramson, Ph. D in theatre history from Columbia University, is the Author of NEGRO PLAYWRIGHTS I N THE AMERICAN THEATRE, 1925-1959 which will be published this spring by Columbia University Press.

Undergraduate students should register for Speech 387. Graduate students should register for Speech 709.

RHETORIC OF RACIAL CONFLICT IN THE UNITED STATES
Jay Savereid

The Course will start with and emphasize events since World War II. The needed framework for rhetorical analysis and criticism will be established early so that there can be systematic treatment of the writing and speaking of major figures, such as Martin Luther King, Stokeley Carmichael, Presidents of the United States, and others. Following the concern with mid-twentieth century persuasion, the study will turn to rhetorical events of the preceding 100 years; the anti-slavery movement and subsequent persuasive efforts.

Mr. Savereid, associate professor of Speech and formerly assistant dean of the College of Arts and Sciences has followed personally and studied closely the rhetoric of those people and groups who are committed to the struggle for racial equality in the United States. He began his teaching career in 1947 at Wesleyan University in Connecticut, and taught at Cornell and Smith before coming to the University of Massachusetts in 1956.

Undergraduate Students should register for Speech 386, Graduate students should register for Speech 708.

Enrollment in these courses will be limited to juniors and seniors according to the following priorities:

1. Senior speech majors
2. Seniors
3. Juniors (if the course is over-enrolled, juniors will be selected on a random basis)

Volpe Sharply Declines Comment on Cabinet Post

BOSTON (AP) - Gov. John A. Volpe in a brief but sharp exchange with newsmen, declined Tuesday to comment on published reports he has been offered the post of Secretary of Transportation in the cabinet of President-elect Richard M. Nixon.

"I do not intend to talk about, or comment in any way on the reported cabinet post for the governor of this Commonealth," Volpe said. "I have absolutely no comment at all and that's the end of that question."

Reports have been current for weeks that Volpe would be appointed to a high post in the Nixon administration.

Back in the spring Volpe had his name entered in the Massachusetts Presidential Primary to run as a favorite son candidate for president. He had his sights set then on a nomination for vice president.

Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller of New York prevailed over Volpe as a write-in candidate on April 30, the day he announced his intention to seek the presidential nomination.

Volpe continued working for the Nixon Candidacy, however, and at the Miami Beach, Fla., convention it was reported he was among the half dozen finalists under consideration by Nixon.

During the campaign Volpe traveled widely campaigning for Nixon, particularly in areas which had strong concentrations of Italian voters. Volpe, a self-made millionaire in the construction business is the son of Italian immigrant parents.

Volpe said he talked with U. S. Sen. Edward W. Brooke, R-Mass., after Brooke's meeting with Nixon and refusal of a cabinet post, but declined to say anything else.

The governor spent most of the half-hour news conference in a defense of the public welfare department and a report on his plans to hold down costs.

Roxbury School Erupts Against White Principle

BOSTON (AP) - The troubled Martin Luther King Jr. school in Boston's Roxbury section shut down again Tuesday when violence erupted during a white principal's first day on the job.

Officials say the violence included five false alarms, screens stripped from windows, fights in a cafeteria, trays of food being thrown about and doors torn from hinges.

Principal John Bradley ordered everyone out of the building 30 minutes before classes were to end.

Bradley had visited each classroom during the morning to introduce himself.

One teen-ager, asked the cause for the violence, said "we asked for a black principal and they sent us a white one."

The school reopened just recently through a grade-at-a-time process after earlier violence had closed the facility, which has a dominantly Negro enrollment.

Report Cites Daley's Previous "Shoot to Kill" Order

The second factor-the city's response-matched, in numbers and logistics at least, the demonstrators' threats.

The city, fearful that the "leaders" would not be able to control their followers, attempted to discourage an inundation of demonstrators by not granting permits for marches and rallies and by making it quite clear that the "law" would be enforced.

Government-Federal, state and local-moved to defend itself from the threats, both imaginary and real. The preparations were detailed and far ranging: from stationing firemen at each alarm box within a six block radius of the Amphi-theatre to staging U.S. Army armored personnel carriers in Soldier Field under Secret Service control.

Six thousand Regular Army troops in full field gear, equipped with rifles, flame throwers, and bazookas were airlifted to Chicago on Monday, Aug. 26. About 6000 Illinois National Guard troops had already been activated to assist the 12,000 member Chicago Police Force.

Of course, the Secret Service could never afford to ignore threats of assassination of Presidential candidates. Neither could the city, against the background of riots in 1967 and 1968, ignore the ever-present threat of ghetto riots, possibly sparked by large numbers of demonstrators, during convention week.

The third factor emerged in the city's position regarding the riots following the death of Dr. Martin Luther King and the Apr. 27th peace march to the Civic Center in Chicago.

The police were generally credited with restraint in handling the first riots-but Mayor Daley rebuked the Superintendent of Police. While it was later modified, his widely disseminated "shoot to kill arsonists and shoot to maim looters" order undoubtedly had an effect.

The effect on police became apparent several weeks later, when they attacked demonstrators, bystanders and media representatives at a Civic Center peace march. There were published criticisms, but the city's response was to ignore the police violence.

That was the background. On Aug. 18, 1968, the advance contingent of demonstrators arrived in Chicago and established their base, as planned, in Lincoln Park on the city's Near North Side. Throughout the week, they were joined by others-some from the Chicago area, some from states as far away as New York and California.

On the weekend before the convention began, there were about 2000 demonstrators in Lincoln Park; the crowd grew to about 10,000 by Wednesday.

There were, of course, the hippies-the long hair and love beads, the calculated unwashedness, the flagrant banners, the open love-making and disdain for the constraints of conventional society. In dramatic effect, both visual and vocal, these dominated a crowd whose members actually differed widely in physical appearance, in motivation, in political affiliation, in philosophy.

The crowd included Yippies come to "do their thing," youngsters working for a political candidate, professional people with dissenting political views, anarchists and determined revolutionaries, motorcycle gangs, black activists, young thugs, police and Secret Service undercover agents. There were demonstrators waving the Viet Cong flag and the red flag of revolution and there were the simply curious who came to watch and, in many cases, became willing or unwilling participants.

The Walker Report says the nature of the police response to the demonstrators was "unrestrained." The report calls the action on the part of the policemen a "Police Riot."

To characterize the crowd, then, as entirely Hippy-Yippie, entirely "New Left," entirely anarchist, or entirely youthful political dissenters is both wrong and dangerous. The stereotyping that did occur helps to explain the emotional reaction of both police and public during and after the violence that occurred.

Despite the presence of some revolutionaries, the vast majority of the demonstrators were intent on expressing by peaceful means their dissent either from society generally or from the administrations's policies in Vietnam.

But while it is clear that most of the protesters in Chicago had no intention of initiating violence, this is not to say that they did not expect it to develop.

NES, King Council Are Sponsoring Tutoring Program Dispite Problems

The Martin Luther King Jr. Social Action Council has been sponsoring a tutoring program in Springfield in conjunction with NES (Northern Educational Services.)

The program began early in the semester when Jeanette Harris of NES visited the University campus to address a meeting of interested students called together by the King Council. Mrs. Harris explained that NES tutored underprivileged children in grades 1 through 12. The tutoring is done in neighborhood centers spread throughout Springfield, and helps children of many ethnic backgrounds.

Most centers are located in predominately Black or Puerto Rican sections of the city, but others draw large numbers of children from other national groups.

Presently about 200 volunteers make the trip each week to tutoring centers in Riverview, on Main, Dwight, Hancock, and Westminister Streets, and at the Girls Club in Springfield. The others have been placed on a waiting list, and as more students come into the centers for tutoring, new volunteers are contacted.

According to Gil Salk, Executive Secretary of the King Council, "the NES tutoring program actively involves more students than any other semester-or year-long program on campus. It shows better than words could ever tell that there are a number of students who do care about the welfare of others, and are willing to work for it."

Although it is working well, the program is facing two major problems - transporting volunteers to Springfield, and maintaining contact with individual tutors to deal with specific difficulties which may arise. Evening meetings with tutors are being scheduled in the Student Union to discuss tutoring problems. The first meeting was last night. The other will be Thursday, Dec. 5 at 7:30 p.m. in the Plymouth Room.

The transportation problem has been solved, somewhat sketchily, by the temporary acquisition of an old school bus. However, it breaks down with disconcerting frequency, and several trips have had to be canceled as a result. In addition, the King Council faces the major expense of paying for a driver and for gas for the bus. Neither item was sufficiently budgeted for this academic year, and the Council is actively seeking approximately $4000 to cover these costs. Contributions may be sent to the Council's office in Room 207, Hampshire House.

U.S. Troops in Battle Near Cambodian Border

SAIGON (AP) - Troops of the U.S. 1st Air Cavalry Division fought a bloody battle Tuesday with a North Vietnamese army battalion near the Cambodian border.

American headquarters said first reports indicate 23 Americans were killed and 52 were wounded in the four-hour clash. Enemy losses were unknown.

While the ground action flared on the hottest current battleground of the war, two new incidents were reported in the demilitarized zone. In one of them, the big 16-inch guns of the battleship New Jersey were called into help blast enemy positions.

The fighting that involved the Air Cavalrymen broke out after a company-sized unit made a helicopter assault landing into a heavily jungled area about 70 miles north of Saigon.

Soon after landing, the troopers were hit by heavy small-arms, automatic weapons, rocket grenades and mortar fire. Under this blanket of fire, the North Vietnamese troops launched several ground assaults. Associated Press photographer Richard Merron reported from the field that the cavalry lines were broken at least once, but that all the attacks were beaten back.

In the demilitarized zone, U.S. reconnaissance planes were fired on for the third consecutive day, headquarters said.

Two incidents - the 31st and 32nd considered significant since the Nov. 1 bombing halt of North Vietnam - were announced during the day. It was the first time the New Jersey had fired into the zone since the attacks against North Vietnam itself were stopped Nov. 1.

Spokesmen said no American aircraft were hit in either of the incidents Tuesday.

Viet Cong Ridicules Plan Calling Guerrillas To Saigon

PARIS (AP) - A Viet Cong spokesman rejected Tuesday as "ridiculous" a reported South Vietnamese plan calling for the guerrillas to rally to the side of the Saigon government.

In the middle of this verbal jockeying, an advance party of the South Vietnamese delegation arrived and U. S. sources said it was hoped the enlarged peace talks could begin next week.

Government sources in Saigon said the plan to be submitted to the first four-party talks would provide for scale-down of the fighting, supervised withdrawal of North Vietnamese troops from the South along with a cutback of U. S. forces and a "rallying" of the Viet Cong to the government.

"That's ridiculous, very ridiculous," said a spokesman for the National Liberation Front, the Viet Cong's political arm.

"The puppet administration of Saigon represents no one. It is the creation of the United States. The National Liberation Front is the legitimate representative of the South Vietnamese people..... I find these proposals scarcely realistic."

The front has said it will refuse to negotiate with the South Vietnamese delegation when the expanded talks get under way. South Vietnam has said it will talk only to North Vietnam, not the front. The North Vietnamese say they do not recognize the Saigon government.

The Viet Cong statement underscored the wide gap between the North Vietnamese and the front on one side and South Vietnamese on the other as they approach what may be months of tough bargaining while the fighting rages on in South Vietnam.

South Vietnam's delegation of 10 or so is expected to be on hand by this weekend. Ambassador Pham Dang Lam, delegation chief who has been South Vietnam's observer at the U.S. - North Vietnamese talks since May, is expected Thursday or Friday.

Vice President Nguyen Cao Ky, a hard-liner who will not be a delegate but will have a supervisory role, is expected over the weekend, South Vietnamese sources said.

U. S. Ambassador Cyrus R. Vance advanced preliminary arrangements by conferring with Nguyen Van An, Lam's deputy in Paris. Presumable, the allies went over proposals Vance passed on to the North Vietnamese at a secret session Monday.

Nigeria....
Political Barriers Hinder Relief Efforts

PROVIDENCE, R. I. (AP) - Undersecretary of State Nicholas Katzenbach accused Tuesday both sides of the Nigerian Civil War of having erected "political hurdles" hindering humanitarian efforts to bring relief for starving children.

"The suspicions and intransigence of both sides have brought us to the present situation, one that is more wretched and desperate than ever," Katzenbach said in a speech prepared for delivery.

Katzenbach devoted his entire speech to the Nigerian situation describing first the historical background of the civil war which erupted in the spring of 1967.

The real difficulty is, he said, that "the humanitarian aspects of the problem are hopelessly tied to its political aspects."

There is little the United States can do to help solve the basic questions and "our influence in the situation is quite definitely limited," the undersecretary declared.

The federal government's determination to maintain Nigeria's integrity, and the Biafran's desire to become independent must be "pre-eminently Nigerian and African."

Katzenbach spoke at Brown University.

Katzenbach endorsed the often criticized Brith decision to supply the Nigerian federal government with arms.

"I do not really see how they could have made any other choice ...if they had stopped their sale they would, in fact, be helping to support the dismemberment of a fellow commonwealth country."

But Katzenbach simultaneously assailed "other nations" which have provided arms to Biafra, thus prolonging the fighting. Although Katzenbach did not name the other nations, it is accepted as a fact that France is one of the major suppliers of arms to the secessionists.

Chicago Police Chief.....

as condoning any misconduct by any police officer," Conlisk continued. "In instances where there has been sufficient evidence of improper conduct there has been disciplinary action."

"Nine officers have been suspended," he reported. "A tenth officer who was recommended for suspension by the internal inspections division has resigned. Four officers have been recommended for discharge. Investigations of other complaints against police officers are still in progress."

J.F.K. Flame of Hope Candles Help The Retarded

A RETARDED WORKER seen working in one of the workshops where the art of candle molding is taught. The product is the John F. Kennedy Flame of Hope candle, a symbol of the hope being offered to mentally retarded workers.

"STOP...and consider for just one moment, please, the meaning of "Hope" to a retarded person. To them "Hope" is an opportunity to reach for the stars! It's a chance to work, to become skillful and productive and finally, when the rehabilitation is completely successful, "Hope" is going on to jobs in competitive employment.

Thus, the star, because it represents light and hope all over the world, has become the symbol of the aspirations of the retarded.

To give this opportunity and hope to retarded people...to train them to be proudly self-sufficient, twelve sheltered workshops have been founded throughout the country in which the ancient art of candle molding is expertly taught.

It's a meticulous process which requires a sound knowledge of pouring, molding, finishing, inspecting, packaging, plus many, many more responsibilities.

All these arts and skilled crafts the retarded have accomplished! And the star...that luminous symbol of emergency from the dark ages, is now in candle form...The John F. Kennedy Flame of Hope. Each long, gracefully tapered candle is molded by hands that are eager to bring to light the proven ability of the mentally retarded when they are given a creative, challenging job to do."-The Joseph P. Kennedy Jr. Foundation.

Gamma Sigma Sigma will be selling these candles all this week in the Student Union Lobby. They come in pairs, and we have them in red, green, white, and yellow. They make excellent Christmas gifts! Nicest of all is to know that most of the purchase price goes toward paying the salaries of the mentally retarded workers.

FLAME OF HOPE CANDLES are sold in pairs in red, green, white, and yellow. They are being sold by the sisters of Gamma Sigma Sigma this week in the Student Union lobby.

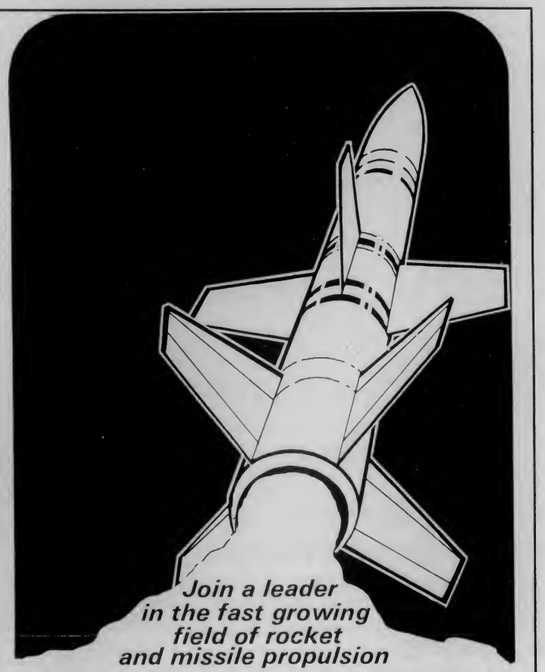
Gibbs School Offers Seniors Scholarships

Two national scholarships for college senior women are offered for 1969-1970 by the Katharine Gibbs School.

Each scholarship consists of full tuition ($1,450) for the secretarial training course, plus an additional cash award of $500, totaling $1,950.

Winners are chosen on the basis of academic record, need, and potential.

Application blanks may be obtained by writing to Memorial Scholarship Committee, Katharine Gibbs School, 200 Park Avenue, New York, New York 10017.



Amherst Experiments With New Finals Policy

The Amherst College faculty has authorized an unscheduled final examination period as a two-year experiment beginning at the end of the present semester in January.

Under the new regulations, proposed by the Student Council, there will be an eight-day examination period running from Sunday through Sunday. Instructors will provide their students with a copy of the examination before the period begins. Students will then complete the examination at any time during the period in their rooms or elsewhere or, if the instructor so indicates, in a designated examination center.

Instructors wishing students to take examinations at a given time and place, however, may continue to do so. And, if they prefer, they may schedule no final examinations at all.

Grad Students Hope To Help Select Firm for Security Investigation

Campus Security forces, sensitivity training and representation for graduate students on Faculty Senate committees and councils were the main topics of the meeting of the Graduate Student Senate Monday night in the Council Chambers of the Student Union.

The three topics were the subject of the report of the committee on academic affairs and the procedural code under the chairmanship of vice president David Yelton.

Yelton announced that the task of dealing with problems relating to the organization, procedures and activities of the campus security forces has been assigned to a subcommittee on human rights. Chairman of the new subcommittee is Herbert Nichols (computer science).

Nichols reported that the university administration is preparing to hire a consulting firm to study the entire security set-up here. He added that to his knowledge administration officials have consulted with graduate students on the project only to ask for suggestions for consulting firms which might be hired. Nichols said that his subcommittee is interested in gaining for the graduate students a say in the actual selection of the firm which will do the survey.

Yelton reported that the committee had surveyed the list of committees and councils connected with the Faculty Senate and was ready to propose to that body that it seat a total of 10 graduate students on two committees and two councils. He proposed the following representation: Master Planning (1), Student Affairs (2), Health Council (2) and Research Council (5). Such a representation would be in addition to the present representation on the Library committee and the Faculty Graduate Council. The proposal was approved by a voice vote.

On the subject of sensitivity training for graduate students the committee brought in a negative report on its immediate prospects. The committee felt that such programs were as yet not well defined, that to be done properly they required as much as 80 hours of each individual's time, that the local supply of trained guidance personnel necessary for a successful series was very limited and already in use.

In the discussion that followed the report, plans for a course of that nature to be given next semester in the school of education was mentioned from the floor. The course is expected to have a capacity of 600! The existence of 70 or 80 encounter groups already on campus and the existence of other informal groups on campus were noted.

A resolution offered by Sen. Mark Cheren (education) and tabled at the last meeting of the GSS which would require that graduate student senators take a sensitivity training course was resurrected. The proposal was again tabled and the subject was referred to the committee for further study and a report at the next meeting of the Graduate Student Senate.

The committee will re-examine the topic at its meeting today at 12:15 p.m. in E 36 B Machmer.

In other action, the Graduate Student Senate passed by voice vote a resolution by Senator James Thompson (government) that the body lend moral support to the University of Massachusetts Employees Federa l Credit Union.

President Thomas Minogue was instructed to oppose a proposal that the pass-fail option be allowed in graduate programs but only for students in master's degree programs. The body felt that the option should be available to all graduate students. Minogue reported that a proposal is scheduled to come before the Graduate Faculty Council which would grant departments permission to allow master's degree candidates to take courses worth up to a total of nine credits under a pass-fail grading system.

Senator Thompson was confirmed as the representative of the graduate students to the distinguished teacher award committee.

Secretary Michael Rosen announced that the new GSS office in Room 216 of the Student Union is expected to begin to operate during regular hours this week. The office will be open during posted hours on Tuesday and Thursday afternoons.

The next meeting of the Graduate Student Senate will be held on Monday, Dec. 16, at 8:30 p.m. in the Student Union.

18th Commercial Airliner Hijacked To Havana While On Route To Miami

(AP) - A National Airlines jet was refuled under a hijacker's waving gun late Tuesday and then forced to fly to Havana with its 28 passengers a crew of seven.

The big jet was seized while making a final landing approach at Miami, the last scheduled stop on a flight that originated in New York.

Caught short by the unexpected arrival of the big Boeing 727, Key West authorities quickly obtained jet fuel - which is not kept at the small commercial airport - from a nearby Navy facility and resupplied the aircraft as the gunman stood watch in the jet's cockpit.

One hour, 20 minutes after landing in Key West, the National jet took off for Havana - becoming the 18th commercial airliner hijacked to the Cuban capital this year.

Ironically the plane was forced to circle the Havana airport to burn off some of the fuel it had taken on at Key West. It landed at Jose Marti Airport at 7:15 p.m.

A lone gunman descended the steps and was whisked away in a car by security officials.

Three hours later Cuban authorities cleared the plane for an immediate return to Miami. It departed Havana at 9:50 p.m. for an estimated 30-minute flight to the Florida city.

It was not immediately determined if the passengers were permitted to leave Havana. If past patterns are followed, the passengers will come later aboard a charter flight.

Federal, city and county officers stood watch as the plane waited at Key West, but made no attempt to board it.

Traffic control officials at Key West said the pilot requested that the field be cleared after he landed. No one departed the plane while it was on the ground.

The Priorities of Change

The University of Massachusetts is rapidly changing. It has probably changed more in the past fifteen years than in all of its previous ninety years. But what has changed?

Change is very visible around the UMass campus but, one must wonder if there is any change deeper down than the mud which a student must constantly slosh through. The Amherst campus of the University of Massachusetts has undoubtedly changed and will undoubtedly continue to change -- but a campus is nothing more than a conglomeration of buildings. Perhaps it is time for a bit more meaningful change. Perhaps the mud and dust thrown up by the wheels of the heavy machinery of expansion has blinded those who are in positions to make meaningful changes in this University.

Expansion seems to have become the dominant theme of change at UMass. But expansion is not necessarily progress. Many administrators at this University seem to be for expansion but, at the same time, what do they feel about progress? Most administrators seem to have taken no real position on academic reform. They seem to see their role as that of peacemakers-- not as that of leaders. Change does not seem to come from administrators for they are only here to keep the students "out-of-trouble", or at least so they seem to say.

We must wonder if the academic program has kept pace with the changing scenery. It is possible that students are required to take most of the same courses as those who attended the University ten years ago. For example, are we really meant to be "Physically Educated"? If one speaks with most administrators about the need for a change, they agree that something should be done, but none of them can point to any definite program being initiated. Most will say that committees are working on it, the agressive administrators may even direct you to specific committees. Everyone acknowledges the need for a broader academic program, but no one, or no committee, is willing to make the first definite breakthough, the first break with tradition.

Everyday we hear more and more about how today's young people are healthier, stronger, taller, more mature, more capable , and better educated than their parents were at the same age. Yet, we are chained to many of the same, traditional academic "necessities", in a world that has far advanced in technology and, hopefully, in humanity.

There is no indication that this trend is going to stop, or recede. Progress is the password of our generation, but perhaps a different type of progress than that which our parents speak of. Our parents want us to have it better than they ever did. We are pushed through high school to study, and of course, to get good grades; so that we can get into a good college. Then the grind for good grades continues, so that we can all get good jobs and make lots and lots of money. For what real or humane purpose few, if any, seem to know.

But values are rapidly changing. Being a college graduate does not necessarily presuppose that a person is aiming for a high paying job. Many young people are more worried about making a valid contribution to society than getting a lot of money.

It also seems to follow that more and more the main reason many are going to college, or staying there, is to get an education, not to train for a job. That task should beleft up to the employer. Granted, for one's life work, he should have enough background to make him capable of doing the work, but it is not only up to the school to provide job training. The role of the school should be more oriented towards making future citizens useful members of socity. The emphasis should be on using one's mind in creative ways rather than to regurgitate facts well enough to get a "good grade". Why can't students take courses that they are interested in, or that they are curious about, without fear of receiving the destructive forces of the infamous "F". Is not curiosity what education is all about? The role of education should be to improve society - not maintain it. We need creative thoughts not the stagnant thoughts of past traditions. What is the University of Massachusetts doing? Stagnating minds!

Robert R. Smith, former president of San Francisco State College, has stated that the main reason classes were cancelled for the past month was because of the college's " inability to resolve some of the social needs of students and of the turbulent community in which we operate." Again we must ask the question - What is the University of Massachusetts doing? --Stagnating society? It is certainly time for a "breakthrough" at UMass.

NEWS ANALYSIS

Crackdown On Obscenity

By SUSIE SCHMIDT
College Press Service

(CPS)--Although "freedom of the college press" is touted almost universally on American campuses, a large number of student papers have been censored or persecuted this fall by administrators, advisers and printers who don't like four-letter words.

In most cases their sin was not writing editorials judged obscene, or even printing literary works with four-letter words--but just printing news stories containing things their "keepers" didn't like.

And in some cases the opposition, leveled superficially against "obscenity," was obviously attempting to clamp down on student editors for political or personal reasons.

Two things have become clear this fall as this rash of censorship spreads from small tightly controlled papers to large university dailies: the people who run colleges are no longer so sure they really want students independently running their own newspapers; and a great many of academia's "forward-looking" adults may be able to take their students' radical politics, but they still have a Mayor-Daley-like obsession with obscenity.

The word "F---" long a commonplace in youthful vocabularies, and adult as well, has sent countless printers of college papers into such rage that they censor the copy, refuse to print the papers, even try to get schools to discipline editors. And administrators, who don't mind hearing the word spoken and know as well as anyone else that the word is a fixture of the language, try to fire editors and have papers confiscated when they see it in print.

At the University of Wisconsin last week, the Board of Regents narrowly refrained from firing "Daily Cardinal" Editor Greg Graze and Managing Editor Steve Reiner because the paper printed a story containing "unfit language." The story was a CPS release on the SDS October National Council meeting, quoting from a member of the Up Against the Wall/Mother-F----- faction. The editorial board of the Cardinal was instead ordered to appear before the Regents this winter with "a policy of sanctions to prevent further incidents."

The entire Cardinal staff and its Board of Control signed a front-page letter to the Regents, calling the attack on the paper "only a beachhead in the total effort by the regents to exert control over every aspect of the University operation, student life and faculty freedom." The staff also printed paragraphs from books required by many of the University's English classes, including Shakespeare, James Joyce and Norman Mailer, which contain language more obscene than that in the news story.

Less than a week later, the Michigan State University "State News" printed a story about the Wisconsin controversy, quoting from the CPS story and from the Cardinal's literary selections. The paper's adviser (or general manager, in bureaucratic lingo) claimed the editors had violated their contract with their printer. Since he had no power to fire the staff, but does control the paper's funds, the adviser, Louis Berman, cut the salaries of three top editors whom he considered responsible for the story.

At Purdue University the situation is even more serious this week. Editor-in-chief William Smoot was removed from his position by the school's Vice-President for Student Affairs, who claimed in his firing letter that the Exponent had violated journalistic codes and "offended the sensibilities of the public."

The offensive item in this case was a column critical of the university president: "Regarding a vicious rumor concerning President Novde..let us set the record straight. Our president is not analretentive..he dumped on the students just last week," the column opened.

Although the administration mandate provided that a new editor should be chosen by the Exponent's senior staff members, the 15 members of the senior editorial board said the paper's editorial policy would be the same with or without Smoot.

At a number of schools, the paper's problem has been not the administration but its printer. At New York City's Hunter College, for example, the job printer who handles many of the city's small college papers refused to print the Envoy's first edition this fall because a story about the Chicago Democratic convention contained the word "f---". The paper got another printer.

The Oakland (Mich.) University in its second fall issue ran a four-page supplement containing a long autobiographical piece by a black student. The Observer's printer also refused to run the supplement. The dispute still has not been settled; the Observer has another printer.

In Putney, Vt., last week, the printer of the "Lion's Roar" had refused to print any more issues on the paper. In a letter to the president of Windham College, which publishes the paper, the printer said the Lion's Roar was "not the type of publication we choose to print." He objected to a Liberation News Service article on "The Myth of Vaginal Orgasm" and a cartoon about LBJ and the "credibility gap."

His refusal to print nearly destroyed the small paper financially, since he owned the only offset press in Putney and if even one issue of the paper were cancelled the loss in advertising revenue would have been a disaster.

Other printers are more subtle; they just change the parts they don't like. In a CPS story about the Democratic convention which quoted Realist editor Paul Krassner telling a story about LBJ defending the war: ("Son those commies are saying, "f---' you Lyndon Johnson, and nobody says, 'F--- you, Lyndon Johnson and gets away with it), the printer of the Stetson University Reporter cut out the entire phrase "f--- you", making the whole sentence patently absurd.

More than one student editor has opened his paper in the morning to discover censorship by the printer. Last month the "Daily Californian in Berkeley, which ran a story about a pamphlet being distributed on campus by radical political groups, discovered that their printer had a fondness for dashes in the middle of some words.

Most of the trouble with printers comes from small jobbers who edit all the copy their typesetters set and have set themselves up as protectors of decency in the printed word.

Lou Sokall, manager of Alert Printing Company in New York City, which handles 20 local student papers, said it all: "Somewhere down along the line somebody has to say something about smut, I'm just trying to do something to protect those nice people who still cringe when they see the word f--- in print."

It's all very reminiscent of Mayor Daley, yelling at Connecticut Senator Ribicoff to "go fuck himself" on the floor of the Democratic convention, and then complaining piously about demonstrators outside bad-mouthing cops.

Spirit Seen As Lacking At UMass

Tonight at 8 p.m. the UMass basketball team will make its home debut. The defending Yankee Conference champions will meet highly regarded American International. A.I.C. is expected to bring a large contingent of rooters from Springfield. If you were at the so-called rally last night you begin to worry that A.I.C. may have more people at the Cage than UMass.

About 50 people showed up last night to give the team a sendoff. UMass school spirit is obviously lacking, in fact there may not be any spirit at all.

It seems that the typical UMass student thinks himself too sophisticated to get excited about something as childish as basketball. UMass students think themselves too good to lower themselves to support a team.

It's too bad. The 1968 UMass basketball team could be one of the finest the school has had in years. The whole squad from coach Jack Leaman on down is confident it can offer good basketball and more importantly total effort. They will do their part in providing the University with a fine representative team on the basketball floor. Why can't the students do their part?

Maybe in these modern times, a little school spirit is out of date and old hat. Maybe everyone is too busy to care about supporting their school. The team has not been too busy though, to put in two or three hours a night practicing.

UMass is a dynamically growing institution. It has felt growing pains this year and probably continue to for some time. The student body is pressured by many things. But with the pressure that affects us all a time to forget everything for a couple of hours and yell a little at the Cage is needed.

It's too bad that the student body has to be begged to attend its home games, especially when they have an excellent team to support. But that is how it seems to be around here at the moment.

So, please show up in full force, at the Cage, not only tonight but for every game. Make some noise! It won't kill you. And maybe then, we might find some UMass school spirit.

Campus Comment

Unhappy

To the editor:

I am unhappy. I am also depressed. I came to UMass with the mistaken impression that it would satisfy my educational needs and my intellectual curiosity. It is doing neither. And I don't know why I am here.

I could go through all the stuff about requirements and grades and classes and teachers. I could talk a lot about the problems, like many do, and say what needs to be done, like fewer do, and go out and do something, anything, for constructive and reasonable change, like hardly anyone does. I could get into deep philosophical arguments about "student power" and "administrative hypocrisy", without really understanding them. I could join committees, to study and evaluate the curriculum, or I could run for office and serve on our Student Senate, or I could go down to Lederle or Field and tell them what I would like to see. I could join S.D.S. and burn dogs. I could do the obvious, sit down every night and study things that I, as a person, do not enjoy and thus don't learn. I could go to all my lectures and classes and diligently take pages of notes and regurgitate it all on some specified date. I could kill my body and my brain for the sake of a grade that is supposed to measure what I have learned. Or I could chuck all this bull and cut out from this institution.

I could do all these things and others. These are the possibilities Society has given me. But they do not and can not fulfill the drive in me for a real education, something I can feel inside my body and soul. An education that makes me feel like a person, an education that is geared for people, and run by people. I want to know that people are listening to me and hearing me. I want people, students, faculty, anybody I come in contact with to know me for the person and personality I am, and I want the opportunity to know them just as well. Yet hardly any of this is happening.

This is all very difficult to say, knowing some of the reaction I will get. Maybe I didn't say it right. But it needed to be said, I just hope it doesn't die here on my typewriter.

Greg Everett

Reaction

To the editor:

Let us laugh fellow students and Americans. Let us laugh at our reactions to S.D.S.'s plan to napalm a dog. Weren't we caught with our "pants down". Let us laugh at our shallowness of understanding, our inability to relate abstract concepts. Let us laugh at the way our gov't is using napalm in Vietnam, while our major campus issue is man's inhumanity to a dog. Let us wait to laugh for our dead young Americans, for they have been assured that they are dying for a reason, a cause. Let us instead laugh for the dead Vietnamese, for they have no reason, no cause. Let us laugh because some of us think that the S.D.S. students are only exhibitionists, sensationalists. Sensationalism is not one small dog, it is 20 billion dollars per year for an unjust and immoral war. Some of us even thought that S.D.S. was unaware of the immorality of the act they proposed. S.D.S. is not as blind as the military. The S.D.S., unlike our military, didn't carry out the act; nor did they intend to.

And consider our gov't, our land of freedom and justice. Let us also laugh at their lack of understanding. Perhaps if America was killing dogs instead of Vietnamese, all of America's students, indeed all of America, would stop the war. Perhaps; if it was a "gov't for the people'', instead of a "people for the gov't."

And let us laugh at our President Lederle, our leader. Let us laugh at his threat to expel, fine and prosecute all the S.D.S. students taking part in this act they never intended, while he made no comment about the Marine recruiters in the Student Union lobby. Recruiting on campus is not a right, it is a privilege. And the privilege can easily be denied if it is not deserved.

THE CLASS OF 1971 PRESENTS SENDOFF '68
WILD WINTRY WEEK

Martha, Vandellas Top Fri. Concert....

A few years back, Martha Reeves and the Vandellas were presented a music plaque by comedian Phil Silvers. The presentation was in recognition of the trio's sizzling rock classic, "Heat Wave", then nominated for a "Grammy Award" as the best Rhythm and Blues record of the year.

Five best selling albums and twelve hit singles later, the trio had become one of the hottest recording acts in the nation. Indeed, they are one of the top properties at Motown Record Corporation, where every group under contract ranks as an internationally acclaimed headline act.

Good things seem to come in three's for the trio, who have had three trips abroad -- twice on tours of England and once around the European concert circuit. They had been organized the same number of years prior to their tremendous take-off.

Growing with the "Sound of Young America," Martha Reeves joined Motown as a secretary, harboring her talents until one day an emergency studio session prompted her to volunteer her services, along with those of two classmates she sang with in the school choir.

The impromptu session served as an ample audition. Motown president, Berry Gordy Jr. and the producing executives present took note of the clarity displayed by the three harmonious voices that were musically concordant, yet distinctive.

Instead of a cordial "thank you" at the end of the session, the trio was extended a future recording date.

A later fulfillment of the offer resulted in the popular disk, "Come and Get These Memories."

The list of recordings following the initial release ring out with familiarity to fans of the trio, "Dancing in the Street," "Quicksand," "My Baby Loves Me," "Ready for Love," "Jimmy Mack," "Love Bug Leave My Heart Alone," and their current hit release, "Honey Chile."

Martha Reeves and the Vandellas will be at the Cage, Friday night, Dec. 6, at 10 p.m. Tickets are on sale for $2.50.

Butterfield Blues are Sound, Soul....

Paul Butterfield describes his music as "the blues overstated." Among the critics, the phrasemakers call it "sound and soul--where folk, blues, rock and jazz unite." But to a multiplying cult of followers, it is the Chicago blues, sprouting from the vast South Side ghetto of that city and now overwhelming the country with its harsh, brutal, strident but still strangely beautiful sounds.

Since the Butterfield Blues Band crossed the Chicago city line to bring its music to the rest of America, a new breed of blues bands has begun criss-crossing the country. Paul Butterfield has become the pioneer of Chicago blues in American pop music.

"They come on like a gang of Mexican bandits taking over a village in a cloud of victory dust" wrot pop music critic Aired G. Aronowitz in The New York Times, "their instruments swinging jauntily in the style of trigger-happy badmen while they walk around the bandstand rearranging the microphones and the amplifiers with all the care of someone kicking dogs out of the way.

"They are the Butterfield Blues Band, and they arrive...travel-stained with the experience, the grime, the raunchiness storming through America.

"...They rule the stage not only with the self-assurance that they are the stars of the show, but also with the confidence that there is nobody doing what they're doing better than they."

Paul, who once studied classical flute, sings in the same manner that he talks, without trying to affect a Negro accent. He plays blues, harmonica, however, in a style developed by Little Walter, cupping a microphone in his hands as he plays. By changing positions of the microphone and harmonica, he creates a variety of tonal effects.

Paul first formed a group at the University of Chicago where he met Elvin Bishop, his lead guitarist.

When his group was hired to play Big John's in the Old Town district, Chicago's Greenwich Village, there were S.R.O. crowds almost every night.

Today, Paul, with two albums on the market, has rearranged the personnel of his band so that it includes a brass section and almost a totally new group of musicians.

The Butterfield Blues Band will appear at the Cage Friday night at 10 p.m. Tickets are now on sale for $2.50. Also appearing is the special attraction, the Unifies.

Sam and Dave Are Saturday's Hit....

Sam & Dave have been performing together as a team since 1961. In the six years they have been together, they have created a remarkable reputation as the most exciting twosome on the soul music scene. Billed as the "Double Dynamite" duo, they have thrilled fans throughout the world with their fast and furious in-person act, and they have secured their hold on their followers with hit after hit recording on the Memphis-based Stax label.

Sam Moore and Dave Foster both made it the hard way, working since they were youngsters as professional entertainers in the world of soul music. Sam Moore hails from Miami, Dave from Ocilla, Georgia, but today they both call Miami home.

Stax Records issued Sam & Dave's first record back in 1965, a driving item called "It Was So Nice While it Lasted". That first record was an R&B hit, and their subsequent hits, "I Take What I Want", "Ain't No Big Thing Baby", "A Place Nobody Can Find," "You Don't Know Like I Know", "Said I wasn't Gonna Tell Nobody" and the smash, "Hold On I'm Comin' ", brought them to the attention of pop fans as well.

Their first gold record was earned in the fall of 1967 with the sensational hit "Soul Man". This record leaped to the top of the trade paper charts in a few short weeks, and sold over one million copies. Their follow-up album, "Soul Man", quickly burst into the best-selling classification after it was issued in October of 1967.

In the Spring of 1967 Sam & Dave played in England and the Continent as stars of the Stax-Volt Revue, along with such top acts as Otis Redding, Carla Thomas, Booker T. & the MG's, Eddie Floyd and the Mar-Keys. Sam & Dave broke it up everywhere they appeared and built up a European following as enthusiastic as the legion of fans at home.

Sam & Dave offer a simple explanation for their great act: "We simply try to do a little more than required. If this means we have to sing one song for 50 minutes, then we sing the song for 50 minutes. If this means we have to perform for an hour without stopping, then we perform for an hour without stopping. We want everybody to remember SAM & DAVE".

Sam & Dave will appear at the Cage Sat., Dec. 7 at 8 p.m. Tickets are now on sale for $2.50. Also with them will be Go-Go dancer Margi Hendrix and Johnny K and his Orchestra.

Health Service Reports...

Action of Marihuana Is Variable And Unpredictable

A fact sheet on marijuana has been issued by the UMass Health Services. The report says that Marijuana, otherwise known as hashish, bhang, "pot", or "grass", comes from the dried parts of a hemp plant, Cannabis sativa, which may be smoked, chewed, or sniffed. It has no known medicinal use.

Since it is not a specific product, but a variable mixture of flowers, leaves, stems, and sometimes even roots, each of which has a different amount of the ingredient responsible for its activity, its action is variable and unpredictable. There is even evidence that some marijuana currently sold is adulterated with other mind-changing drugs, altering its effect even more strongly. For these reasons, the results of using marijuana are erratic. This unpredictability and variability may be psychologically disturbing even to the experienced user.

As in the case of alcohol, the effects of marijuana vary widely, depending upon the personality or attitude of the user and the setging in which it is smoked. One may become hilarious or moody, stimulated or drowsy, or even suspicious and combative. Greater intimacy OR greater isolation from others may result.

Perceptual changes may be dramatic. Colors may appear deeper and more vibrant; people and objects may be more richly symbolic or intensely experienced. Sometimes the meaning of existence may seem clearer - though users frequently report that this apparently clearer perception is lost after the effects disappear.

In general, it seems to bring about a certain intensifying of what ever experiences and potentialities already exist, a "turning up of the volume". Thus, in one case, an aesthetically creative person may find that it increases his range of seeing and responding, some of which may be truly innovative; in another case, a conflict over relationships with the opposite sex may be further intensified. The major appeal of marijuana is in the changes in consciousness which it produces: variety and novelty of perception of people, objects, colors, time.

One of the undesirable effects of marijuana is the "bad trip". This may take the form of extreme panic, fear of death, paranoid suspiciousness - which may in turn lead to destructive or withdrawing behavior. On rare occasions, these bad effects may trigger a long-lasting emotional disturbance. Bad trips are less frequent, however, than experiences which have an effect which is at least temporarily positive.

PSYCHOLOGICAL EFFECTS

Most persons who experiment with marijuana use it sporadically or only for a brief period in their lives. It does not produce physical dependence but a minority of users become psychologically "hooked". The complex personal and social causes behind this dependence are hard to isolate, so it is difficult for anyone to know ahead of time how great this danger is. Furthermore, the culture or social group associated with the use of marijuana may encourage experimentation with other more dangerous drugs, such as LSD, the amphetamines ("speed"), and occasionally, narcotics such as heroin.

One physical effect of marijuana is the slowing of reflexes. Since it also causes a distortion of reality, particularly in time and space, driving while under the influence of the drug is dangerous.

LEGAL CONSEQUENCES

The legal consequences of the use of marijuana may be severe. It is classed as a narcotic under the federal Narcotic Control Act of 1956, which provides imprisonment of two to ten years and maximum fine of $20,000 for the first offense of possession of marijuana.

In the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, marijuana is also included under the narcotic and harmful drug laws. Here the first offense for possession carries a maximum fine of $1,000 and a maximum imprisonment of three and one half years. The penalty for sale is a prison sentence of five to ten years, although a fine has been the penalty on some occasions. It is also a violation of the Massachusetts law to induce another, especially a minor, to use, possess, or sell narcotic drugs; to be present where such drugs are kept; or to be in the company of a person, knowing that such a person is illegally in possession of a narcotic drug.

The recently available synthetic substance (tetrahydrocannabinol), is MUCH more active and its effects may be substantially different from those experienced from the use of plant material. There are some indications that it may have effects which approach those of LSD in severity, persistence, or recurrence. Until more facts have been reported, the use of synthetic marijuana must be considered even more hazardous than "pot" from natural sources.

COUNSELING

The staff of the University Health Services is interested in providing counseling on the physical, psychological, and social aspects of the use of marijuana, both for the potential user and for those who now are in difficulty from its use. Inquiry may be made from any member of the professional staff with the assurance that complete confidentiality will be maintained.

If we were happy with the world the way it is, we wouldn't need you.

Kids choke on polluted air. Streets are jammed by cars with no place to go. Lakes and rivers are a common dumping ground for all kinds of debris.

This is the way the world is, but it's not the way it has to be.

Air pollution can be controlled. Better transportation systems can be devised. There can be an almost unlimited supply of clean water.

People at General Electric are already working on these problems. And on other problems that need to be solved. Problems like developing more efficient ways of providing power to our cities and figuring out ways our production capabilities can keep up with our population needs.

But we need more people.

We need help from a lot of young engineers and scientists; and we need help from business and liberal arts graduates who understand people and their problems.

If you want to help change the world, we'd like to talk to you. We'll be visiting campus soon. Why not drop by the placement office and arrange for an interview? You might be able to turn a problem into an opportunity.

Faculty Recital Features Clarinet in Brahms, Berg

JAMES W. WADE
Fine Arts Staff

Brahms and Berg were the two most musically represented composers in last Tuesday night's faculty recital by Professor Joseph Contino, clarinetist, at Bowker Auditorium. An enthusiastically large audience was presented with works by Bernstein, Berg, Weber, and Brahms. Contino was accompanied by pianist Estela Kersenbaum Olevsky, with cellist Joel Krosnick contributing his artistry in the second half of the program.

The program opened with Leonard Bernstein's Sonata for Clarinet and Piano, composed in 1942. The work itself was of highly imaginative caliber, ranging in sonorities from mysterious somberness to warm passages of flowing melody. It was in all instance a highly entertaining work, colored throughout with typical Bernstein genius. Contino's interpretation was for the most part well handled, although certain lines lacked continuity, especially high-registered jumps.

Berg's Four Pieces for Clarinet and Piano, Op. 5 displayed considerably more modernistic tendencies, although written twenty-nine years prior to the Bernstein piece. Contino's technique was expertly shown in the piece, and the overall sound was one of concentrated communication with both the audience and the composer's intentions. A large amount of the work's success was due to the resourceful piano accompaniment of Mrs. Olevsky.

Although basically an uninteresting composition, Weber's Grand Duo Concertant, Op. 48 was accented by sculptured phrases from both soloist and the accompanist. Dynamics were heart-felt and well-positioned. Despite Contino's occasional slips in pitch, Weber's romanticism sang thoughout the work and made for a highly enjoyable performance. Virtuoso passages were played with grace and were never over-worked.

The Brahms Trio for Piano, Clarinet and Cello, Op. 114 was a performance of intense compassion and sensitivity. Although the clarinet was at times overshadowed, Brahms beauty was achieved through the combined talent of the three artists. Cellist Joel Krosnick's immense warmth was displayed most adequately in romantic solo passages. Mrs. Olevsky illustrated her unique capability for both accompanying and soloing, whichever the composition demanded. The trio was celestial in the slow movements of the Brahms and thoroughly competent in the allegro movements.

AIC Senior Launches Intercollegiate Govt. Day To Be Held in State House

SPRINGFIELD - An American International College senior from Darien, Conn., William M. Burke, has launched a Massachusetts Intercollegiate Government Day which will be held in the State House March 21, 1969. The program has received the enthusiastic endorsement of Senate President Maurice A. Donahue of Holyoke and House Speaker Robert H. Quinn of Dorchester as well as the Mass. Department of Education.

Burke, is presently forming an 11-member standing committee representing state-supported and private colleges, community and junior colleges throughout the Bay State. This organizational committee, along with faculty advisors, will help plan the Boston session. There are 115 degree-granting institutions in Massachusetts eligible to take part in the collegiate venture into state government.

The president of AIC's Student Government, Burke, noted that neighboring Connecticut and such states as North Carolina and California, hold intercollegiate government days, but this is believed to be the first time the program has ever been instituted in the Bay State.

According to initial plans, Burke said the collegiate representatives, at least one, possibly two, from all 115 institutions, will arrive in Boston Thursday, March 20. The first day will be spent in committee meetings. Massachusetts Intercollegiate Government Day will be held Friday, March 21, when the House and Senate will meet in joint assembly in the State House.

College students throughout Mass. will be invited and encouraged to submit bills through their collegiate representatives on any issue. "We sincerely hope to act on at least eight bills during Massachusetts Intercollegiate Government Day," Burke said, adding, "these bills will then be submitted to state legislators for continued action."

Opportunities, Career Days Coming Up For Seniors

Career Day Represents Thirty Companies

College Career Day in 1968 will take place December 28 at the Sheraton Yankee Drummer Inn, Auburn, Massachusetts. More than thirty companies representing every major industry in the Worcester area will be recruiting potential employees from among over 400 college juniors and seniors expected to attend.

College Career Day came into being last year under the guidance of the Manpower Committee of the Worcester Area Chamber of Commerce and in cooperation with the Greater Worcester Jaycees.

The purpose of Career Day, according to this years Chairman John VanAken, is to expose college juniors and seniors to career opportunities available in their home community.

This years program will include addition to the day-long interviewing sessions to be conducted by the Personnel Departments of the various firms to be represented.

Participating students will register with companies with whom they wish to discuss employment opportunities just prior to the beginning of activities at 9 a.m. Private interview sessions will then follow in special interview rooms set up at the Yankee Drummer Inn. Any interested student may contact the Worcester Area Chamber of Commerce at Seven Hills Plaza.

The student delegation expected this year will represent 33 colleges and universities throughout the United States.

Firms who are registered to participate in College Career Day thus far are:

International Business Machine seminars in vital career fields, and a complimentary luncheon in Corporation; Massachusetts Mutual Life Insurance Company; D.W. Ayres Agency; State Mutual Life Assurance Company of America; Jamesbury Corporation; Heald Machine Company; Sprague Electric Company; Norton Company; Guaranty Bank and Trust Company; George J. Myer; Owens-Illionois Forest Products Division; Mechanics National Bank; Worcester Telegram-Gazette; Worcester County National Bank; Friendly Ice Cream Corporation; Riley Stoker Corporation; Touche, Ross Bailey and Smart; Wyman-Gordon Company; Phalo Plastics; Thom McAnn; Hobbs;

Also, Crompton and Knowles Corporation; Morgan Construction Company; National Cash Register Company; and Aetna Life and Casualty Company.

Mortar Board To Hold A Placement Program

On Thursday, December 5, at 8:15 P.M. in Hasbrouck 20, Mortar Board, in conjunction with the Placement Office, is sponsoring a Placement program for all senior women. If you have questions about applying for jobs and getting admission to graduate schools, come to this meeting and you will find the answers.

A panel of four senior women will question placement officials and faculty about the mechanics and planning of possible careers and graduate school. Persons with knowledge about teaching, graduate schools, business opportunities, and other areas of work will make up the panel. After the general meeting, the audience will be divided into three groups--Teaching, Graduate School, and Employment, and you will be able to confront the placement officials and faculty members in your specific area of interest.

This meeting is of vital interest to all senior women who are concerned about their future. It is to your benefit to attend.

Annual Career-In To be Dec. 26,27

Seniors and graduate students who live in the Merrimack Valley Massachusetts area (Lawrence, Andover, Methuen, North Andover, Lowell, Haverhill, and Southern New Hampshire) will have an opportunity during their Christmas Vacation to acquaint themselves with the many quality employment opportunities now available in that area.

The Greater Lawrence Chamber of Commerce is sponsoring a College Recruiting Program called Operation Native Son & Daughter which will be held at the Sheraton Rolling Green Motor Inn, Jct. Route 93 & 133, Andover, Massachusetts on Monday, December 30, 1968 from 10:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m.

The participating firms invite interested students to attend this informal program anytime during the day. Greater Lawrence enjoys many national and international firms which are located in that area. The wide diversification of industrial manufacturing and commercial enterprises offers many job opportunities. The recent nationally published Kiplinger Report states that the Merrimack Valley is one of the fastest growing areas in the country. And this Chamber of Commerce Recruitment Program is an invitation to all residents and former residents to grow with it.

Operation Native Son And Daughter

The Second Annual "Career-In" designed to acquaint college seniors and graduate students with job opportunities in their area, will be held December 26th and 27th at the Marriott Motor Hotel, Route 80 and the Garden State Parkway in Saddle Brook, New Jersey.

Representatives from 90 companies with operations in the New Jersey-New York metropolitan area will be on hand to answer students questions about available positions.

The "Career-In", sponsored by the Industrial Relations Association of Bergen County, is held each year when students are home for the Christmas holidays. Last year, a number of students who attended the "Career-In", decided to take jobs near their homes after comparing the opportunities with those offered in other sections of the country.

Students who wish to attend this years "Career-In" may contact their college placement directors for information on the two day program.

Teachers College, Columbia University will be having its representatives visit Amherst College on Wednesday, December 4, 1968 from 9:30 a.m. until noon.

Teachers College extends an invitation to UMass students interested in graduate study at Teachers College to meet with Mr. Ronald Schenk of the Admissions Office to discuss the current program and course offerings.

Appointments can be made through the Office of the Dean of Students, Amherst College.

King Council Opens Bookstore and Library, Adds Student and Faculty Members to Board

The Martin Luther King Jr. Social Action Council recently moved into a new office in 207 Hampshire. Previously, the King Council used a vacant office donated by the United Christian Foundation in 319 Hampshire. The new telephone numbers are 545-0648 and 545-0649.

The office will serve as a center for all of the King Council's activities. In addition there is a bookstore and a library containing a selection of books dealing with a wide range of social problems, but centered on the racial crisis. An office staff of student volunteers, under the direction of Gil Salk, Executive Secretary of the Council, co-ordinates the programs in which the Council is involved.

According to Salk, "The move is not made without some regrets. Mrs. Elaine Fraser, the UCF secretary, has been a great help and a wonderful person. The King Council owes her, and UCF, a large debt of gratitude for their kindness and assistance."

Ron Hardy, chairman of the King Council Board of Directors, also recently announced that the Board has added five new members. Two students, Keith Bromery, '71 and COLLEGIAN Editorial Day Editor, and Dan Weir, '70, and two faculty members, Putnam Barber of the Sociology Dept. and Alvin Winder of the School of Nursing were installed Nov. 27. Gil Salk, who was a non-voting member, was given voting privileges on the Board.

This raises the number of Board members to 13. The new additions join Maryann DePietro '69, Dei Dei Eastmond '69, and Ken Mosakowski '69; Isidore Silver, School of Business, Oswald Tippo, Provost, Mark Noffsinger, Assoc. Dean of Students; and Andrew Griffin, former Director of Northern Educational Services and Rev. Ronald Hardy, chaplain at the University.

The King Council's office is open from 9-5 Monday through Friday. All students are encouraged to call or stop in if they want to volunteer to work on any of the Councils programs, are looking for advice on programs of their own, or are just curious about the Council's activities.

For those who are unsure of the exact location of Hampshire House, it is in the southwest portion of campus, between Whitmore Administration Building and the Police Station.

Grad Fellowship Awarded in Field of Dietetics

Mrs. Carrie E. Johnson, a Ph.D. candidate in Nutrition and Food at the School of Home Economics at the University of Massachusetts, has received the Mead Johnson Laboratories Award, a $1,000 graduate fellowship to continue her education in the field of dietetics.

The fellowship was awarded recently at the American Dietetic Association's annual meeting in San Francisco.

Mrs. Johnson received her B.S. degree at Kansas State College of Agriculture and Applied Science and her master of science degree at the University of Massachusetts. She completed her dietetic internship at Michael Reese Hospital in Chicago, Ill. and has recently served as a lecturer in the School of Home Economics at UMass.

She is the wife of Lawrence A. Johnson, assistant Dean of the School of Business Administration. The Johnsons live in Pelham.

Parking Problems Lead To Strict Enforcement of Rules

In recent weeks a number of comments have been received from members of the campus community concerning parking. The general consensus has been that stricter enforcement of the regulations is needed if adequate parking is to be available.

Therefore, effective December 9, 1968, the campus Security Department has been directed to strictly enforce the regulations pertaining to parking. Unauthorized vehicles will be denied access to the controlled parking areas, and vehicles violating University regulations will be ticketed or towed as appropriate.

The presently authorized mobility for properly registered faculty and staffvehicles will be continued. Parking areas 1F, 3 and 4 will be limited to vehicles assigned to those areas, and vehicles bearing "X" decals.

Bethlehem Steel
Loop Course Interviews:

DECEMBER

What is the Bethlehem Loop Course? It is our management development program for graduates with bachelors' or advanced degrees.

The course starts early in July with four weeks of orientation at our home offices in Bethlehem, Pa. Loopers attend lectures on every phase of the corporation's activities, and make almost daily visits to a steel plant.

Steel Plant Loopers, who comprise a majority of the average loop class of 150 to 200 graduates, proceed to various plants where they go through a brief orientation program before beginning their on-the-job training assignments. Within a short time after joining the course, most loopers are ready for assignments aimed toward higher levels of management.

How about other loopers? Our Sales Department loopers (30 or so) remain at the home office for about a year of training. Most are then assigned to district offices where they take over established accounts.

Fabricated Steel Construction loopers are trained in a drafting room, on a field erection project, in a fabricating shop, and in an engineering office. A looper's first work assignment is based on interests and aptitudes disclosed during this program.

Loopers in Accounting, Shipbuilding, Mining, Research, Traffic, Purchasing, Finance and Law, General Services, and Industrial and Public Relations go through training programs tailored to their types of work.

Where would YOU fit in? Check your degree or the one most similar to it.

MECHANICAL ENGINEERING—Engineering or mechanical maintenance departments of steel plants, fabricating works, mining operations, and shipyards. Fuel and combustion departments. Supervision of production operations. Marine engineering assignments in Shipbuilding Department. Also: Sales or Research.

METALLURGICAL ENGINEERING – Metallurgical departments of steel plants and manufacturing operations. Engineering and service divisions. Technical and supervisory positions in steelmaking departments and rolling mills. Also: Research or Sales.

CHEMICAL ENGINEERS—Technical and supervisory positions in coke works, including production of byproduct chemicals. Fuel and combustion departments, including responsibility for operation and maintenance of air and water pollution control equipment. Engineering and metallurgical departments. Steelmaking operations. Also: Research or Sales.

INDUSTRIAL ENGINEERING—Positions in steel plants, fabricating works, shipyards, and mines. Engineering and maintenance departments. Supervision of steelmaking, rolling, manufacturing, and fabricating operations. Also: Sales.

CIVIL ENGINEERING: Fabricated Steel Construction assignments in engineering, field erection, or works management. Steel plant, mine, or shipyard assignments in engineering, construction, and maintenance. Supervision of production operations. Sales Department assignments as line salesman or sales engineer (technical service to architects and engineers).

ELECTRICAL ENGINEERING—Steel plant, fabricating works, mining operations, and shipyard electrical engineering, construction, and maintenance departments. Technical and supervisory positions in large production operations involving sophisticated electrical and electronic equipment. Also: Research or Sales.

MINING ENGINEERING – Our Mining Department operates coal and iron ore mining operations and limestone quarries, many of which are among the most modern and efficient in the industry. This 10,000-man activity offers unlimited opportunities to mining engineers. Also: Research.

NAVAL ARCHITECTS AND MARINE ENGINEERS: Graduates are urged to inquire about opportunities in our Shipbuilding Department, including the Central Technical Division, our design and engineering organization. Also: Traffic.

OTHER TECHNICAL DEGREES—Every year we recruit loopers with technical degrees other than those listed above. Seniors enrolled in such curricula are encouraged to sign up for an interview.

ACCOUNTANTS—Graduates in accounting or business administration (24 hours of accounting are preferred) are recruited for training for supervisory assignments in our 3,000-man Accounting Department.

OTHER NON-TECHNICAL DEGREES – Graduates with degrees in liberal arts, business, and the humanities are invited to discuss opportunities in the Sales Department. Some non-technical graduates may be chosen to fill openings in steel plant operations and other departments.

NOW'S THE TIME TO SIGN UP FOR AN INTERVIEW. And when you register at the placement office, be sure to pick up a copy of our booklet, "Careers with Bethlehem Steel and the Loop Course." It contains important information about the corporation and your opportunities through the Loop Course.

3 Interleague Deals, BoSox Get Schofield

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) – Trading activity broke out at the major league meetings Tuesday as Cleveland acquired shortstop Zoilo Versalles and Philadelphia obtained third baseman Deron Johnson, two players who were on top of the baseball world just three years ago.

Versalles, who won the most valuable player award in the American League for leading Minnesota to the pennant in 1965 was acquired by the Indians in delayed payment from the new San Diego club as part of an earlier deal with Cleveland.

The Indians also will have to deliver another player to the AL expansion club to complete the transaction.

Johnson, who was the National League runs-batted-in king for Cincinnati in 1965, was sold to the Phillies by Atlanta for an undisclosed amount of cash in the first of the two trades completed at these meetings.

In another trade, Boston sent pitcher Gary Waslewski to St. Louis for utility infielder Dick Schofield.

Acquisition of Johnson also revived speculation about the most-discussed player at the meetings, hard-hitting Philadelphia outfielder Richie Allen, who reportedly has fallen into disfavor with the Phillies.

However, Bob Skinner, the Phillies' manager, contended that there was a general misunderstanding about Allen's availability.

Wrestlers Sunk By Coast Guard, 23-13

By STEVE SHAMBAN
Sports Day Editor

The Coast Guard Academy wrestlers upset UMass 23-13 yesterday at New London, Connecticut. For Coach Homer Barr's Redmen, it was a question of inexperience, too little aggressiveness, and too much turkey.

"It was a disappointing loss," said Barr, "but I ink our inexperience hurt us. We're still a year away from not making the mistakes that take wins away." UMass has eight sophomores on its roster.

"The main thing that bothered me was the lack of aggressiveness which we displayed. You've got to be aggressive to win in this sport; without it, you're hurting.

"Also, we were overweight, a result no doubt of Thanksgiving festivities. When some of our boys came in the locker room following the meet, the only thing that came out of their mouths was 'gobble gobble' ".

This was a close match most of the way until a freak happening cost UMass dearly in the 191 lb. match. Dick Gnatek held a good sized advantage in the third period against the Cadet's Bruce Adams, a freshman. Gnatek, moving on the mat, tripped on an edge, fell down, and was immediately jumped on by Adams. This gave Adams the points he needed to win the contest.

A win here for UMass would have had them losing by only one point, 17-16, but it was not to be. Adams' victory broke the dual meet open at 20-13 and wiped out any Redman hopes for victory.

Things started out well for UMass with a quick win in the first match. Nick DiDomenico decisioned Dave Edwards 8-3 and the Redmen led 3-0.

Things turned gray for Coach Barr's grapplers very quickly as they dropped four matches in a row. Dave Wade lost to Dennis Egan 12-5 in the 123 lb. class. Phil Davis lost to Jim Hall 11-3 in the 130 lb. bracket and then came what Barr termed "a real heartbreaker".

Earl McCartney lost a very tight 3-0 decision to Mike Neal in a 137 lb. match which UMass had to win to keep hopes avlice. Bill Keith then lost to Tom Mills 7-3: At this point the Cadets held a commanding 12-3 lead.

Mike Brauner closed things up a bit by decisioning Ron Carey 3-0 in the 150 lb. match but newly elected captain Tom Young lost a tough 4-2 decision to Coast Guard's Ed Pace. Tom Andrews pinned Bob McCoy and Bob Wilman gained a draw with Tim Balunis in the 167 and 177 lb. groups respectively to put the Redmen back in contention.

UMass, trailing by only four points, had a life which was very short lived as Gnatek's freak loss quickly followed. John Marthaler topped UMass' Glen Cummings in the unlimiteds, but this only added insult to injury.

Hopefully the Redman wrestlers should be in better shape for Saturday's encounter with Tufts at Boyden. "We've got a tough schedule," concluded Barr, "but we've also got some top talent, and after this loss we should regroup and improve."

Leaman's Redmen Ready For Slick Shooting AIC

UMass Lineup Set; Watch The Ring Man

By MIKE CURRAN
Sports Editor

The Ad-Libs have nothing on the AIC Aces when you're talkin' 'bout boys from New York City. Coach Bill Callahan has built a small college basketball powerhouse at the Springfield school by recruiting in and around Fun City. Last year the Yellow Jackets were the premier New England Small College team and after taking the regionals, lost to National Champion Kentucky Weslayen at the small school tourney at Evansville, Indiana.

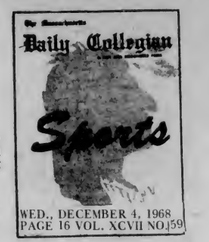
Many experts feel this year's team could be better. Playmaker Henry Payne is gone as is forward Larry Freed and guard Jim Miele, but Callahan has the personnel to replace these men.

6'11 Al 'Ring Man' Carter is starting at center. Carter has improved his defensive game over freshman year and smaller opponents may have their hands full driving against AIC.

The Aces have four able forwards in Curtis Mitchell, last year's leading scorer and re - bounder, Greg Hill, a JC transfer, Rudy Wolters, and Captain Jim White. All go about 6'4 and hail from New York City except for White.

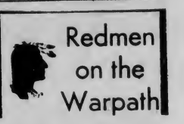
Speedsters Bob Rutherford and Alan Bush lead the Yellowjacket fast break from their backcourt positions. Rutherford, a Springfield Classical product, was the leading scorer in AIC's opening game victory over Westfield State. He hit for 33 points.

Reserves are important to a run-and-gun team and the Aces have some fine ones. Fran Maloney, Dick Fekete, TomDoyle and Sonny Hansley will all see action tonight.



AIC not only runs every time it has the ball, it also throws a full court press for most of the game. The Aces will throw the ball away on occasion, but their ball hawking more than compensates for their errors.

UMass coach Jack Leaman plans to go with the same lineup that beat Rider College last Saturday. This would include Peter Gayeska at center, Jack Gallagher and Ken Mathias at forwards, and Joe DiSarcina and Ray Ellerbrook in the backcourt.



Dick Samuelson, John Shockro, Dennis Chapman, DickStarsiak and Bob Dempsey form the backbone of Leaman's bench.

The Sendoff Queen will be crowned at tonight's contest. What more could you ask for? A freshman debut, the Ring Man, some running and some gunning. Come early and get a good seat because this should be a good one.

Frosh Set For AIC Too; Little Redmen Crippled

By PETER PASCARELLI
Assistant Sports Editor

A tall and sharp shooting UMass freshman basketball team opens its season tonight when the Little Redmen meet the A.I.C. frosh at the Cage at 6 p.m., with its lineup loaded with question marks caused by some early season injuries.

The Little Redmen have shown themselves to be a potentially strong squad in their early practices. However, they have been setback in their progress by several injured key operatives. Frosh coach Peter Broaca stated this week, "The whole team has looked good but injuries to both the frontcourt and the guard spot has us hurting right off the bat."

The first and one of the biggest injuries was suffered by highly regarded 6'5 Julius Erving. Erving, who hails from Roosevelt, N.Y., broke his thumb early in practice sessions and has just started practicing again this week. However, Broaca has stated that Erving will start tonight although his movement will be hampered by a cast on the thumb.

Not so sure a bet to be in the lineup will be sharp shooting John Bettencourt. The guard prospect from Westwood, N.J., who has displayed an excellent outside shot, developed an ear infection and had to be be operatied on last week. His availability for tonight's game is therefore questionable.

In the event of Bettencourt's absence, either Chris Nichols or Don Moore will start. Broaca however is definite about one starting guard. He is Mike Pagliara, a 5'10 Wyckoff, N.J. native who has shown to be a good floor general and shooter.

Broaca says of his guard prospects, "They are all relatively even and are capable of starting for us."

The forecourt meanwhile, was further crippled early this week, by an injury to burly, 6'5 Bill Kesgen. Kesgen was expected to see a lot of action at a forward spot, but this injury puts the E. Rutherford, N.J. native on the doubtful list.

Starting the corner opposite to Erving will be 6'5 Rich Vogely from New Hyde Park, N.Y. Vogely is an excellent shooter and a fine rebounder.

The center spot will be held down by big 6'8 Tom Austin. A member of the Eastern Mass. Class C champions, from Swansea, Austin is a fine shooter for his size and is mobile.

Broaca is worried about his depth following his injuries, saying "It brings us from nine men to seven and hurts us up front and in the backcourt. Losing Bettencourt hurts a lot because he was playing real fine ball."

Broaca is also worried about his opponet for tonight. The A.I.C. squad is loaded with height also and features some excellent prospects from Western Mass. Leading the team however, will be forward Mike White. White who is from New York City, played last season for Rockwood Academy, a team that took the UMass freshman into over time before the Little Redmen pulled it out. In that game the 6'5 White scored 30 points.

Also starting for the Yellowjackets will be 6'7 George Kastinacis from Springfield Classical. Kastinacis was a highly sought after high school product. Also up front will be 6'4 Fred Bernard from Springfield Cathedral.

In the backcourt will be definitely starting Jim Hart, 6'0 from Cathedral also. A t the other guard spot will be either Jerry Greenthal or Mike Foley.

WMUA Carries 19 Games

Starting with tonight's A.I.C. game in the Cage, WMUA (91.1 FM) will once again broadcast UMass basketball games, home and away, this season.

Glenn Briere will handle the play-by-play and Hal Dash the color commentary as WMUA brings live coverage of the games. All of the games that occur while school is in session will be broadcast, while the two Evansville tournament games, as well as the Boston University and Northeastern games, all during vacations, willnot be carried. All in all, 19 of UMass' 24 games may be heard on WMUA.

As always, air time for the broadcasts will be ten minutes before game time. The Sports Department of WMUA hopes that Redmen fans will support the team at the Cage, but if unable to attend, they may hear all the action on WMUA. And with WMUA's sports crew accompanying the Redmen at away games, fans can follow the team when on the road.

SENATE MEETING
By Chris McGahan

The Student Senate voted last night to hold elections and swear in Senators from the newly-created constituencies of Moore-Pierpont and Project 10, as well as James House.

Student Government Affairs Committee Chairman Dev Cochrane, who also announced his resignation from the Senate effective December 20, introduced a Special Business motion in response to a recent DAILY COLLEGIAN editorial criticizing the lack of representation in Moore and Pierpont Houses. He said the Senate's response to the editorial should come not in the form of a letter to the editor, but rather "in positive action tonight."

"Resolved: That the Student Senate recognizes and approves the concept of co-educational, inter-dormitory house government as it now exists in the residence units of Moore House and Pierpont House and that Student Senate seats in these dormitories be apportioned accordingly." The motion passed with no debate.

Cochrane announced that nomination papers for all three constituencies would be open from today December 5 through December 12. Elections for two Senators from Moore, two from Pierpont, and one from James will be held from 6 to 9 p.m. in the dorms on Tuesday, December 17.

President Paul Silverman announced the appointment of the four Area Coordinators to serve on Student Matters Committee. These appointments were objected to by Senator Janice Kurkjian, but the appointments were preliminarily approved by the Senate. These appointments, as well as the creation of an Advisory Committee to the Faculty Senate Calendar Board, will become final next week. The advisory committee will help to establish a policy of setting priorities for the use of buildings on campus.

A question regarding Southwest floating meal tickets was answered by President Silverman. Secretary Cindy Olken noted that Food Services Director Joel Stoneham had announced the establishment of floating meal tickets this fall on an experimental basis, with full implementation to come in the spring. She commented that it appeared that full implementation appeared to have taken place already, but with little publicity of the new policy. President Silverman will answer the question again next week.

A move by Senate Treasurer Allan Gauthier to return all unencumbered funds of the DAILY COLLEGIAN to the Senate was committed to Budgets Committee for one week's study at the request of Chairman Brad Johnson.

The only real floor fight of the evening - and a mild one at that - developed over a bill, sponsored by Senator Dev Cochrane, to allow the SGA Committee Chairman to create a sub-committee on class government, some of whose members would not be regular members of the full committee. The bill passed after attachment of an amendment, introduced by Vice President Rick Hartwell, requiring a majority of the sub-committee be comprised of full committee members.

In routine business, the Senate amended the Judiciary Act so that a complaint may be served on a person after twenty-four hours have elapsed if the person has not been available. They also authorized a loan of $300 to the International Club and commissioned a report from the Student Matters Committee of Visitation Policies at Harvard, Tufts, Columbia, and Clark Universities, as well as other schools which the committee deems appropriate.

The constitution of Washington Lower House was ruled out of order by President Silverman, since several minor amendments had been approved only by the House Council, and not by the entire house. Senator Paul Dudash tried to suspend the rules to consider the constitution anyway, but he was defeated in the parliamentary hassle which ensued.

Israeli Fighter-Bombers Stage Raid On Army Installations in Jordan

TEL AVIV (AP) - Israeli fighter-bombers raided 50 miles deep into Jordan Wednesday in a 90-minute attack the army said was aimed at installations of an Iraqi army division that had recently been shelling frontier settlements of Israel.

Radio Amman said six soldiers were killed and 14 wounded.

The squadrons stirred up anti-aircraft fire and an Israeli spokesman reported one plane, a Super-Mystere, was lost. The pilot parachuted into Jordan, he said, "but we managed to get him out."

Super-Mysteres are supersonic turbojets of French make.

Targets were in the Irbid sector, which is centered about 30 miles east of the Jordan River, and the city of Al Marfaq, the site of an air base, 30 miles farther east.

Radio Amman said air raid sirens wailed in Amman, Jordan's capital, 30 miles southwest of Al Marfaq, and King Hussein, as Jordan's supreme commander, took position at a command post.

The raid, launched in a heavy rain at noon, was the third such Israeli aerial incursion this week in a tit for tat exchange that is stirring major nations to consider further pressure for a settlement of the Middle East crisis.

France has proposed a meeting of the big powers to work on an international solution, Information Minister Joel le Theule announced in Paris.

LeTheule told newsmen Foreign Minister Michel Debre had advised President Charles de Gaulle and his Cabinet that tensions are mounting in the Middle East and the big powers should "live up to their responsibilities, that is, take the initiative."

A correspondent of Tass, the official Soviet news agency, declared in a dispatch from Amman that Tel Aviv "will have to bear responsibility for all the innocent victims" of the air and artillery attacks on Jordanian villages.

That followed up a declaration by Pravda Tuesday that there would be "a resolute rebuff to the aggressors." The Soviet Communist party newspaper, however, again urged a peaceful settlement on the basis of the 13-month-old Security Council resolution.

An Israeli spokesman charged that big guns of the troops Iraq has based in north Jordan since the 1967 war had shelled at least 12 Israeli settlements south of the Sea of Galilee in the past three days. He said the regulars from that Arab nation, an eastern neighbor of Jordan, also have been working closely with Arab raiders.

A top-ranking army officer told a Tel Aviv news conference the Iraqis have been involved in past clashes with Israel. "but this is the first time they have opened up heavy artillery fire, with howitzers and other big guns, simul-

Handel's Messiah to be Performed On Sunday in Curry Hicks Cage

The majestic music of Handel's Messiah will be heard at the University of Massachusetts in an exclusive Christmas concert by the Amherst College Glee Club and the Vassar College Choir Sunday, Dec. 8, at 4:30 p.m. in the Curry Hicks Cage.

Sponsored by the UMass Campus Chest and the Class of 1971 as a finale to Sophomore Week 1968, the 180-member choir will be conducted by Prof. Bruce G. McInnes, director of the Amherst Glee Club.

Admission to the public concert is free, but a special collection will be taken to benefit the Amherst Glee Club's 1969 world tour. The U. S. State Department has selected the Glee Club for an ambassador tour this summer behind the Iron Curtain. Each of the 78 members of the Glee Club has contributed $1000 for the trip, but an additional $3000 is still needed.

The Amherst Glee Club and the Vassar College Choir will perform Handel's MESSIAH at 4:30 p.m. Sunday in Curry Hicks Cage.

That Week in Chicago - Part II

Incidents Show Police Used More Force Than Necessary

Editor's Note: (The following is part two of the summary of the Walker Report, concerning the week of disturbances in Chicago during the Democratic convention.)

It was the clearing of the demonstrators from Lincoln Park that led directly to the violence: symbolically, it expressed the city's opposition to the protesters; literally, it forced the protesters into confrontation with police in Old Town and the adjacent residential neighborhoods.

The Old Town area near Lincoln Park was a scene of police ferocity, exceeding that shown on television on Wednesday night. From Sunday night through Tuesday night, incidents of intense and indiscriminate violence occured in the streets after police had swept the park clear of demonstrators.

Demonstrators attacked too. And they posed difficult problems for police as they persisted in marching through the streets, blocking traffic and intersections. But it was the police who forced them out of the park and into the neighborhood. And on the part of the police there was enough wild club swinging, enough cries of hatred, enough gratuitous beating to made the conclusion inescapable that individual policemen, and lots of them, committed violent acts far in excess of the requisite force for crowd dispersal or arrest.

To read dispassionately the hundreds of statements describing at first hand the events of Sunday and Monday nights is to become convinced of the presence of what can only be called a police riot.

Here is an eyewitness talking about Monday night:

"The demonstrators were forced out onto Clark Street and once again a traffic jam developed. Cars were stopped, the horns began to honk, people couldn't move, people got gassed inside their cars, people got stoned inside their cars, police were the objects of stones, and taunts, mostly taunts. As you must understand, most of the taunting of the police was verbal. There were stones thrown of course, but for the most part it was verbal. But there were stones being thrown and of course the police were responding with tear gas and clubs and everytime they could get near enough to a demonstrator they hit him.

"But again you had this police problem within - this really turned into a police problem. They pushed everybody out of the park, but this night there were a lot more people in the park than there had been during the previous night and Clark Street was just full of people and in addition now was full of gas because the police were using gas on a much larger scale this night. So the police were faced with the task, which took them about an hour or so, of hitting people over the head and gassing them enough to get them out of Clark Street, which they did."

But police action was not confined to the necessary force, even in clearing the park:

A young man and his girl friend were both grabbed by officers. He screamed, "We're going, we're going," but they threw him into the pond. The officers grabbed the girl, knocked her to the ground, dragged her along the embankment and hit her with their batons on her head, arms, back and legs.

The boy tried to scramble up the embankment to her, but police shoved him back in the water at least twice. He finally got to her and tried to pull her in the water, away from the police. He was clubbed on the head five or six times. An officer shouted. "Let's get the (obscenity)!" but the boy pulled her in the water and the police left.

Like the incident described above, much of the violence witnessed in Old Town that might seems malicious or mindless:

"There were pedestrians. People who were not part of the demonstration were coming out of a tavern to see what the demonstration was...and the officers indiscriminately started beating everybody on the street who was not a policeman."

Another scene:

"There was a group of about six police officers that moved in and started beating two youths. When one of the officers pulled back his nightstick to swing, one of the youths grabbed it from behind and started beating on the officer. At this point about ten officers left everybody else and ran after this youth, who turned down Wells and ran to the left.

"But the officers went to the right, picked up another youth, assuming he was the one they were chasing, and took him into an empty lot and beat him. And when they got him to the ground, they just kicked him ten times - the wrong youth, the innocent youth who had been standing there."

SDS ELECTS OFFICERS

By RICHARD LANE
Senior Reporter

A structural meeting for the University of Massachusetts chapter of SDS was held in the Worcester Room last evening. Five officers were elected and topics for group research were established. About 25 people were in attendance.

Temporary chairman Gus Tengberg stated at the meeting's outset that formerly SDS at UMass had been "running around like a chicken with its head cut off." Another said that groups like Students for a Democratic Society "must have form."

After an hour's debate officer's elected were: "Capitalist Pig" (Treasurer) Tom Prato, "Assistant Chief Bureaucrat" (Secretary) Kathy Biggane, and "Chief Assistant to the Assistant Chief" (Co-respondent), Jerry Gillespie and Ken Barclay. Miss Beggane's job will be in part handling publicity for SDS.

The members agreed to set a dues policy of $2.00 per semester and to set up a cadre or committee system. This committee system will be concerned with researching issues and proposing programs of action, in addition to recruitment of new members.

taneously and on such a wide front."

"When they began shooting," he said, "everybody else, Jordanians included, chimed in."

He said Wednesday's raid was "strong, but not massive."

"The idea," he added, "was to tell the Iraqis that if they want to attack they cannot go unpunished."

Peruvian Cancer Experiment Seeks to Create Antibodies

LIMA, PERU (AP) - In a bold experiment, a young Peruvian physician injected himself with cancer cells taken from his half-sister, and later gave her the cancer-fighting antibodies that his body had created.

Dr. Alfonzo Zavaleta Cruzado, 34, says he may have cured his sister, Mrs. Elis Wenzell, of cancer of the uterus. The cancer apparently has disappeared, he said.

But he stressed that less than a month has passed since the experiment, and five years are required to think in terms of cure.

Similar experiments to mobilize antibodies against cancers are being carried out in the United States and elsewhere-some with encouraging results. Dr. Zavaleta's experiment differs in some respects.

He injected cancer cells into his leg, His system formed antibodies to destroy the foreign cells, much as antibodies are formed to resist bacteria, or to reject transplanted organs.

He then bled himself to obtain lymphocytes, white blood cells carrying the antibodies, and transferred them to his sister.

An associate of Zavaleta, Dr. Oscar Miro Quesaea, told The Associated Press: "It is too early to know the results of Dr Zavaleta's technique. But this is a beginning. Now we have to wait five years to see if the cancer returns."

Some 12 years ago, experiments with volunteers at the Ohio Penitentiary, conducted by Sloan-Kettering Institute scientists, showed that the men developed antibodies and soon destroyed cancer cells injected into them. Zavaleta said he had worked, more recently, with Dr. Chester Stock at the institute in New York City.

In Buffalo, N.Y., at the Roswell Park Memorial institute, research on producing antibodies is being carried out between pairs of cancer patients.

Cells from one patient's tumor are transplanted into the second patient, and vice versa. A few weeks later, blood is withdrawn and spun to extract the white cells with their antibodies, while red cells and serum are given back to the patient.

The white cells from the first patient are given to the second patient to act against his tumor, and similarly with the second patient. The treatment is repeated eight to 10 times, at three-to-four-day intervals, said Dr. James T. Grace of Roswell.

While figures on results "are still in the ballpark range" before closer analysis, roughly 15 per cent of patients have shown some measurable, objective signs of regression of their tumors, and in three to four per cent "we have seen complete disappearance, in one case for 20 months," Grace said.

"There is enough to warrant additional study."

Lecture on Problems in Guatemala To Be Given by Maryknoll Priest

Blaze Bompane, Maryknoll priest ousted from Guatemala for his radical activities, will speak Friday at 11:15 in Bartlett Auditorium.

During his five years of experience with the Maryknoll Mission in Guatemala, Bompane worked with university students attempting to acquaint them with problems of social and economic development. As an extension of a seminar on social and economic systems, Bompane took some students to the highland areas of Guatemala, heavily populated by the Indians of that country.

Bompane and his group, through helping the Indians and peasants organize towards greater political and social strength, became identified with revolutionary activities in the mountain regions, and many of his students became aligned with the leftist movement.

As a result, the Guatemalan government, through the church and the U. S. State Department, requested that Bompane and certain other members of the Maryknoll Mission leave the country. Bompane has been traveling and lecturing to civic groups and universities and colleges, presenting his views on the situation in Guatemala and the relation of the United States to that country.

Senate Academic Affairs Committee Adopts Curriculum Reform Resolution

Editor's note: The Academic Affairs Committee has adopted the following resolution on curriculum reform by unanimous vote of the Committee on December 3, 1968.

The Academic Affairs Committee wishes to make public its recognition of the sad state of our present curriculum - to recognise the profound and fundamental changes in society, technology and education which have passed since our curriculum was last seriously examined, and of the pressing need to revise our program of study to bring it fully and squarely into the final third of the 20th century.

The Committee makes further particular recognition of the state of our curriculum as it regards the black man in America today. The shocking and indefensivle distortion and outright denial of the place and role of the black people is a condition which can no longer be allowed to corrupt our educational program.

The Committee endorses and encourages the efforts of all those working constructively for change in our present curriculum - extending its support and encouragement to those individuals and groups working toward the great end of the improvement of education.

The Committee takes particular note of the beginning efforts of those few departments which have begun the task of revising their position as regards the blacks - praising these efforts at initiating this long overdue reform; and heartily commending the idea to those other departments which have yet to begin such efforts.

The Committee gives notice of its own intention to devote such time as is necessary to this task of curriculum review; and pledges to do all in its power to contribute meaningfully to the pressing task of updating and modernising the curriculum for the greater service and benefit of students of every persuasion and race.

AACS Makes Available Three Books On Summer Employment Opportunities

Students looking for summer jobs can now get help from the American Association of College Students.

In response to requests from college students throughout the country, the Association has prepared three booklets listing organizations interested in hiring college students for summer employment.

One booklet lists jobs available in recreation and resort areas. More than 450 dude ranches, restaurants, hotels, and camps are included i n the catalog. It also discusses ways to get jobs in national parks.

The second booklet deals with jobs in business and industry. More than 60 companies are listed with information on what the company does, what type of background is required for summer employees, and how many students the company plans to hire.

Information on more than 25, 000 jobs with the federal government is included in the third booklet. Each department and agency of the federal government which hires students in the summer is listed along with the academic majors students should have to apply to that agency.

"These booklets should be a tremendous help to students looking for jobs outside their home towns," according to Alan Jenkins, executive secretary of the AACS. "Together they represent more than 50,000 jobs. There should be something there for students with any type of background or interest."

The booklets may be obtained by writing: Summer Jobs, American Association of College Students, 30 N. LaSalle Street, Chicago, Illinois, 60602.

There is a $2 service charge to cover the cost of printing and handling for each booklet. Requests should specify which catalog is desired: recreation, business or government.

Contributions Sought In Christmas Drive For Poor Of Martin County, Kentucky

On December 9th, 10th, 11th, and 12th, Monday through Thursday, the brothers and pledges of Delta Chi fraternity, in conjunction with members of the Martin Luther King, Jr., Social Action Council, will be conducting a Christmas drive covering the town of Amherst and the UMass campus. The drive will be conducted on behalf of the poor in Martin County, Kentucky, the third poorest county in the United States.

Contributions of clothing, canned food, blankets, soap, towels, handkerchiefs, vaseline, toothbrushes, toothpaste, shampoo, needles and thread, cooking utensils, and any other such necessities of life are needed. Monetary donations for purchase of used toys and for payment of shipping costs are also needed. Contributions will be collected door-to-door and in every dormitory, fraternity, and sorority during the week of December 9th.

Anyone who would be willing to distribute corrugated boxes in the dormitories or who would be willing to pick up contributions may call Steve Hierman or Don Abbott at 549-1271 or Paul Spigel at 549-0415.

A WOMAN TELLS WHAT POVERTY IS

EXCERPTS OF STATEMENTS BY JO GOODWIN PARKER, A RESIDENT OF INEZ, KENTUCKY, IN THE HEART OF APPALACHIA:

You ask me what is poverty? Listen to me. Here I am, dirty, smelly and with no "proper" underwear on and with the stench of my rotting teeth near you. I will tell you. Listen to me. Listen without pity. I cannot use your pity. Listen with understanding. Put yourself in my dirty, worn out, ill fitting shoes, and hear me.

Poverty is getting up every morning from a dirt and illness stained mattress. The sheets have long since been used for diapers. Poverty is living in a smell that never leaves. This is a smell of urine, sour milk, and spoiling food sometimes joined with the strong smell of long-cooked onions. Onions are cheap...

Poverty is being tired. I have always been tired. They told me at the hospital when the last baby came, that I have chronic anemia caused from poor diet, a bad case of worms, and that I needed a corrective operation...

Poverty is dirt. You say in your clean clothes coming from your clean house, "anybody can be clean." Let me explain about housekeeping with no money. For breakfast I give my children grits with no oleo or cornbread without eggs or oleo. This does not use up many dishes. What dishes there are, I wash in cold water and with no soap. Even the cheapest soap has to be saved for the baby's diapers...

Poverty is staying up all night on cold nights to watch the fire knowing one spark on the newspaper covering the walls means your sleeping children die in flames...Poverty means insects in your food, in your nose, in your eyes, and crawling over you when you sleep. Poverty is hoping it never rains because diapers won't dry when it rains and soon you are using newspapers. Poverty is seeing your children forever with runny noses. Paper handkerchiefs cost money and all your rags you need for other things...

Poverty is remembering. It is remembering quitting school in junior high because the "nice" children had been so cruel about my clothes and my smell...

Poverty is looking into a black future. Your children won't play with my boys. They will turn to other boys who steal to get what they want. I can already see them behind the bars of their prison instead of behind the bars of my poverty. Or they will turn to the freedom of alcohol or drugs, and find themselves enslaved. And my daughter? At best there is for her a life like mine. It would be sensible for me to wish her dead...

I have come out of my despair to tell you this. Remember I did not come from another place or another time. Others like me are all around you. Look at us with an angry heart, anger that will help you and help me. Anger that will let you tell of me. The poor are always silent. Can you be silent too?

Campus Humor Magazine To Appear Next Friday

Friday the thirteenth is coming. So is the campus humor magazine. Out of the rubble, rubbish and ashes of YAHOO will rise a new and greater bird to terrify the legislature and tickle the campus. After two years of sitting and waiting (and trying to keep those smiles wiped off their faces) the editors proudly present the weirdest assortment of glorps, quags and merkles ever printed between two covers (excepting , of course, the Sears catalogue).

The nameless magazine will be distributed to dormitories, fraternities and sororities on Friday, the thirteenth of December. Copies will be available for commuters in the Franklin room, S.U. Please try not to get the humor office confused with the Student Senate next door.

The editors would greatly appreciate any help you can offer on the Sprin g issue, especially if you're a great writer, cartoonist, artist, photographer or layout expert (that's not what you're thinking). C.H.M. is an equal opportunity employer.

Any correspondance, sub - scriptions, lawsuits etc. should be sent to: campus humor magazine, R.S.O. #106, Student Union Building, UMass., Amherst, Mass. 01002

Chanukah Celebration To Be Held By Hillel

Hillel will once again be sponsoring its annual Chanukah party on December 14 from 7 - 11 p.m. This holiday celebrates the rebellion of the Jews from the religious oppression of the Syrians in 186 B.C.E. Judah the Maccabee lead a small army of Jews and reestablished the independence of the Judean State.

After the war, Judah and his followers entered the desecrated Temple in Jerusalem and purified it. Tradition has it that when they went to kindle the eternal light, they discovered that there was only enough consecrated oil to last one day. Through a miracle the flame lasted eight days -- long enough to prepare more oil. Therefore we celebrate Chanukah eight days, to commerate this miracle.

At this celebration, Hillel will serve latkes (potato pancakes) and will present a program of Israeli dancing and folksinging. It will be held in Berkshire Dining Commons #9, U. Mass. All students, faculty and administration are invited.

Protest Composer-Pianist To Perform His Works Tue.

"Do your own thing" is a popular cry of today's young generation. Ran Blake exemplifies this cry. Ran a young protest composer and pianist, whose contemporary impressions blend the rare combination of pop, blues-oriented, and classical music, will be "doing his thing" Tuesday night. His unique performance consists of original compositions with titles such as "Police State" and "Birmingham, U.S.A." and of interpretations of other works such as Jerome Kern's "Old Man River."

A student at the New England Conservatory of Music in Boston, Ran Blake has been playing conscientous, intellectually-impressionistic music since the mid-fifties. He is known throughout Europe and in the words of his instructor Gunther Schuller,"Ran is one of the few successful impressionists and painters left in music. His is an improvised music, deeply felt and newly interpreted in each performance. But it works because it has its own disciplines of thematic organization, of formal cohesion, and of stylistic consciousness."

Ran will be presenting his musical collage Tuesday night, December 17, in the Student Union Ballroom at 8:00 p.m., as a guest of the University Music Committee. There will be no charge so do come and see Ran "do his thing".

University Music Groups To Present Concert Sunday At Bowker Auditorium

The University of Massachusetts Symphony Band and Chamber Winds ensemble will present a concert in Bowker Auditorium on Sunday afternoon, December 8, at 3:00 p.m. There is no admission charge. Guests at the concert will be the Madrigal Singers and the Chamber Singers.

The band's program will include "A Solemn Music" by Virgil Thomson. This work was commissioned by the League of Composers for the Goldman Band. It was first performed at the season's opening concert of this band on June 17, 1949 in New York City with the composer conducting. The work is a chaconne in ternary form, with continuous variation over an eight measure harmonic theme.

The band will also play "Procession of Nobles" from "Mlada" by Nicholas Rimsky-Korsakov. The opera-ballet "Mlada" was begun in 1889 and completed in 1892. It was first produced at the Marinsky Theatre, St. Petersburg, Russia, in 1893. It was never performed in America. Rimsky-Korsakov later made a suite of five selections from the opera-ballet, the last of which is called "Procession of Nobles". " A Festive Overture" by Dimitri Shostakovich was written in 1954 and was first performed in early November of that year. The work reflects a marked change in Shostakovich's style. Shostakovich scored the work for a Russian band in 1958. The transcription for American symphony band instrumentation is by Donald Hunsberger. John Barnes Chance wrote "Variations on a Forean Folk Song" in the spring and summer of 1965 and received the annual Ostwald Award of the American Bandmasters Association in 1966. The work consists of an unpretentious set of variations which take advantage of the unusual construction of the melody in the folk song Arrirang. The melody is pentatonic and consists of two eight measure sections each of which is divided into groupings of 3 and 3 and 2 measures. Aside from the fact that the work is based upon this folk melody, the composer has made no pretention of retaining the Oriental nature of this music. " Prelude and Dance" by Paul Creston was commissioned for symphonic band by Kappa Kappa Psi and Tau Beta Sigma in 1960. After the opening prelude the work exploits the cross rhythms obtainable from the two dance rhythms. The dance section is in three parts: in the first, the principal dance rhythm is presented in 3-measure units; the second, another dance rhythm in 7-measure units; the final section juxtaposes the dance rhythm from the preceding two sections and exploits the cross rhythms obtained by the uneven length of the phrases.

"Serenade in E flat Major, Opus 7", by Richard Strauss will be performed by the Chamber Band. This serenade for wind instruments was inspired by the pre-occupation of Richard Strauss with the wind music of Mozart and by his desire to discover through experimentation the capabilities of wind instruments. The "Serenade" is composed in tradition-based musical language and is delightful in its simple and unpretentious melodic beauty. It is the third of Richard Strauss' works and was written when the composer was eighteen years old.

INSIDE REPORT:

SCOOP JACKSON'S CONDITIONS

BY ROWLAND EVANS AND ROBERT NOVAK

WASHINGTON--The question of whether Henry M. (Scoop) Jackson, the hawkish Democrat from Washington, will be the next Secretary of Defense hinges mainly on whether he gets a mandate over defense policies and programs from President-elect Nixon.

There is no question that Nixon wants Jackson in the Pentagon. Jackson has been sounded out by one of Mr. Nixon's top talent scouts in a long-distance telephone call.

No flat offer was made but Jackson left the distinct impression with the Nixon operative that he was interested in giving up his Congressional sanctuary as a critic of defense policies to actually run the show. However, to forego 16 years of Senate seniority, high posts on both the Armed Services and Atomic Energy committees and chairmanship of the interior committee, Jackson also made clear that he had to be his own man in the Pentagon with real--not just symbolic--power.

It's entirely possible that Nixon will give Jackson what he wants. If so, the appointment would elevate the chairman of the Democratic National Committee during John F. Kennedy's 1960 campaign to a top post in the Cabinet of the man Kennedy defeated.

Mr. Nixon's seriousness about Jackson as Secretary of Defense became clear last week during his visit with Sen. John Tower of Texas. Nixon's key question to Tower was whether conservative Republicans on the Armed Services committee--specifically including Tower--would feel comfortable with Jackson running the Pentagon. Tower's answer: a resounding yes.

Any lesser response would probably have doomed Jackson, because Nixon is beholden to Tower for his preconvention activity on behalf of the Nixon candidacy.

Moreover, Nixon's careful survey of conservative Republican opinion has not yet turned up any prospective veto. In the House, the powerful Rep. Melvin Laird of Wisconsin is privately but enthusiastically boosting Jackson.

Accordingly, Jackson must now be regarded as a prohibitive favorite, the obvious answer to Nixon's quest for a Democrat with wide acceptance within his own party to give the Nixon cabinet a bi-partisan aura. If Nixon is unwilling to give Jackson a serious mandate in the Pentagon, others now under consideration include right-winger Robert Gavin, chairman of the board of Motorola Corp., and Mayor Eric Jonsson of Dallas, a nominal Republican.

Contrary to speculation, Cyrus Vance, former Deputy Secretary of Defense and now No. 2 man on the U.S. negotiating team in Paris, has never been considered by Nixon. Nor has Secretary of Defense Clark Clifford, who is strongly opposed by Tower, Laird, and other key Republicans because of his inside connection with the last three Democratic Presidents.

The only real obstacle to Jackson had been Gov. Nelson Rockefeller, but Nixon's deft handling of Rockefeller last week removed him from any possibility of becoming Secretary of Defense (the only job he might have accepted) or any job in the Nixon cabinet, with the onus on Rickefeller instead of Nixon.

Rockefeller had strongly hinted in October, during the height of the campaign, that he would be interested only in Defense or State. Nixon resented that, viewing it as a Rockefeller effort to put him in a corner. He let Rockefeller know in advance of their conversation last Tuesday that neither job would be available. Thus, there were only the amenities when Rockefeller arrived at Mr. Nixon's Fifth Avenue apartment: a pro forma request by Nixon that the Governor take the United Nations job, and an immediate turndown by Rockefeller.

Some Nixon advisers are a bit chary about Jackson's hard conditions for a free hand in the Pentagon. Long a vociferous supporter of all-out defense preparedness, he might find it hard to say no to the generals. If so, his Pentagon regime could be very expensive. But Nixon advisers expect a higher defense budget anyway, partly to replace arms stockpiles drawn down by the Vietnam war and partly to carry out Nixon's pledge of U.S. supremacy in atomic arms.

Consequently, with little to disagree about, Jackson's demand for a mandate might require the new President to give up very little.

SPEAKING OUT

BAIRD AND BIRTH

In its continuing policy of bringing the campus community into contact with pertinent newsmakers the MDC has interviewed Asst. District Attorney Joseph Knowlittle. Mr. Knowlittle is the prosecutor in William Baird's appeal of his conviction for violating the law prohibiting the displaying or discussing of birth control devices before unmarried persons, which Baird did at Boston University last year.

MDC: Mr. Knowlittle, you have said that Mr. Baird's remarks were an open invitation to promiscuity and sexual license . . .

Knowlittle: Son, how true that is. It is people like Baird who are causing our society to degenerate and are leading young people into the depths of depravity. Why kiddies today are so fast and loose! You have girls growing breasts as soon as they reach puberty and boys wearing buttons with double-entendre meanings like "Peace" or four letter words like "Love". And they support Baird! Where is respect for authority?

MDC: Pope is a four letter word. You also said that birth control will not prevent unwanted births. What in your opinion will?

Knowlittle: Son, if we cannot practice normal self-restraint then let a humane method of control be imposed. like chastity belts.

MDC: What evidence have you that the law which Baird violated guards our morals and that he advocates immorality?

Knowlittle: Son, as chief persecuter-I mean prosecutor-I have launched a thorough Inquisition-that is inquiry-concerning Baird. Goodness, if he were allowed to speak freely think of the ideas our children would get. Even the legendary chastity of the dear girls at the University of Massachusetts might suffer.

MDC: Some people have alleged that the Catholic Church is behind the prosecution of Baird and that it is doing all it can to convict him and uphold the "laws protecting chastity".

Knowlittle: Father, I don't know how such a rumor got started.

MDC: Do you really believe that if Baird is silenced and imprisoned Massachusetts will be a better, more moral place to live?

Knowlittle: Oh, yes. I know in my heart that as soon as that nasty man is convicted Massachusetts will again be free of all crime and corruption as it was before he came. God bless our legislature, and will once again be able to claim itself the purest of the Papal States-I mean United States.

Home of the Wayward

In recent weeks the members of Students for a Democratic Society on this campus have through various antics attempted to show the University community the wrongs of society and the way to a better tomorrow. The path it follows is destruction, destruction of political, economic, educational, and social institutions which the United States has been building for two hundred years. As it skips along its way, SDS members litter the countryside with irrational acts of unsuccessful social sabotage which they attempt to dress in cloaks of humanity and intelligence.

But the paths of these sometimes bitter, alienated children are built on clouds. They lead nowhere. SDS offers no real answer to the evils it crusades against, and does not even offer a realistic picture of those evils. Its disgust with the evils of war is shared by all, but its realistic understanding of the fact of war and the need for the military is limited. It fights the major problem facing the country, race conflict, but offers no substantial solution. The Wallace phenomenon will not be curbed by refusing to vote.

And so these 35 separate voices have been heard above 15,000 others in the area media. This group which will not allow itself to be molded into a hierarchial organization and will not offer a realistic policy of substance on any matter puts itself off as the thinking man's group. Its real worth to the University community should be realized, not as a catalyst for change, but as a home for wayward children.

MARCHING BAND

Anyone who attended a football game this fall was entertained by the UMass marching band at half time. The marching band has a dual identity on campus. It is an R.S.O. group, which means that it is student run. But the Music Department also gives one credit for playing in the band. It is also a departmental requirement that all music education majors take three years of marching band. The uniqueness of the marching band lies in the fact that the Fine Arts Council supports it financially, and the Fine Arts Council is in turn financed by student taxes which everyone pays each semester. The question to be asked is, "Why, if it is a University course with a departmental requirement, does it receive student money through the Fine Arts Council?" The marching band is the only R.S.O. that gets any academic credit from the University, and it has its own add-drop period.

Where Dwight Stands

To the editor:

Dwight House wishes to inform the entire University of the stand it has taken regarding dormitory autonomy and the concept of community within the dormitory structure. Prejudiced judgements have been made by people who have not taken time to examine the facts. Rumors have reached us which range from claims of "drunken brawls" to "wild sex orgies" in the dorm. Because of such misunderstandings, we feel the need to explain the real issues, which have been clouded. These issues, as agreed upon by the majority of the community, are:

1) The residents of Dwight House are attempting to establish a community, i.e. every individual is responsible to herself in matters concerning only herself; she is responsible to the corridor in matters concerning the corridor, and to the dormitory in matters concerning the entire dormitory. This community was established as a substitute for the old, ineffective judicial system. However, our executive council is still in existence and functioning within the new community structure.

2) An issue has been made of Dwight's violation of certain University regulations. It has been suggested to us by several outsiders that we allow violations to continue while officially stating that we are within University guidelines. Although many dorms are now in such clandestine violation of University policy, the residents of Dwight House feel that it is better to be honest about policies agreed upon by the residents.

3) According to University policy each dormitory is autonomous.

Our understanding of this is that each dorm should make its own decisions regarding the policies followed within the dorm.

One of our main objectives from the outset has been to secure this autonomy.

With these points in mind, we shall be happy to answer and questions concerning our efforts to establish a dormitory community.

Better Defense

To the editor:

I would like to call to the students attention an advertisement which appeared on page 7 of Wednesday's Collegian. This ad, sponsored by the Durasol Chemical Co., urged students to protect themselves from molesters by purchasing a small, tear-gas type device. I urge all students to refrain from making such a foolish and dangerous investment. Although this product is legal (or so claims the ad), it is both dangerous and often useless in the hands of untrained people. First of all, there is the danger of accidental discharge. These devices are fired by either pressure from within the container or a blast from a blank cartridge. Accidentally dropping or striking the device could set it off. Secondly, there is the danger that the user may be affected by the spray. These devices are only good for short distances and a good backwind can send the spray into your face.

Aside from the above dangers, these devices are often useless. What attacker is going to stand by while a young lady fumbles through her purse to find the device which she may have forgotten to bring with her in the first place? Because of the short range of the device, a deadly accurate aim is necessary. How accurate do you think a young lady can be while she is being molested? Finally, there is the danger that a nervous young lady might fire the device at an innocent passer-by who happened to look menacing under the poor lighting conditions on parts of our campus.

Instead of carrying tear-gas devices, I would suggest that young ladies do three things:

1) Scream. This is often the best defense.

2) Use the escort service which was recently established.

3) Learn to defend yourself with your hands only if necessary.

I would suggest that the Physical Education department offer a short course (for both men and women) on simple self-defense (NOT Karate) as part of the regular Phys. Ed. requirement.

Of course, the best solution is to eliminate the conditions that make these incidents possible - poor lighting, dense shrubbery, and inadequate security patrols. In the meantime, however, I hope that no student will feel compelled to purchase any kind of a defense device no matter how "safe" it is claimed to be.

Remember

To the editor:

Let us remember Pearl Harbor on this, its 27th anniversary. When our country was attacked, the President, proceeding properly under the Constitution, asked Congress to declare a state of war with Japan. The Constitution specifically provides that such responsibility rests with Congress alone.

We are now in a de facto war with North Viet Nam involving over half a million men. It is far from over. No President has the legal right to prosecute such a war without authorization from Congress. It was never intended, in our Republic, that one man should have such power of life and death over his fellow-men.

Let us start our crusade for law and order at the top level and uphold the supreme law of the land, which is the U. S. Constitution. Let us insist that the Senate rescind the fllegal, openended Tonkin Gulf Resolution, and let us insist that the Congress stand up and be counted as to whether a state of war exists with North Viet Nam.

And, more important, since we have 43 Messianic treaties pledging our youth and treasure to defend 43 other nations from "aggression", let us make doubly sure in the future that Congress, representing all the citizens, assume its Constitutional responsibility for war involvement.

A clear strong voice from our glorious past, perhaps faintly now, still resounds: ". . . government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth."

Let us see that it doesn't.

Pounding

Once upon a midnight dreary,
As I pondered, weak and weary,
Over many a quaint and curious
Problem of forgotten math--
As I subtracted instead of adding,
Suddenly there came a tapping,
As of someone gently pounding,
Pounding on the walls and floor.

As the building shook and shuddered,
I got up and softly muttered,
"Who is this who shakes the Towers,
Rudely breaking quiet hours?
"Who is this who late at night
Makes the building shake with fright?
"Who is this so gently pounding,
Pounding on the walls and floor?"

As I opened up the door,
The building quivered, and shook some more.
As I looked out from the door,
something snapped, and I went mad.

"Who is this, so mean and bad,
Who makes these noises, like a cad?
"Who is this so gently pounding,
Pounding on the walls and floor?"

As I stood there, red and fuming,
Suddenly there came a booming
Of a voice I knew quite well.
The source? A person, strong and tall,
Who was a hero in the fall--
A football player, tall and strong,
Who asked "Who is this? He should be hung,
Hinting that we could do some wrong!"

So I stood there, mutely shaking,
Not daring to say that they were making
Too much noise for late at night.
I didn't call to my counselor true,
Because HE was out there, too,
Though he KNEW it wasn't right.

So I went back to my room,
Closing the door with a little "boom".
And so my counselor wrote me up,
For making noise that would disrupt.
Who is this, so curious and quaint,
Who can make against me a complaint,
When he himself is gently pounding,
Pounding on the walls and floor?

YOUR HELP

Foreign Languages

Two of the primary objectives of a liberal education according to the College of Arts and Sciences philosophy pertain directly to the study of a foreign language: to master a foreign tongue and to gain insight into the language's culture. Are these objectives met adequately by the language departments? Indeed, is the knowledge of a foreign language a necessary factor for a liberal education? What about the "proficiency requirement"? Harvard University's language requirement for incoming freshmen is lower than that of UMass. Are upper level courses relevant to the goals of majors? What about the adequacy of present teaching methods? The language laboratory? French and Spanish corridors? What exactly is the feasibility and demand for additional courses in present departments and the establishment of new departments such as Hebrew? Things are not what they snould or can be. The student IS being cheated. The academic system desperately needs improvement. To accomplish this we need help. If you are concerned about any of these issues, please contact me so that we might effect some meaningful change. If we will not work to change the inadequate status quo, then perhaps we truly deserve it and its irrelevance.

Interdisciplinary Program Task Force

This group has been organized to explore and develop major programs which do not presently exist within the undergraduate curriculum. Among the offerings currently on the agenda for African Studies, Afro-American Studies, American Studies, Comparative Literature, Humanities and Social Science major programs.

The purpose of an interdisciplinary program is to permit the student to select a major program which incorporates courses from several departments, and thus enables one to study a particular area not presently represented by a single department.

One primary thrust will be toward the development of a mechanism whereby custom-tailored interdisciplinary programs can be made more readily available - more often and more widely. Contact:

Social Sciences

What is the role of purpose of the social sciences in a university today? This is the fundamental question we are seeking an answer for. With all its implications such as: (1) why is there a History/Philosophy requirement for the B.A.? Knebel Says Nuclear Scientists Favor De-escalation of Nuclear Armaments

"A large majority of today's nuclear scientists favor de-escalation of nuclear armaments and a sizable number would join an organization pledged to total atomic disarmament."

Such is the conclusion of Fletcher Knebel, widely-known author, in an exclusive article in the December Popular Science Monthly.

"A civil disobedience manifesto of atomic scientists and technicians would have an enormous influence on the world's political leaders," Knebel says, adding:

" No man who labored at Los Alamos to make man's first weapon of annihilation, could have done so without deep questing into his soul. And no man of conscience can work in the vast nuclear complexes today without facing moral questions of a profound nature. The atomic physicist, probing the nature of matter, ponders the meaning of life in the immense light-year expanses of the flaming universe. If the rest of us have known malaise and dread, he has known agony and guilt.'

"The world is ripe for a treaty which will replace the balance of terror with a balance of sanity. When deliverance comes, atomic scientists who led us to the brink will lead us back again."

The POPULAR SCIENCE article stresses that the bombhas "wrought immense changes in society; transformed America into a vast aerospace-nuclear arsenal housing a weapons industry upon whom millions depend for their livelihood." It explains: "As a leader in the maniacal nuclear arms race, the U. S. has also become its prisoner. A colossal arms industry is our largest and most effective lobby."

"While political leaders sense the world's unrest over the bomb and its derivatives of terror, early steps have done little more than nibble at the problem's core.

"What is needed is a man with the professional prestige and emotional commitment of a Leo Szilard-the brilliant refugee Hungarian physicist who worked on the first atomic bomb-to take the lead in marshalling his colleagues. It can be taken for granted that no antibomb organization would have quite the dramatic impact on world opinion as that of the men who design and perfect the great nuclear engines of destruction."

National Association of Schools of Music Elects UMass to an Associate Membership

The University of Massachusetts was elected to Associate Membership in the National Association of Schools of Music on Monday, November 25 at the 44th annual meeting of the Association.

Philip Bezanson represented the school at the meeting which was held at the Statler-Hilton Hotel, Washington, D. C.

Membership of the Association includes 310 universities, colleges and conservatories in the Unitec States. 16 new schools were admitted to membership at this meeting, and 5 schools were promoted from associate to full membership.

During the three-day session the Honorable Roger Stevens, Arts Advisor to the President of the United States addresssd the meeting.

The NASM is designated by the National Commission on Accrediting as the responsible agency for the accreditation of all music degree curricula with specialization in the fields of applied music, music theory, composition, music therapy, musicology, and music as a major in liberal arts programs.

Dr. Kenmore Speaks on the Imminent Spiritual Explosion in Northampton

Dr. H. L. Kenmore of New York City, noted world traveler and lecturer, who has recently returned from a sojourn in India with controversial spiritual master Meher Baba, will speak on the Imminent Spiritual Explosion to be brought about by Meher Baba, in a lecture and film showing to be given at the Peoples Institute in Carnegie Hall, Northampton, December 6 at 8:00 p.m. All are cordially invited. Admission is free.

Dr. Kenmore has been Meher Baba's attending physician and is the only man in the Western Hemisphere to be called by Meher Baba as His "mandali," (intimate disciple.) Dr. Kenmore has lectured in many parts of the world and his broadcasts on Radio New York World-Wide have been heard in 112 countries. His subject, the "Imminent Spiritual Explosion," will reveal the Universal significance of Meher Baba's 42 years of Silence and the imminent breaking of that Silence which will bring about a universal spiritual "Awakening." Dr. Kenmore is the only man in the West fortunate enough to have had a recent SAHAVAS (intimate company,) with this spiritual Master to whom many have journeyed half the way around the world to be in His presence merely for one hour, Meher Baba has asserted that He is the SAME ANCIENT ONE, who has come under different names, in different forms, in different lands, in all cycles of time and in all ages; come again to REDEEM man from his bondage of ignorance and to guide him to realize his true self which is God.

Dr. Kenmore's association with Meher Baba has consequently made him a world authority on Meher Baba's Spiritual Awakening in the 20th century. He will give valuable insights into this present day God-Man thought by many to have a Christ State of Consciousness. Exclusive private films of Meher Baba in India and this country will be shown.

"The Glass Menagerie", "Not For An Age; But For All Time", Opened at Stage West

Tennessee Williams' Drama Critics Circle Award winning play, "The Glass Menagerie", opened Friday, November 29 at Stage/West, is undisputedly a play "not for an age, but for all time". Audiences find that this sensitive first drama from the pen of a master, is just as timely and vital today as it was when first produced in 1945. The beautiful story of human emotions and frailties pertains as validly to people of today's frantic world as it did to those of the relatively calmer days of the late forties.

The play deals with the Wingfield family and their inability to face the harsh realities of the world in which they are forced to live. The mother, Amanda, who was deserted years ago by her philandering husband, lives in a world of nostalgic dreams, dwelling upon her past days of glory as a southern belle. She cannot distinguish between those days of gaity and luxury and the ones that in reality lie ahead for her family. Although she tries with pathetic desperation to instill a sense of ambition in her two children, she is mentally and emotionally out of touch with their individual personalities and needs. Her son, Tom, indulges in his own form of escapism by spending most of this time in the movies, where he can find a world of excitement and adventure not open to him in his own humdrum existence. Laura, her crippled daughter, retreats into a world of fantasy with her menagerie of fragile glass animals. Hopelessly shy, she finds in her romantic imagination a reality she could never hope to attain in her life. And even the Gentleman Caller, who finally appears as a potential husband for Laura, fulfills his need for escape by dwelling on his days as a high school hero when he was the big man on campus.

Directed by Michael Youngfellow, who has just received critical acclaim for his highly comic portrayal of the young husband in "Barefoot in the Park", this new production of "The Glass Menagerie" is a valid, contemporary approach to a ageless story.

"The Glass Menagerie" opens Friday, November 29 and plays nightly Wednesdays through Sundays through December 21, with a Saturday matinee on December 21.

How to interview 170 companies in half an hour.

Just talk to the man from General Electric.

He represents 170 separate GE "companies" that deal in everything from space research to electric toothbrushes. And each of these product departments is autonomous. Each has its own management and business objectives.

So a job at General Electric offers the kind of immediate responsibility you might expect to find only in a small business.

Right from the start you get a chance to demonstrate your initiative and capabilities. And the more you show us, the faster you'll move ahead.

As you do, you'll find that you don't necessarily have to spend a lifetime working on the same job in the same place. We have operations all over the world. Chances are you'll get to try your hand at more than one of them.

Our interviewer will be on campus soon. If you're wondering whether it's possible to find challenging work in big business, please arrange to see him. He speaks for 170 "companies."

Six Former UMass Students Graduate From Vista Program

Six former UMass students, including a former DAILY COLLEGIAN news editor, have recently graduated from VISTA training programs.

Robert F. Gorman, who was COLLEGIAN news editor in 1967, will work the the Newton County Board of Education in Jasper, Arkansas. Gorman attended the Stockbridge School of Agriculture and also studied Agricultire Economics at UMass.

Burton Freedman, a '68 UMass graduate, has been assigned to Las Cruces, New Mexico, to work with the Community Action Agency of Donnona County. Another '68 graduate, Paul T. Pacheco, will assist the Lake County Economic Opportunity Council in Hammond, Indiana. Both Freedman and Pacheco graduated from the VISTA training center in Chicago.

Lee H. Staples of Fairhaven also trained at the Chicago center. Staples received his B. A. from UMass in 1967 and also studied at the Boston College Law School. He will work in Toledo, Ohio for the North Toledo Community House.

Gerda N. Horst is an Amherst native who received her B.S. in Home Economics and her M.S. in Nutrition Education from UMass. Mrs. Horst will serve with the Community Action Against Poverty of Greater Indianapolis.

Jon Rodiek, who received his B.L.A. and M.L.A. degrees from UMass in 1965, graduated from the VISTA training program in Denver. Rodiek will assist the Montfort Missionaries in St. Louis, Missouri in working with street workers and school drop-outs.

New Era Opens For Sicilian Womanhood

ALCAMO, Italy (AP) - Defying an ancient Sicilian code that doomed her to spinsterhood, 20-year-old Franca Viola stood at the altar of a small church here Wednesday and married the man of her choice.

The marriage, in the face of threats against her life, made her a living symbol of a new era for Sicilian womanhood. The nation praised her; its president honored her.

Two years ago Franca was abducted from her home by a rich man's son she had spurned. He raped her while holding her prisoner for several days. Since the Middle Ages Sicilian women have been dishonored by seduction unless they marry their seducer.

But Franca refused to marry the man and all Sicily predicted a life of disgrace and spinsterhood for her.

She stunned this island and won the applause of the rest of Italy when she stood in court and told her abductor, Filippo Melodia: "I do not love you. I will not marry you."

He is serving an 11-year prison term. If she agreed to marry him, the charges would have been dropped.

Franceca's wedding to an old school friend was moved up secretly from 10 a.m. to dawn to avoid the crowd that would have overflowed the little church of Santagesto.

But there was an undertone of warning, too, for the girl who broke the ancient code that for the past 1,000 years has made kidnaping an accepted means of courtship on this island.

Threats came with the messages of good wishes, and police who have kept watch over Franca's home for two years stood guard around the church.

16th Annual Food Management Seminar to Consider Application of the Computer to Food Service

The application of the computer to food service operations will be considered at the 16th annual Food Management Seminar, scheduled for UMass in January. According to Mrs. Jane F. McCullough of Hadley, chairman of the three-day event, one of the feature speakers will be John P. Casbergue, Associate Professor, Division of Medical Dietetics, School of Allied Medical Professions, at The Ohio State University, in Columbus.

Professor Casbergue will appear on the program of the opening session of the seminar on January 22; and will discuss "Computer Applications Are For All - Big or Small". He has had much experience in computer uses, is a frequent speaker at training sessions for industry people concerned with the use of the computer, and has recently published a bibliography of computer references.

The annual Food Management Seminar is sponsored by the Massachusetts Food Service Educational Council and UMass. The Council is made up of representatives of Massachusetts food service industry groups including the Boston and Western Massachusetts branches of the Food Service Executives Association, Boston Epicurean Club, Massachusetts Hotel-Motel Association, Massachusetts Dietetics Association, Massachusetts Restaurant Association, New England Club Managers Association, and the Massachusetts School Food Service Association.

Mrs. McCullough, who is assistant professor in the School of Home Economics' Department of Nutrition and Food at the University of Massachusetts, is chairman of the seminar.

D. Harrison Chosen For U.S. Womens Field Hockey Squad

Miss Deborah Harrison, a junior physical education major, has been selected to play with the United States Women's Field Hockey squad. At the National Field Hockey Tournament held in Glassboro, N. J. over Thanksgiving, Debbie was selected for the squad after playing three games on three successive days with the Northeast Field Hockey Team. This weekend Miss Harrison will travel to Philadelphia to play again.

Red Hot Redmen 82, AIC 74

By MIKE CURRAN
Sports Editor

UMass, with a blistering 58 shooting percentage in the first half, took a 48-32 intermission edge then held off a ballhawking AIC team to gain an 82-74 victory over the Aces before 4,000 at Curry Hicks Cage last night.

The home opening, dampened somewhat by a leaky Cage roof, was a wild and wooly affair with each club throwing the ball away and fouling with reckless abandon. Both squads combined for 49 turnovers and 59 fouls.

Ray Ellerbrook started the scoring with a 10-foot jumper. Baskets by Tom Doyle and Bob Rutherford put the Yellow Jackets into an early lead, but Ellerbrook hit again and Joey DiSarcina converted a free throw attempt to put the Redmen ahead to stay.

UMass extended their margin to a 19-9 score, as Ellerbrook continued to have a hot hand. JC transfer Greg Hill kept AIC in the ball game, however, with some fine shooting from both the field and the line.

The visiting Aces tried to rattle the Redmen with a full court press, but UMass was playing flawless ball at this point. Jack Gallagher and Peter Gayeska converted two rebounds to offset the foul shooting of Rudy Walters and Hill.

With seven minutes left in the half, Ellerbrook threw three 15-footers in to increase the home team's edge 35-22. A minute later the Jersey southpaw had two more buckets, thanks to DiSarcina's passing, to make it 40-24.

AIC managed eight free throws the rest of the period, and these markers were countered by three Dennis Chapman hoops and a Dick Samuelson layup. One of Chapman's buckets was a sensational 35-foot jumper as the buzzer sounded.

The second half resembled an EBL contest. Both clubs ran up and down the court only stopping to shoot a more than occasional foul shot. UMass played the Yellow Jackets even, though, at the latter's type of ball for 20 minutes.

A jump shot and two free throws by Rutherford narrowed the margin somewhat. After a drive by DiSarcina, AIC strung seven points together closing the gap to seven markers with a 50-43 score.

That was the closest AIC came, however. Two followups by Gallagher and three foul shots from Gayeska pushed the Redmen back up to a 57-44 lead.

From there UMass used an avalanche of free throws in holding off the pressing of the Yellow Jackets. The Redmen weren't angels by any means, either. At the 10 minute mark they had four big men in trouble with four personals apiece.

A run of seven markers gave the home team their biggest margin of the contest, making it 67-50. The visitors, forcing UMass turnovers, whittled away at this lead for the rest of the game, but Samuelson, DiSarcina, Gayeska, Mathias, Ellerbrook, John Dreyer and John Shockro all took their turns at the charity stripe.

AIC scored 10 of the last 14 points to close out the contest at 82-74 with UMass on top.

Double Dribbles-The Redmen held a 56-53 rebounding advantage. Gayeska led the way with 14 big ones, followed by Chapman and Mathias with eight apiece.

Scoring wise, Ellerbrook was high man with 24 points, 21 coming before intermission. The Somerville boys were in double figures, Gayeska canning 14 and DiSarcina getting 11...

AIC was led by Hill with 25. He should have quite a year in the small college ranks. The 6'4 junior also pulled down 10 rebounds.

UMass' defense was the talk among the scouts. Gallagher did a phenomenal job on Curtis Mitchell in the man to man setup. Mitchell, last year's leading Yellow Jacket scorer, was held to three points by the 6'5 junior forward.

Coach Jack Leaman, sporting a 2-0 mark, had high praise for both his troops and the opponents. He was especially pleased with the first half performance of the Redmen.

UMass Six to Face Amherst Tonight

By KEN SCHWARTZ
Staff Reporter

Tonight at Orr Rink the UMass varsity hockey team will be facing Amherst College in a game which could push the Redmen over .500 at 2-1.

Amherst wasn't too impressive losing a game scrimmage to Lowell Tech, 7-3. The Redmen defeated Lowell in their opener last week, 11-2.

In preparing for the game Coach Jack Canniff made several line changes. Center Ken Reddick, who had been alternating with Joe Brebbia, will change places with Tom Babson on a line with Paul Riley and Charlie Hanifan. Babson's line will have Bob Madore at right wing and Tom Peters and Brebbia alternating on the left side.

After tonight's game the Redmen will have to make sudden preparations for Yankee Conference rival Vermont, who will be coming to Amherst Saturday night.

The Catamounts feature George "Earthquake" Kreiner, a 6', 210 pound defensemen who is team captain while only a junior. An informed source says that Kreiner is on his way to becoming the greatest drawing card at the University since 1963 when the Zamboni ice-making machine driver completed one-straight intermissions without leaving an inch of the old layer exposed.

Besides Kriener, UVM will skate a team consisting of eight juniors and six sophomores. This young team has already been impressive in two starts this year.

Before their regular season opener against Salem State, the Catamounts faced a powerful Clarkson team in a game-scrimmage and came out on the short end, 8-3. In their opener against Salem State Vermont went into overtime before losing, 5-4. In both games, however, they showed that they could skate against any king of competion.

Both of their first two lines are strong. The first line is centered by sophomore George Minarsky of Willowdale, Ont. His wings will be juniors Jim Yates of Dorval, Que., and Dick Mullany of Westfield, Mass. Minarsky scored 16 goals and added 13 assists in just 11 games for the freshmen last year. Yates scored 13 goals in his sophomore year for the varsity.

UVM's second line is centered by junior Jeff MacLoughlin of Newton. He was the varsity's third leading scorer last year with 19 goals and 13 assists and set a University record with six points against Amherst. Skating with him will be junior Bob Krebs of Potsdam, N.Y. and sophomore Dick Semler of Salisbury, Conn. Their third line will consist of Tom Crane from Buffalo, N.Y., sophomore Steve Paquin of Concord, N.H., and junior Walt Kelly of New Canaan, Conn.

On defense, the Catamounts will have Kriener and junior Steve Lane of Lexington as their first defensive combination.

Owen Jenkins of Troy, N.Y., and Tim Bickford of Buffalo, both sophomores, will be in the second defense.

The Redmen have one important piece of business ahead of them before meeting Vermont and that will be in the form of Amherst College which has always seemed to be tough for UMass skaters.

Nevertheless, the oddsmakers will have to favor Metawampe's disciples in the 7:30 p.m. encounter. A win tonight would make Saturday's game all the more important.

Flying Frosh Five Drown AIC, 106-49, In the Rain

By PETER PASCAVELLI
Assistant Sports Editor

A UMass freshman team that people have said would be a great one proved them right as the Little Redmen unleased a blistering shooting barrage to smother the A.I.C. frosh 106-49 last night at the Cage.

A steady downpour inside the Cage failed to dampen the frosh shooting in their debut as UMass poured them through at a red hot 54 percent from the floor to overwhelm the Yellow Jacket threats.

UMass took over after A.I.C. took an early lead. The Little Redmen took the lead for good at the 12:39 mark of the first half on buckets by guard John Betancourt and proceeded in the next six minutes to outscore the Aces 17-1 to put the game, for all intents and purposes, safely away early.

Keying the surge, besides Betancourt, who was outstanding throughout, was Mike Pagliara. The 5'10 guard hit for five field goals during the streak and took the reins as field general.

They weren't the only ones, however, as the Little Redmen showed that in addition to talent they had depth. Forward Julius Erving whose movement was hampered somewhat by a mending broken thumb, was immense off the boards, sweeping down 14 rebounds and blocking numerous shots, in addition to canning several long range bombs.

6' 8 Tom Austin gave Erving ample support off the boards and proved himself a defensive menace for A.I.C. as he blocked eight shots.

A.I.C. after falling behind by as much as 17 points, did come back behind the fine all-around play of Mike White to cut the UMass lead to a ten point 42-32 margin at halftime.

But the Little Redmen quickly disspelled any Yellow Jacket comeback hopes. UMass came out and proceeded to blow A.I.C. out of the dripping Cage. The frosh behind Austin, Chris Nichols, and Chris Coffin, outscored the visitors 31-7 in the first nine minutes of the half en route to an amazing 64 point half.

That ended any suspense of the outcome and left the fans waiting around to see the frosh pass the century mark. The Little Redmen hit 100 at 2:45 on two foul shots by Don Moore

Leading the well balanced UMass attack was the backcourt duo of Betancourt and Pagliara who scored 23 and 22 points respectively. Erving and Austin each had 11 while Coffin chipped in with 10. Starting forward Rich Vogeley while only scoring seven points, helped the Little Redmen to their dominance of the boards by grabbing seven rebounds.

White, who was injured midway in the second half, led the Yellow Jackets with 20 points.

Concerts, Campus Chest Drive Spark S.E.N.D.O.F.F. Weekend

By PAULA CURRY and DONNA WALDON
Staff Reporters

Wild Wintery Week, the class of 71's edition of Sendoff moves into high gear this weekend with a full slate of concerts, stores, and drives. Highlighting this year's program is the drive to raise $3000 for Campus Chest.

Last Monday the Sophomore Class opened a Christmas store in the Hatch. The store features novelties of all types and is divided into three sections; Ma's Kerchief, with candles and Christmas cards, Pa's Cap, with mugs and ties and Secret Santa, and many other good buys.

Class officers report that it has been such a success under the direction of Carole Andrews that profits have already surpassed the original investment. A half price sale is planned for this Monday.

Members of many campus groups have collected for Campus Chest at all the dorms, sororities and fraternities, and administrative offices. They have received about $500. A date with Queen Linda Tarlow is another fund raising project.

Several major activites planned for the weekend. Friday there will be a concert featuring Martha Reeves and the Vandellas, the Paul Butterfield Blues Band, and the Unifics. Sam and Dave will be at the Cage on Saturday night. On Sunday there will be a spaghetti dinner in the Student Union Ballroom. The closing event of the week long activities will be the combined Amherst and Vassar Choirs singing Handel's Messiah.

Political Theorist to Present View of American Extremists

One thing the new left and the far right agree on is that Gordon Hall is Way Out.

Hall will speak on "The American Political Scene: Far Left to Far Right" Tuesday, Dec.10 at 8 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom. His appearance is being sponsored jointly by the Class of 1970 and the DAILY COLLEGIAN.

Robert Welch, leader of the John Birch Society, calls Hall a "slimy character." The late Malcolm X dubbed him a "white mercenary." American Nazi George Lincoln Rockell says Hall is "the lowest and vilest man I know." Viet Cong sympathizers at Berkeley hooted him off the platform.

The object of this abuse is a tall, mild-seeming Bostonian who has spent nearly half his 44 years investigating and lecturing on extremist groups.

Hall's career on the political fringes has led him to form some pithy judgments on extremism and some of its practitioners.

"I don't feel that we're about to be engulfed by either the Marxist left or the know-nothing right," he said in an interview. "On the other hand, I don't think there's anything in our system that insures that we never will be. If we should have a really bad economic collapse, the country could go either way, left or right.

"Should the left ever get control, at least they would know what to do with power. They have a general program, with China and Castro and the Soviet Union for models.

"But a right-wing coup would be something else entirely. I've studied and talked with the right-ist leaders enough to know that they don't have a glimmer of what they would do about running the country. If Welch ever took over, he's probably be toppled an hour later by the Minutemen."

Hall estimates that about 7 million Americans are involved in fringe politics. He counts about 1,000 organizations on the ultra-right and about 150 on the far left.

Of them all, the Birch Society is most likely to endure, he says, mainly because of the personality of Welch--"He is a man who spent 35 years of his adult life in the mainstream of American business, and he has brought to the society all of the dynamics of a modern corporation."

Welch has claimed the society has between 60,000 and 100,000 members, but Hall thinks the figure is nearer 32,000.

He considers Welch a "sincere, true believer. If he weren't he wouldn't commit such unbelievable tactical errors as labeling Eisenhower a tool of the Communist conspiracy. I know he is sincere because every time he sees me, he turns white, quivers and screams."

Hall regards the Ku Klux Klan as another potent radical force.

"The klan is having a real resurgence," he said. "Its membership is up to about 40,000.

Hall believes some so-called extremist leaders and groups have been largely the creatures of publicity. He so classifies the late Malcolm X and the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee as led by Stokely Carmichael.

Boston School Closed As Teachers Walkout

BOSTON (AP) - The violence wracked Martin Luther King school was closed indefinitely Thursday after rampaging pupils wrecked classrooms, beat one teacher and threatened others.

Chairman Thomas S. Eisenstadt ordered the closing and said it will be for a minimum of six days and probably longer.

The latest outbreak in the school came at mid-morning when pupils, screaming and shouting, fled their classrooms, smashing desks and other furnishings. Ten false fire alarms were sounded.

One teacher was beaten and others locked themselves in their rooms to evade the rampaging pupils.

The fire alarms brought firemen and police who cleared the building, and escorted the teachers to safety.

The new principal of the school, John Bradley, closed the school immediately. Bradley, who is white, was appointed to succeed a black principal who resigned saying he couldn't keep order. The black principal was appointed at the insistence of militant Negro groups in the area.

Louis Vangel, executive director of the Boston Teachers Union, had called for a teacher boycott of the school until order can be restored and kept.

Emery Miller, a Negro sixth grade teacher was attacked by a gang of pupils who knocked him down and kicked him and broke his glasses.

Executive Committee Proposal

Senate Urged to Seek Marijuana Law Reform

by steve sheehan
Staff Reporter

A Bill was placed on next week's Student Senate agenda by the Senate Executive Committee last night which proposes that "the Student Senate recommend to the Massachusetts General Court that all laws prohibiting and punishing marijuana possession be rescinded, and that the State begin action on the granting of licenses for the sale of marijuana and applicable quality controls."

The legislation was sponsored by Senate President Paul Silverman and will be debated Wednesday, December 11th. Silverman cited last year's birth control legislation in discussion over the philosophical nature of this recommendation.

Other business found bills committed to Activities Committee for 2 weeks calling for the withdrawal of Recognized Student Organization status of the Chorale and UMass Bands. Ray Taylor, Chairman of the Senate Activities Committee, explained that these proposals stem from the academic credit offered for these activities and that "their organizational structure isolates the basic tenets of RSO's."

A proposal by Senator Brenner would, if passed "direct Student Matters Committee to review the present work-study pay rates. Brenner drew attention, in his Bill, to the increase in wage taxation starting in January 1969. Currently, students earning work-study money do not pay taxes, but a recent policy change in taxation by the State Legislature called for initiating taxation of these wages.

A discussion followed the Executive Committee's agenda preparation on second semester freshmen women's curfews. It was reported that there is a possibility that the Student Affairs Committee can get its report to the Board of Trustees for action before the beginning of the second semester. If no action is taken to abolish the curfews, Senate Vice President Hartwell reminded the Committee that there is a Bill now in Student Matters which could be brought before the Senate under those circumstances. This Bill tells house judiciaries to follow the rules contained in the 1967 Women's Affairs Committee report on curfews.

That Week in Chicago III

Police Attack News Media

(Ed note: The following is the final installment of the summary of the Walker Report, concerning the week of demonstrations in Chicago during the Democratic convention.)

It was on these nights that the police violence against media representatives reached its peak. Much of it was plainly deliberate. A newsman was pulled aside on Monday by a detective acquaintance of his who said: "The word is being passed to get newsmen." Individual newsmen were warned, "You take my picture tonight and I'm going to get you." Cries of "get the camera" preceded individual attacks on photographers.

A newspaper photographer describes Old Town on Monday at about 9:00 p.m.:

"When the people arrived at the intersection of Wells and Division, they were not standing in the streets. Suddenly a column of policemen ran out from the alley. They were reinforcements. They were under control but there seemed to be no direction.

"One man was yelling, 'Get them up on the sidewalks, turn them around.' Very suddenly the police charged the people on the sidewalks and began beating their heads. A line of cameramen was 'trapped' along with the crowd along the sidewalks, and the police went down the line chopping at the cameras."

A network cameraman reports that on the same night:

"I just saw this guy coming at me with his nightstick and I had the camera up. The tip of his stick hit me right in the mouth, then I put my tongue up there and I noticed that my tooth was gone. I turned around then to try to leave and then this cop came up behind me with his stick and he jabbed me in the back.

"All of a sudden these cops jumped out of the police cars and started just beating the hell out of people. And before anything else happened to me, I saw a man holding a Bell & Howell camera with big wide letters on it, saying, 'CBS'. He apparently had been hit by a cop. And cops were standing around and there was blood streaming down his face.

"Another policeman was running after me and saying, 'Get the (obscenity) out of here.' And I heard another guy scream, 'Get their (obscenity) cameras.' And the next thing I know I was being hit on the head, and I think on the back, and I was just forced down on the ground at the corner of Division and Wells."

If the intent was to discourage the coverage, it was successful in at least one case. A photographer from a news magazine says that finally, "I just stopped shooting, because every time you push the flash, they look at you and they are screaming about, 'Get the f------ photographers' and get the film'."

There is some explanation for the media-directed violence. Camera crews on at least two occasions did stage violence and fake injuries. Demonstrators did sometimes step up their activities for the benefit of TV cameras. Newsmen and photographers' blinding lights did get in the way of police clearing streets, sweeping the park and dispersing demonstrators. Newsmen did, on occasion, disobey legitimate police orders to "move" or "clear the streets." News reporting of events did seem to the police to be anti-Chicago and anti-police.

But was the response appropriate to the provocation?

Out of 300 newsmen assigned to cover the parks and streets of Chicago during convention week, more than 60 (about 20 per cent) were involved in incidents resulting in injury to themselves, damage to their equipment, or their arrest. Sixty-three newsmen were physically attacked by police; in 13 of these instances, photographic or recording equipment was intentionally damaged.

Student Senate elections will be held Tuesday, December 17 for the newly-created constituencies of Moore-Pierpont and Project 10, as well as for James House. The constituencies were incorrectly called Moore, James, and Pierpont in Thursday's DAILY COLLEGIAN.

Two openings are available in both the Moore-Pierpont and Project 10 constituencies, and one vacancy exists in James House. Nomination papers are available from today until December 12 in the R.S.O. office upstairs in the Student Union.

University President Target of S.F. State Student Strike

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) - Strikers stormed the San Francisco State College Administration Building Thursday and tried to get at Acting President S. I. Hayakawa, but were repelled by six policemen with drawn pistols and Mace repellent.

Several hundred police who had been held in reserve off the campus quickly cleared the quadrangle outside of about 2,000 persons in a club-swinging struggle.

At least 13 persons were arrested, including Dr. Carlton Goodlett, Negro publisher; and the Rev. Jerry Pederson, Lutheran chaplian at Ecumenical House, staging center for the demonstration.

As the crowd of about 150 that had burst into the Administration Building fled in confusion, one of them dropped a brief case.

Out popped a .45 caliber automatic. Inside the case were batteries and wires.

About 200 other police, stationed off the campus, quickly arrived.

Leaders of the strike, which has disrupted the college since it was called by the Black Students Union Nov. 6, made the march on Hayakawa's office at the climax to a lunchtime rally.

College Newspaper Condemned For Front Page "Wanted Poster"

AP - A student newspaper at Mary Washington College has launched a ballooning controversy with an issue featuring a front page picture of Christ in the form of a "wanted" poster.

The issue, published Nov. 25, has drawn both praise and bitter condemnation in local newspapers, radio talk shows and local churches.

One outraged citizen has even protested to Virginia Gov. Mills E. Godwin Jr. about the paper at Mary Washington. The school is the women's division of the University of Virginia and has an enrollment of about 2,200.

The poster, prefacing articles on "Christian Radicalism," said Jesus was wanted for conspiring to obstruct the draft by requiring followers not to kill, practicing medicine and wine-making.

"The Police Were Provocated...But Overreacted"

"Malcolm was an overinflated bag of wind--one of the most singularly ignorant men I've known, as regards knowledge of history and public affairs.

"A myth has grown up that in the period just before his assassination, he was moving toward the mainstream of the civil rights movement. Actually, an analysis of the series of lectures he gave during the six months before his death shows clearly that he was moving in the direction of the Peking wing of American Communism.

"I fault the press," Hall went on, "for representing the Black Muslims a s a national movement of real influence. Its membership never exceeded 13,000.

"Malcolm's group, the organization for Afro-American unity, never had more than 75 members."

According to Hall, the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee has only about 150 paid-up members, and has reapr publicity far out of proportion to its size.

The violence did not end with either demonstrators or newsmen on the North Side on Sunday, Monday and Tuesday. It continued in Grant Park on Wednesday. It occurred on Michigan Avenue in front of the Conrad Hilton Hotel, as already described. A high-ranking Chicago police commander admits that on that occasion the police "got out of control." This same commander appears in one of the most vivid scenes of the entire week, trying desperately to keep individual policemen from beating demonstrators as he screams, "For Christ's sake, stop it!"

Thereafter, the violence continued on Michigan Avenue and on the side streets running into Chicago's Loop. A federal official describes how it began:

"I heard a 10-1 call (policeman in trouble) on either my radio or one of the other hand sets carried by men with me and then heard 'car 100 - sweep.' With a roar of motors, squad cars and three-wheelers came from east, west and north into the block north of Jackson. The crowd scattered. A big group ran west on Jackson, with a group of blue shirted policemen in pursuit, beating at them with clubs.

"Some of the crowd would jump into doorways and the police would rout them out. The action was very tough. In my judgment, unnecessarily so. The police were hitting with a vengeance and quite obviously with relish..."

What followed was a club-swinging melee. Police ranged the streets, striking anyone they could catch. To be sure, demonstrators threw things at policemen and at police cars; but the weight of violence was overwhelmingly on the side of the police. A few examples will give the flavor of that night in Chicago:

"At the corner of Congress Plaza and Michigan," states a doctor, "was gathered a group of people, numbering between thirty and forty. They were trapped against a railing (along a ramp leading down from Michigan Avenue to an underground parking garage) by several policemen on motorcycles.

"The police charged the people on motorcycles and struct about a dozen of them, knocking several of them down. About twenty standing there jumped over the railing. On the other side of the railing was a three-to-four-foot drop. None of the people who were struck by the motorcycles appeared to be seriously injured. However, several of them were limping as if they had been run over on their feet."

A UPI reporter witnessed these attacks, too. He relates in his statement that one officer, "with a smile on his face and a fanatical look in his eyes, was standing on a three-wheel cycle, shouting, 'Wahoo, wahoo,' and trying to run down people on the sidewalk." The reporter says he was chased thirty feet by the cycle.

A priest who was in the crowd says he saw a "boy, about fourteen or fifteen, white, standing on top of an automobile yelling something which was unidentifiable. Suddenly a policeman pulled him down from the car and beat him on the ground by striking him three or four times with a nightstick. Other police joined in...and they eventually shoved him to a police van.

"A well-dressed woman saw this incident and spoke angrily to a nearby police captain. As she spoke, another policeman came up from behind and sprayed something in her face with an aerosol can. He then clubbed her to the ground. He and two other policemen then dragged her along the ground to the same paddy wagon and threw her in."

"I ran west on Jackson," a witness states. "West of Wabash, a line of police stretching across both sidewalks and the street charged after a small group I was in. Many people were clubbed and maced as they ran. Some weren't demonstrators at all, but were just pedestrians who didn't know how to react to the charging officers yelling 'Police'."

"A wave of police charged down Jackson," another witness relates. "Fleeing demonstrators were beaten indiscriminately and a temporary, makeshift first aid station was set up on the corner of State and Jackson. Two men lay in pools of blood, their heads severely cut by clubs. A minister moved amongst the crowd, quieting them, brushing aside curious onlookers, and finally asked a policeman to call an ambulance, which he agreed to do..."

An assistant U.S. attorney later reported that "the demonstrators were running as fast as they could but were unable to get out of the way because of the crowds in front of them. I observed the police striking numerous individuals, perhaps 20 to 30. I saw three fall down and then overrun by the police. I observed two demonstrators who had multiple cuts on their heads. We assisted one who was in shock into a passerby's car."

Police violence was a fact of convention week.

Were the policemen who committed it a minority? It appears certain that they were - but one which has imposed some of the consequences of its actions on the majority, and certainly on their commanders.

There has been no public condemnation of these violators of sound police procedure and common decency by either their commanding officers or city officials. Nor (at the time this report is being completed - almost three months after the convention) has any disciplinary action been taken against most of them.

That some policemen lost control of themselves under exceedingly provocative circumstances can perhaps be understood; but not condoned. If no action is taken against them, the effect can only be to discourage the majority of policemen who acted responsibly, and further weaken the bond between police and community.

Although the crowds were finally dispelled on the nights of violence in Chicago, the problems they represent have not been. Surely this is not the last time that a violent dissenting group will clash head-on with those whose duty it is to enforce the law. And the next time the whole world will still be watching.

Brown Blacks Protest Enrollment

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) - About 65 Negro students marched off the campus of Brown University and its sister school, Pembroke College Thursday, vowing not to return until officials meet their demands for increased black enrollments.

The students, who have demanded a Negro quota of 11 per cent in incoming freshmen classes, said the administration's refusal to accede to their demands demonstrates that it is a "racist institution that plans to remain that way."

Some of the students carried suitcases, books and personal items. A few carried blankets.

They marched to a nearby church where they met with Negro community leaders. But the students declined to say whether they would remain there.

Brown has about 2,000 students, of which 50 are Negroes. Pembroke has 35 Negro women enrolled.

Dr. Ray L. Heffner, university president, said he is opposed.

Reishauer Warns Nixon Against Viet Buildup

BOSTON (AP) - Former Ambassador Edwin O. Reischauer said Thursday he hopes President-elect Richard M. Nixon will not be persuaded by "helpful people in the Pentagon" that further military efforts will end in victory in Vietnam.

"My great fear is that the Nixon administration may be a little slow in starting the de-Americanizing of the war," Reischauer told a news conference.

"We have definite dangers to avoid in liquidating the war," the Harvard professor said. World stability would be threatened if the United States pulled out "in a clumsy, helter-skelter way."

Reischauer, a former U. S. ambassador to Japan, was introduced by Harold Willens of Los Angeles, national co-chairman of Business Executives Move for Vietnam Peace. Williams said Reischauer is one of four new "diplomatic sponsors" of the peace group, composed of 2,300 executives.

Williams said the other three sponsors are Prof. John Kenneth Galbraith of Harvard, a former U. S. ambassador to India; Roger Hillsman, former assistant secretary of state for Far Eastern affairs; and Benjamin B. Cohen, another former State Department official.

Reischauer said the new administration should have its own strategy for reducing America's presence in South Vietnam regardless of the outcome of the Paris peace talks.

He said the current goal should be "a negotiated mutual military withdrawal with Hanoi." Both Saigon and the National Liberation Front, also called the Viet Cong, should be "chief negotiators," he said.

Reischauer said the NLF "is a fact of life." He said the Viet Cong, while Communist-led, are "essentially nationalistic."

"The crucial problem," he said, "is the viability of the South Vietnamese government."

The coming month is also crucial, he said, because the decisions formed by the new administration could lead the country out of "the morass of Vietnam."

Reischauer termed the appointment by Nixon of another Harvard professor, Henry A. Kissinger, "excellent." Kissinger was named special assistant for national security.

UMass Professor Named Chairman Of Chem. Society

Sidney Siggia, professor of chemistry at UMass, has been named Chairman-Elect of the Analytical Division of the American Chemical Society.

Dr. Siggia received his B.S. in chemistry at Queens College and his M.S. and Ph.D degrees at the Polytechnic Institute of Brooklyn. Active in industrial research for many years, he joined the UMass faculty in 1966 where he teaches both graduate and undergraduate classes.

Swing Shift Program Successful Grades Higher Than Fall Frosh

--Swing shift, a pioneer admissions experiment at UMass is working well, will be continued and may be expanded.

These are the conclusions of a survey by associate admissions Dean Robert J. Doolan on the University's first Swing Shift freshmen--the 80 men and 102 women admitted in June of 1964.

Swing shift, begun at the University and since adopted with modifications by other institutions, creates some additional spaces for those qualified freshmen who remain in the admission files after all regular freshmen class openings are filled.

The Swing Shift group takes its first semester of work during the summer, leaves campus for study elsewhere or work during fall semester, then returns to complete its freshman year in the spring semester.

Swing Shifters return to fill spaces created by between-semester graduations, dropouts and other causes. The program, which now admits an average of 300 freshmen a year, helps the University utilize facilities to the fullest extent on a year-round basis.

The survey in general indicates that Swing Shift performance levels are as high and in some cases higher than those of regularly-admitted freshmen at UMass.

"There was less academic attrition at the end of their freshman year than the 'regular' class and they performed at an equal academic level," Doolan reports. "Their academic major selections and their performance fell within the general range of the class of 1968."

The cumulative academic average for the Swing Shift group during the first semester was 2.30, definitely better than the regular class first-semester average of 1.94. The balance changed during the second semester, the Swing Shift grade average dropping to 2.03 and the regular average climbing to 2.09.

The summer session, with fewer students and fewer activities going on, probably helps to boost the Swing Shift first-semester average, according to Doolan. The second semester drop may have been caused by the adjustment of the re-entry, he added.

The academic dismissal rate for Swing Shift was 7 per cent at the end of the first year, far below the total dismissal rate of 13 per cent for the whole class.

"The results of this study justify the original decision to begin the program and to continue it to the present time," Doolan concludes.

"Since 1964, the program has provided opportunities for study at the University for almost 1500 young men and women who would have been denied admission into the regular academic year. The program should be continued, and with the increasing number of qualified applicants each year, should be expanded," he said.

Doctors Link - Alcohol Dependence With Later Life Sexual Impotance

MIAMI BEACH (AP) - An expert on human sexual capacity said yesterday excessive alcohol drinking appears to be the greatest single cause of sexual impotence among otherwise healthy males in their late 50's.

Impotence is the inability of the male to perform sexual intercourse--as distinguished from male sterility wherein there in an inability to fertilize the female egg.

Researcher Alexander P. Runciman of the Reproductive Biology Research Foundation, St. Louis, one of the world centers for scientific sex research, discussed impotency in a report to the closing session of the American Medical Association's 22nd clinical convention.

"When impotence develops in the 50's," he said, "it has been found that it had a greater association with excessive alcohol drinking than anything else."

Dr. Runciman also called for public rejection of longheld "myths, taboos, and dangerous stereotypes" which, he said, falsely hold that sexual activity--and enjoyment--by senior citizens is impossible.

He said there is growing scientific evidence that emotionally and physically healthy oldsters--whose sex life was normal during their reproductive years---can often maintain a satisfactory sex drive throughout their very late years, even including their 80's.

"For far too long," he said, "has sex expression been associated only with the reproductive years--and the erroneous contention been made that life, love and romance belong only to the young."

He indicated that, while certain underlying organic defects or diseases may cause impotence, other factors include "outright boredom."

This includes repetitious sex activity, preoccupations with other matters, mental or physical fatigue or overindulgence in food as well as drink.

"Portrait of Jason" Will Be Shown Tonight in Thompson Tower

"Portrait of Jason" is a two hour monologue by a homosexual Negro male prostitute with the gift of gab who sits, lounges and poses in front of a camera in a small room, urged on by the director, some of her friends who remain off-stage, and stimulated by the use of alcohol, marijuana and innumerable cigarettes.

Jason gives one of the most incredible performances ever recorded on film. It may be spontaneous, freakesh and often filthy, but none of this detracts from the film's beauty or value.

Shirley Clarke, the director of this film, is noted for employing an elegantly disciplined understanding of cinema form to investigate extreme situations.

If it is human to err than there is no one more human than Jason. He has a tale to tell about how much it can hurt to be human, and he tells it in magnificently rich language and with the gay desperation of an artist.

He reveals himself slowly with bits and pieces of remembered orgies, profitless hustles and traumatic family confrontations. He is narcissic and finds pleasure in his confessions. He is intelligent, witty, observant, satiric and utterly without reserve. He is also self-deluded and desperate.

Luckily, he is no bore. He is fascinated by the person he supposes himself to be and fascinates the viewer by his delusions. All that he says is the truth about himself, even when it is a lie, it is truth as he knows it.

The suspense of the picture rests on whether or not Jason can get through it without completely going to pieces. This he succeeds in doing in spite of the fact that in the last moments of the film he is baited and taunted by the director apparently to test his response to external stimuli under such conditions, until he cowers, quivers and weeps.

This movie will be shown Friday evening at 8:00 p.m. and 10:00 p.m. in Thompson Tower Auditorium.

Value of SDS To Be Discussed on WFCR

An open end discussion on "The Value of Students for a Democratic Society" will be taped at the WFCR studios in Hampshire House Sunday afternoon between 2 and 4 p.m.

The producers of the program said that all members of the campus community are invited and encouraged to come and express their opinion. The show is being produced in conjunction with a radio production course of the speech department and will be aired over the five College Radio station later in the year.

Producers Dave Ahearn and Dick Bellerive, said that any person who comes to the studio will be "given free use of the mike."

"We would like especially to discuss specific actions taken by SDS in the past and their significance, the ROTC protests, the election protests, and the dog-napalming incident" Ahearn said. "Any member, sympathizer or opponent of SDS is invited."

Nixon will Send Own Observer To Paris Peace Talks

NEW YORK (AP) - President-elect Richard M. Nixon conferred Thursday with U.S. negotiator W. Averell Harriman and indicated he will send an observer to insure continuity in the quest for a settlement of the Vietnam war.

Harriman said he expects to be joined before the end of the year by a liaison man for the new Republican administration Nixon is shaping.

Harriman said both he and his deputy, Cyrus R. Vance, will be replaced by new negotiators at the Paris talks soon after Nixon takes office on Jan. 20.

Harriman, 77, said he will be leaving his assignment around Jan. 20. Vance, he said, may remain a little longer but "not for an extended period of time..."

"I got the impression that he will send an observer," Harriman said of Nixon, "but I don't know who he will be or when he will come."

The assignment might go to Henry Cabot Lodge, now U. S. ambassador to West Germany. Nixon disclosed earlier that there has been discussions to assign Lodge to serve as negotiator of the new administration.

Ronald L. Ziegler, Nixon's spokesman said he could not discuss who might be assigned to represent the president-elect in Paris prior to the inauguration.

He would say only that Nixon now leans toward sending such a representative to the negotiations.

Ziegler had maintained previously that there were no plans for such a move.

Harriman said that he saw no evidence that Nixon will alter the emphasis of U.S. policy. He said he did not believe "there will be any noticeable change from Jan. 20 to Jan. 21."

Two Nixon advisers, State Department liaison man Robert D. Murphy, and Henry A. Kissinger, assistant for national security affairs, flanked Nixon and Harriman at their hour-long talk in the Hotel Pierre suite of the president-elect.

Harriman said the discussion covered issues in the negotiations and personnel in the U.S. delegation to the peace talks. While the top U.S. negotiators will be replaced with the change in administration, Harriman said Nixon indicated he would like to retain diplomatic and military experts now serving in the delegation.

The assignment of Alan Greenspan, 42, an economic consultant, to work as an observer at the Bureau of the Budget prior to the inauguration, was announced Thursday.

Plane Hyjackers Held by FBI

WASHINGTON (AP) - The FBI arrested two men in New York Thursday on conspiracy, piracy and other charges in connection with the hijacking of a U. S. airliner forced to fly to Cuba Nov. 24, Director J. Edgar Hoover announced.

The FBI said the possible punishment if they are convicted is death.

Hoover's announcement said the men, Alejandro Figuerea, 37, and David Gonzalez, 34, conspired with four other persons to bring about the commandeering of the plane with 96 passengers and a crew of seven.

The actual hijackers presumably are still in Cuba.

The FBI announcement identified Figuerea as "a reputed organizer and leader of the Puerto Rican Liberation movement."

Both were described as natives of Puerto Rico now living in New York. Hoover said the liberation movement is a Puerto Rican pre-independence group formed this year.

Charged in the same warrant the FBI said, are Jose Rafael Rios Cruz, 27; his wife, Wilma Reyes Lopez Druz, 21; Luis Armando Pena Soltren, 25, and Miguel Castro, about 40.

All six were charged, the announcement said, under several provisions including conspiracy to violate the federal kidnaping statue, piracy aboard an aircraft, assault with a deadly weapon and carrying a concealed deadly weapon aboard an aircraft.

What the interviewer won't tell you about General Electric.

He won't tell you about all the job opportunities we have for college graduates.

Not that he wouldn't like to.

It's just that there are too many jobs and too little time.

In a half-hour interview our man couldn't begin to outline the scope and diversity of the opportunities we offer. Opportunities for engineering, science, business and liberal arts majors.

That's why we published a brochure called "Career Opportunities at General Electric."

It tells you about our markets, our products, our business philosophy and our benefit programs.

And, in plain language, it tells you exactly how and where a person with your qualifications can start a career with General Electric. It even gives you the first step in starting a career with us — a Personal Information Form for you to fill out.

If you like what the brochure tells you about us, why not tell us about you? Our interviewer will be on campus soon.

INSIDE REPORT:

A Credibility Challenge

BY ROWLAND EVANS AND ROBERT NOVAK

WASHINGTON--One of the many loose ends left by the lame duck Johnson administration for President-elect Nixon to tie up poses an acute problem of credibility on a most sensitive and difficult issue: clandestine financing of Radio Free Europe.

There is scarcely any doubt that the Nixon administration will maintain the hefty U.S. subsidy, size unknown, that is funneled through the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA), to provide almost all the financing for Radio Free Europe's massive propaganda effort beamed at Communist Eastern Europe. The question Nixon must decide is whether to maintain the subsidy under the table or to bring it out in the open.

In the difficult transition period, with key Nixon men pre-occupied with far more important matters, the question of anti-communist propaganda activities is not likely to come up for decision. Nevertheless, it will immediately challenge the new Administration's credibility.

The 18-year history of Radio Free Europe is a classic case of the credibility gap. Its own literature has described Radio Free Europe as "financed through tax-contributions in the United States." Such contributions were solicited over American television through the years, in appeals calculated to give the impression that Radio Free Europe's continued existence was at stake.

The facts were considerably different. Public contributions did not meet a small fraction of the cost of Radio Free Europe's main operation in Munich and its transmitters in Munich, Lisbon and Heidelberg beaming broadcasts to five Eastern European nations--Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Poland and Rumania. The vast proportion of its costs was met by the U.S. taxpayer in the form of secret payments from the CIA. A smaller CIA subsidy covered the costs of the more modest Radio Liberty in Munich, aimed at the Soviet Union.

This arrangement was undisturbed until the 1967 exposures of clandestine CIA subsidies for the National Students Assn. and other supposedly private organizations. When President Johnson named Under-Secretary of State Nicholas deB. Katzenbach to head a special committee to study the problem, CIA's subsidy to Radio Free Europe came under high-level official scrutiny for the first time.

At one point in the committee's closed-door deliberations, Katzenbach seemed inclined to end Radio Free Europe's subsidy along with all others--raising apprehensions among highly responsible students of Communist Europe both inside and outside the State Department.

They pointed out to Katzenbach that in the dozen years since the tragedy of the 1956 Hungarian revolution, Radio Free Europe had halted all appeals for violent overthrow of Communist rule and instead advocated peaceful liberalization of red regimes. In fact, Radio Free Europe's young staff researchers often seemed more interested in East-West bridge building than did hardened old foreign service offices in foggy bottom.

Most important, apart from the British Broadcasting Corporation's excellent overseas service, Radio Free Europe provides most Eastern Europeans with their only reliable information about what's going on in their own countries (in contrast with the dismal programming to Eastern Europe by the Voice of America, the official U.S government agency).

Consequently, although Katzenbach's report a year ago recommended an end to all CIA secret subsidies, he has permitted continued financing of Radio Free Europe and Radio Liberty from CIA funds, with one change in the direction of credibility: a demand that Radio Free Europe cease its misleading appeals for money on U.S. television.

Otherwise, the matter has been in limbo with the lame duck Administration not actually announcing the continued subsidy but confirming its existence if and when asked. This leaves the final decision to the new Administration.

With some of Nixon's financial supporters among Radio Free Europe's sponsors, the subsidy will assuredly continue in one of three forms: (1) as a secret CIA contribution not acknowledged by the government; (2) as a CIA contribution whose existence is announced but size not disclosed or subjected to congressional scrutiny or (3) as a regular congressional appropriation subject to normal congressional procedures.

The last procedure would be by far the most difficult, perhaps eroding Radio Free Europe's influence by underlining its dependence on U.S. tax funds and subjecting its quasi-public operations to the same congressional dead hand that has helped stultify the Voice of America. This clearly shows that the course of full credibility is not always a smooth or even desirable one.

The Washington Report

Free Enterprise Tested

WASHINGTON-The Nixon victory can be promising to the extent that Republicans will now have to put their vaunted alternatives to the test of America's very serious problems. If their alternatives work, great. If they don't, then the Republicans will have learned something. In the meantime, Congress appears ready to give Nixon the benefit of the doubt--recognizing, after all, that it is the Democrats in the executive branch who got us where we are.

Nixon's chief problem, vis a vis the Democrats, is that he starts out with a credibility gap without even the chance to earn it. Few people, including this writer, took generous stock in the Republican's enunciation of such items as "black capitalism" (a Democratic idea) or "tax incentives" to bring employers to the ghetto, out of the partisan--and legitimate--fear that these were laissez faire cover-ups for scuttling the federal anti-poverty effort.

Actually, the Democrats were beginning to reach an accomodation with free enterprise on their own prior to the election. In purer days the Democrats would prefer a new federal bureau in cases where the Republicans would look to private enterprise.

Housing was one example. Public housing was public all the way: construction and management both under civil service. Gradually, the Democrats have turned to private enterprise. They found, for example, that the "turn-key" method of purchasing finished buildings was less expensive, better in quality and more rapid than constructing their own. Once the housing was ready for occupancy, they found that private management contractors were far more efficient and responsive to tenants needs than were civil service bureaucrats who commuted in on weekdays only in their Pontiac Bonnevilles.

Across the river, the city dump was a national disgrace, breeding rats and pouring 20 tons of pollutants into the air daily. Now the operation has been turned over to a private contractor who landfills trash for less than the cost of burning it and fails to lay rat poison only at his peril. (In Philadelphia, the entire trash disposal situation is being turned over to private enterprise at a substantial reduction in cost. All the city will be doing soon is delivering the trash to private transfer stations; a company will do the rest, using sound business methods to cut costs but always watchful not to jeopardize its contract.)

It is all straight from the textbooks on power and self-interest: a private contractor (under the eye of a public watchdog) is going to be far more efficient and effective than a disinterested bureaucrat whose position is assured.

Free enterprise, certainly, is a proven tool for economic development, and if anyone can harness it efficiently to tackle urban problems it is probably a Republican. Democrats themselves lament the unresponsiveness of the civil service system and will no doubt be glad to see some de-escalation of it, if at no cost to the public welfare. This is not the same thing as Michael Harrington's favorite nightmare that someday the government itself will be contracted out to Litton Industries--for a profit.

Efficient administration is one of the sound Republican principles which could be taken more advantage of in the implementation of established programs. Fortunately the voting patterns are such, as America becomes more urbanized, that no President now could exert these principles at the expense of Democratic compassion. Admittedly, too many of this decade's programs were pushed through by a democratic regime with too little attention toward operational safeguards and effectiveness, but a President who wishes to be re-elected by the people will not abandon these programs.

This is not to imply necessarily that the Nixon administration will be a caretaker regime over old programs without offering new and needed ones. Some Republicans in Congress, for example, have been working on numerous liberal programs: job training, a "Human Renewal Fund," congressional reform, draft reform, election reform and so forth, all programs which also appeal to liberal democrats. It was Republican Senator Jacob Javits who put forward a bill last year to establish a new Development Bank providing low-cost, high-risk loans. This bill later became a title within the Community Self-Determination Act, a bi-partisan bill high on the agenda of the Senate Finance Committee for next year. With such proposals now coming from a Republican president (and hence commanding more Republican votes) a working majority far more decisive than Johnson's 89th Congress might well transpire. Wisconsin Democratic Congressman Henry Reuss has already proposed such a "grand coalition" to prevent any impasse based on party label. The optimist strikes again.

Bond Misses UMass

To the editor:

Indeed a trek across campus is no pleasant journey, and a heavy fog makes it no more enjoyable. Then, when you finally arrive at your destination and find that a long awaited event has been cancelled, you certainly could not be blamed for fervent dismay.

Such was the case last Monday evening for many University students as well as many from the entire five college community and surrounding area. The appearance of Julian Bond was anxiously anticipated.

It does, however, take two parties and a little luck to have a successful lecture. In the case of Mr. Bond, the Distinguished Visitors Program's luck seemed to disappear completely.

It took many, many hours to arrange his visit and do all the trivial things that must be done for any lecture. Then, the day of the lecture, we were informed that Mrs. Bond had been taken ill (with the measles) and that Mr. Bond would arrive at Bradley Field at 7:30 p.m. rather than 4:30 as expected. The lecture time had to be advanced from 8 p.m. to 9 p.m. and plans for earlier in the evening had to be cancelled.

Two representatives of D.V.P. traveled to the field in anticipation of picking up Mr. Bond and were informed at 7:45 p.m. that because of "technical difficulties with the aircraft" the flight would not arrive until 9:50.

Realizing that a lecture at the late hour that he would arrive on campus would be impossible, Mr. Bond called the University and told us that he would instead continue on to Rochester, N.Y. where he was to speak at 1 p.m. on Tuesday.

No one was sorrier than D.V.P. that Mr. Bond could not come.

We hope, however, that you will look forward to the future program. Next Wednesday, we will present John Barth, author of the bestseller LOST IN THE FUNHOUSE at 8 p.m. in Mahar Auditorium. Next semester we are negotiating to present Strom Thurmond, George McGovern, Theodore Sorenson, Gore Vidal and (with luck) Julian Bond. We also plan to co-sponsor a production of "Fiddler on the Roof."

The Distinguished Visitors Program

Cry for Expression

To the editor:

Can we have individual education in a progressively mechanical and technological society? So many times have I heard and experienced the feelings of hate and depression because everything seems to be forced upon us these days. We live in a free society whose conscience of success and patriotism restricts us. We are rapidly becoming the robots of the future, thinking and saying what we have been programmed to by the general conscience of society. Where can we go if we feel that college is not satisfying our curiosity? The army of course. Then we can tour the world under the orders of Uncle Sam, that abstract idea of patriotism that has become so forcibly physical. Or, perhaps we can reject the army and visit the nearby jail. There we can learn all the social graces while cleansing our consciences of the traitorous act that we have committed. Or, perhaps we can leave the country and travel the world for the rest of our lives. What can we do? Where can we go to be happy and constructive people?

You see, we do not have any choice at all. We can not make choices these days. We have to obey the Almighty Conscience of society or be considered rebels and revolutionaries. So why can't we make college enjoyable, where we can be expressive people, where we can get rid of the feelings and anxieties that are plaguing society presently. College campuses are in uproar and personally, I think that it is justified, not in the legal sense of course, but through my personal conscience and feelings. I do not recommend it, but that is simply the reaction to life, liberty, and pursuit of happiness for all. Our country has become so concerned with the "all" that the individual who makes up the society has become suppressed. So how can this be constructively applied to our college and the so called education that we truly desire but are denied?

Perhaps there can be some seminar courses in the freshman year that are strictly expressive seminars. People want to be heard but they also want to think about what they want.

Then maybe people could put topics up on bulletin boards or in the newspaper that he or she wants discussed and those who would like to would go to these discussions.

The point is that we should have a choice in what we discuss. We should not have to memorize or go through all this nonsense that so called required courses force upon us. The first couple of years in college should not be composed simply of requirements which many or most people dislike and sometimes fail, not because they chose it, but because they had to take it.

College should help us to find out what we want in life, not hinder us! It should help get rid of the teenage and young adult frustrations through expression and discussion, not build up more so that the individual feels like he is ready to explode. College uproar! Can you really blame us?

Rollin Shaw

Apathy Dying?

To the editor:

Diminishing "school" spirit, in times past, was considered a sure index of student apathy, of reduced athletic profits, and of an overall degeneration of student morale and moral fiber. A dynamic student body flocked to football and basketball games spurring their teams to victory by their mere vocal presence. Those were the good old days, but now wan sport spirit, wan.

A university functions for education and all of its broad derivatives. School spirit IS growing, only not in the traditional direction as measured by traditional indeces. This educational growth is subtle, perhaps almost imperceptable, but it lives in King Council, in N.E.S. tutoring, in the School of Education, in Sociology 256 and 257, in History 337, in Speech 387 and 386. Too sophisticated to be excited by a rally, by a basketball game, by cheerleaders and Revelers! Who are you kidding! The question is not one of sophistication, but rather of relevance; not of apathy, but of re-ordered interests; not of emotion, but of intellect; not of what you can give to a team, but of what you can derive from personal involvement.

Let the team play for themselves as most other teams do and please don't tell me that real "school" spirit is flickering off when in actuality it is flickering on. When academic institutions use basketball attendance as one indication of educational success, they deserve the consequences.

WFCR Presents Concert; Wallfisch Duo Featured

Radio Station WFCR, the five-college, educational facility serving a six state area from its studios in Hampshire House, University of Massachusetts announces a unique contribution to its current fund drive. Ernest and Lory Wallfisch, the noted viola and piano artists on the faculty of Smith College have offered to perform a recital for the benefit of the FM station next Monday evening, December 9, 1968 in Bowker Auditorium, University of Massachusetts/Amherst at 8:15 p.m.

For this program, the Wallfisch Duo will perform Haydn's Divertimento in D Major; Franz Schubert's "Arpeggione" Sonata; "Elegy, Opus 30 by Henri Vieuxtemps; Schumann's Pictures from Fairy Tales, Opus 113 and Darius Milhaud's "Quatre Visages".

The Wallfisch Duo has concertized throughout Europe and the United States. Later this month, they will present a program in Santo Domingo in the Dominican Republic. Tickets for this concert are now available at the offices of Radio Station WFCR in Hampshire House, University of Mass., Amherst and will also be available at the door preceding the concert. All proceeds of this event will be used to insure the continuation of the excellent programs being offered the public through this non-commercial radio station. In spite of the fact that the station does receive grants from the Five Colleges, in order that it expand its schedule and scope of activities, it must appeal for support to its listeners and the general public. Tickets for the event are available at the Music Departments of the 5 colleges.

Mary Della Paolera, a 21-year-old senior at UMass has entered the Miss Cheerleader USA Contest.

Miss Della Paolera is majoring in speech and is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Victor Della Paolera of Watertown. She has been a cheerleader for four years. She stands 5 feet, 3½, has light brown hair and hazel eyes.

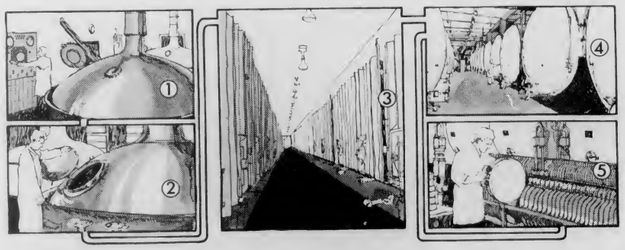
Student Arrested For Promoting Lottery

A UMass student pleaded innocent to charges of setting up and promoting a lottery on campus in Northampton District court yesterday, and was released on personal recognizance. Trial was set for January 3.



Donald G. Robinson, 23, was arrested Wednesday in front of the Student Union by State Police Lieutenant Bleakowski and Trooper Blanchard. He allegedly had in his possession football lottery tickets.

How to brew the King of Beers.

Ever wonder how Anheuser-Busch takes the choicest hops, rice and best barley malt—and turns it into the King of Beers?

Best way to find out is to visit one of our breweries for a first-hand look. (The pleasure will be mutual.)

Meanwhile, purely in the interest of science and higher education, here's a quick cram course.

1. At the lauter tanks, we cook malt and rice to produce a clear amber liquid called wort.

2. Then to the copper brew kettles, where choicest imported and domestic hops are added to the wort —which is cooked again.

3. Now, after cooling, the wort flows into our own patented fermenters, where brewers' yeast works to ferment natural sugars into alcohol and CO_2. This is where wort becomes beer.

4. Most beers are finished now. Not Budweiser. We ferment it again, this time in special glass-lined tanks partially filled with a dense lattice of beechwood strips. (This is where Beechwood Ageing comes in. It's a costly extra step, but we think the difference it makes in the taste and clarity of Budweiser is worth it!) We add a little freshly-yeasted wort to start the second fermentation, and let it "work."

5. The final step. The Budweiser flows through a series of finishing filters just before we package it for you in barrels, cans or bottles.

If that sounds like anybody could brew Budweiser, forget it. It takes a special kind of brewery (we have the only six in the world that will do), a brewmaster who puts his heart and soul into brewing the King of Beers, the choicest ingredients (the cost of which keeps our treasurer awake at night), and thousands of brewery workers who know Budweiser is the best reason in the world to drink beer.

Next lesson? Well, we were going to tell you how to drink Bud.

But you know that.

Hello Friend Returns Again

Several weeks ago, the Hello Friend Folk Society returned once again to Hampden Dining Commons. The candlelit coffee and cider atmosphere of the fourth Hello Friend Folk Festival was enjoyed by several hundred UMass students and faculty members as well as many off campus visitors from the four college area.

The entertainment was continuous consisting of sixteen different performances ranging from jugband to bluegrass and poetry. Included also, as usual, were many popular folk standards and original renditions by the artists. The Hello Friend Folk Society draws the majority of its talent from the UMass student body but its inventory extends well into the resources of other colleges in the area.

The Hello Friend Folk Society is an independent troupe of folk artists who are providing quality entertainment for students spending their weekends on campus. Hello Friend expects to deliver several off campus performances and will br inviting folk talent from other campuses at which Hello Friend performs to combine with UMass for performances here.

Hello Friend is run by performers in such a manner that they feel they can give their best to an audience that comes to their folk fests to hear quality folk music in a satisfying quantity. No admission has been charged at a Hello Friend concert because performers feel that that which they wish to give to an appreciative audience is best given freely.

The UMass women's gymnastics team will start their competitive season Sunday at 2:30 p.m. against a team from the Montclair, N.J. YMCA. The meet will be held in the Boyden Auxiliary Gymnasium.

After placing third in the Eastern Regionals and sixth in the National Intercollegiate Championships last year, the outlook for the team this year is good.

High scorers Margie Sims and Sue Clancy are returning, and they will get some help from juniors Ruth Morse, Dorey Finn and several very talented sophomores plus some selected freshmen.

The UMass girls team has not had a loosing season in its six years of competition but the girls have yet to beat their closet rival, Springfield College. The Springfield College meet will be held, Saturday, Dec. 14, at 7:30 p.m.

Frosh Gymnasts Score Win Against Southern Conn.

Behind fine performances by all-around men Tony Vacca and Doug Salisbury, the UMass freshman gymnastics team scored a 124.24 - 70.55 win over Southern Connecticut here Tuesday night.

Vacca compiled a total of 42.05 points while Salisbury scored 37.40. Vacca took first place in the floor exercises with an 8.55 score, first in vaulting with 8.58 and first in the parallel bars with a 7.00 total.

Salisbury took first honors in the high bars with a 6.15 score, and thirds in the floor exercise and long horse. Other fine performances were turned in by John Calabria in the floor exercise (8.15), Lou Trumbore who took first on the side horse and second in the high bars, Richard Ennis who was tops in the rings, 8.15, Richard Searle who was third in the rings, 7.25 and David Genest who took two seconds with an 8.15 on the long horse and a 6.90 on the paralled bars.

The team showed good potential in the meet and should improve as the season progresses. The next meet will be at home against Long Island University, December 14, at 4 p.m.

Mermen Dunked by Amherst, 53-39, in Opening Meet

BY DICK BACKER
Staff Reporter

The UMass swimming team opened their season on a sour note losing 53-39 to Amherst College last night at Amherst. Led by co-captains Bob Asquith and Flip Morton, the Redmen produced a 150 per cent effort despite a lack of depth.

Winning efforts were turned in by Mark Miller in the 200 free style with a 2.01:7 time, while Asquith won the back stroke. UMass won the 400 meter free style relay in 4.49, which was encouraging since one of the starters was out.

Other strong points were second and third place finishes in both the 50 yard free style and butterfly. Al Northup looked impressive in the breast stroke. Strong individual performances were turned in by Asquith and Miller who combined for 20 of UMass' 39 points.

Coach Joe Rogers feels his team lacks the depth to become big time winners. The Redmen squad consists of only 12 men, since many juniors and sophomores have quit.

Adding to Rogers' problems is the fact his best diver, Maurice Lynch, is out with a punctured ear drum. If Rogers can gain a few more swimmers, 15 to 18 is considered adequate, and Lynch returns, UMass could surprise many. Next Wednesday the Redmen travel to Middletown, Conn., to do battle with Wesleyan.

Gymnasts To Host Strong Temple Team

By JAN CURLEY
Assistant Managing Editor

Tomorrow night will mark the opening of the home stance for the UMass gymnasts when they host Temple University. The meet will be in the auxiliary gymnasium at Boyden at 7:30 p.m.

Temple is the defending Eastern Collegiate gymnast champions this year and all three of their outstanding men are back again this season.

Coach Eric Kjeldsen expects then to have a team as "strong as last year, if not stronger." The top three Temple performers, Peter DiFurio, Fred Turoff and Barry Weiner, all tried out for the U.S. Olympic team. DiFurio was elliminated in the final round of trials.

Weiner is the defending Eastern League Champion in floor exercises. "He is a truly outstanding performer", said Kjeldsen, "and one of the best floor exercise specialists in the world."

In a meet earlier this week, Southern Connecticut edged UMass 155.2 to 153.4. In analyzing the meet, the coach said, "Southern Connecticut had more depth than we expected and they scored higher."

Bright points for the Redmen during the evening were the wins on the rings and parralel bars. On the rings, the Redmen scored 27.05 to Southern Connecticut's 26.5. UMass had a nine point average, the second time in history. On the parallel bars, the Redmen won by a narrow margin of 26.2 to 25.6.

The closest margin of victory for Southern Connecticut was 25. to 25.2 in the floor exercises. Southern Connecticut also took the side horse event, 26.7 to 25.3; long horse, 25.3 to 24.7, and horizontal bars, 25.9 to 25.0.

For the Redmen, Joe Reed and Norm Vexler, all around performers both turned in excellent performances. Reed tied Jim Amerin, Southern Conn., for first place at 9.3. His all around score was 47.5 Vexler had a 9.0 on the parallel bars, second to Amerin and a 50.8 tally all around.

Two rules have been changed for competition this year. Trampoline has been dropped a new 2-3 rule which allows each team to enter two all around men and three regular men in each event. The top three scores count in each event.

Frosh Skaters Ice Amherst

By STEVE SHAMBAN
Staff Reporter

A hard shooting, hard skating Amherst College 11-1, in a game win evened the Little Redman win evened the Little Redman Saturday to the Yale Frosh, 6 -3.

For the UMass pucksters, it was a day of feast as a total of 29 points were awarded on the 11 goals and 18 assists. Goal scorers for the frosh were Bob Welden (2), Mike Waldren (2), Dennis Grabowski, Dan Reidy, [illegible]uce Winter, Bob Bartholomew, [illegible] Byrne, Ken Steeves and Dick Brewster.

Except for a quick goal on a breakaway by Dennis Randall at 1:04 of the first period, it was UMass all the way. Ken Steeves scored 90 seconds later to even the score at 1 - 1. Bob Welden then took a pass from Jack Edwards to score on a 10 foot slap shot at 4:12. This put the Little Redmen ahead 2 - 1 and proved to be the winning goal. Welden go t his second goal at 10:29, tipping in a slap shot off the stick of defenseman Jack Byrne. UMass held a 3 -1 lead as the period ended, and for all intents and purposes, the contest was over.

Three more goals in the second period by Winter, Grabowski and Reidy, and five in the third by Byrne, Bartholomew, Waldron, and Brewster made the final, 11 -1. Brewster's goal, assists to Byrne and Waldren , came with one second to play. At 12:01, Al Nickerson and Randall were ejected following a brief altercation behind the UMass net.

The Little Redmen skated and passed well, but for the 50 or so diehard fans on hand, this was probably not a true indication (good or bad) of the team's ability. The less talented Jeffs simply could not extend UMass to play its best game.

UMass frosh hockey team humbled played yesterday at Orr Rink. The record at 1-1, the loss coming last

Today, the frosh travel to Storrs for a game with the Little Huskies of UConn. Faceoff is at 6 p.m.

Hoopmen To Travel To Vermont

Redmen to Open Yankee Conference Title Quest

By MIKE CURRAN
Sports Editor

With two victories already to their credit, the UMass basketball team travels up to Burlington, Vt., for an encounter tomorrow night with a similary 2-0 Vermont outfit. Game time is 8 p.m.

The clash will mark the Yankee Conference opener for both squads. New Hampshire and Maine got the jump on the rest of the league. The Wildcats dumped the Maine Black Bears, 98-80, Tuesday night in Durham.

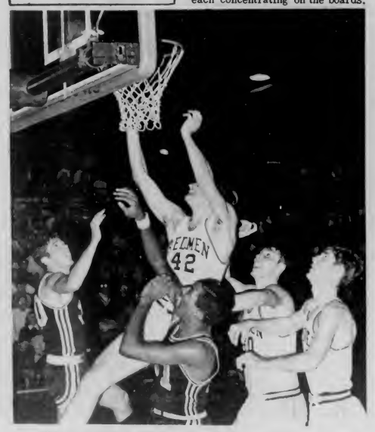
Last year Vermont handed the Redmen a costly 85-82 overtime defeat in their encounter at Burlington, and they have the chief architects of that upset back again this season.

Senior Dave Lapointe, 6'3, and 6'1 junior Frank Martiniuk form one of the better backcourt duos in New England. Lapointe, a fine baseball shortstop, was the Catamount's leading scorer last season. He is also an excellent ball handler and above average defensively. Matiniuk specializes in 20 to 25 foot jump shots. Against UMass last year, he canned 24 and 22 points in the team's two meetings.

Coach Art Locke's only problem area is in the forecourt where he has been searching for a Bill Libera replacement. Center Aldo Solati, 6'7, and 6'6 forward Ray Bueb are holdover starters. Neither man shoots very much, each concentrating on the boards.

Dick Trela, a 6'4 sophomore, and Bob Hutton, a 6'4 junior, have been alternating at the vacated forward position. Hutton had 13 points in Vermont's opening win over Dartmouth.

Locke's key reserve is 6'2 Warl Seligman, a former teammate of UMass' Bob Dempsey at Durfee High in Fall River, Mass. Seligman can play at both the guard and forward positions.



Sophomores Tom Clay, Mike Devine, and Charlie Quimby and junior letterman Roy Greenman form the Catamounts bench strength.

Coach Jack Leaman expects the UVM team to give his Redmen their toughest test so far. After a week of hoop, Vermont would seem to be the biggest roadblock to UMass' title hopes.

The Redmen will continue to go with the starting five of Pete Gayeska, Ken Mathias, Jack Gallagher, Joe DiSarcina and Ray Ellerbrook. Dennis Chapman, Dick Samuelson and John Shockro will be waiting in the wings at all times.

After the first two contests, Gayeska, the 6'10 center, leads the team in scoring with a 17.5 average, followed by Ellerbrook at 15 and Mathias at 13.

The game will be broadcast from Patrick Gymnasium starting at 8 p.m. by WMUA, 91.1 FM.

Classy Frosh Hoopsters To Tilt With Westfield JV's

By PETER PASCARELLI Assistant Sports Editor

Hopefully comparative scores don't mean anything. For, if they do, the UMass freshman basketball team could be prosecuted for murder. You see, the Little Redmen routed the A.I.C. frosh 106 - 49 Wednesday. Those same Yellowjacket frosh bombed the Westfield State Junior Varsity, UMass' opponent tonight, by 18 points.

UMass displayed all-round excellence throughout the encounter. The frosh dominated both backboards, shot extremely well and defensively were outstanding. However, these are things that talented freshmen are expected to have.

What was more encouraging about the performance, however, was the poise the Little Redmen displayed. Especially impressive in this respect was the guard play of John Bettencourt and Mike Pagliara. Both refused to be rattled in the face of a pressing A.I.C. defense.

The cool efficiency of the backcourt duo complemented well the crowd pleasing play of center Tom Austin and forward Julius Erving. Austin, whose 6'8 height makes up for a slight frame, was a defensive demon, blocking many shots and deflecting others.

Erving, meanwhile, established himself quickly as exciting a performer as any seen on a UMass frosh team. He blocked shots, he scored from outside, he displayed Baylor-like moves inside, and outjumped everyone else on the floor. And he has been practicing for only a week due to an early injury.

The frosh played without a fine forward Wednesday in the person of Bill Kesgen, whose sprained ankle sidelined him. The ankle has been in a cast and the date of Kesgen's return to action is doubtful.

The Little Redmen also played without their coach Peter Broaca, who was away scouting. His place was taken by Tony Williams, who in addition to helping out with the frosh is president of the Varsity 'M' Club. If the 106 points the frosh scored is any indication of coaching, maybe williams should retire from the banquet circuit and take up coaching full time.

cemen Blank Amherst, 4-0

By KEN SCHWARTZ Staff Reporter

The UMass varsity hockey team, backed by shutout goal-tending nd a 41 shot attack, defeated Amherst College last night at Orr Rink, - 0.

It took the Redmen till 8:00 minutes of the second period to break e scoring ice. The goal came on slap shot from about 20 feet ut by senior defenseman Joe Di iccio assisted by Jim O'Brien nd Jeff Sanborn.

Just second s after DiCiccio's oal, Sanborn narrowly missed scoring on a rebound from a hot by O'Brian. Later in the eriod, defenseman Bill McMann red three consecutive slapshots t the Amherst goaltender while Mass had a man advantage but ailed to score.

In the third period, however, e Redmen broke away from the efts on goals by senior defenseian Rocky Stone, McMann, and anborn. Sanborn's goal, com- with only 6:14 left in the ame, was a nifty play. The senr co-captain came over the blue e and beat the Amherst defensemen one-on-one before scorng on a wrist shot.

Larry Walsh, although only cald on to make 18 saves, played fine game in the UMass goal. almost lost his shut-out, however, at 12:28 of the final period when Amherst, after a scramble in front of the net, seemingly scored. Fortunately the goal was disallowed because an Amherst player was in the crease.

The score was no indication of the closeness of the game as the Redmen controlled play from the opening face-off to the final buzzer.

The Redmen now have only one day to prepare for Yankee Conference rival Vermont whom they play tomorrow night at Orr Rink in a 7 o'clock game.

UMass is now 2-1 and hopes to improve this record against the tough Catamounts. A win will not only put the Redmen two games over the .500 mark but would be a good indication of this year's hockey fortunes.

Gordon Hall To Lecture on Political Extremism

Gordon Hall is a mild mannered Bostonian and self-made expert on extremists who has spent 22 years studying and lecturing on American fringe politics. He has estimated that seven million Americans are involved with 1,000 organizations on the ultra right and 150 on the far left. Hall's lecture to be given at 8 p.m. in the Ballroom tomorrow is being sponsored jointly by the class of 1970 and the Daily Collegian.

While he doesn't think that America is in danger of an extremist coup, he doesn't feel Americans have enough safeguards against it. He does feel, however, that if an extremist takeover ever happened that the left would be the only ones who could ever hope to carry it through successfully because they have models like Russia, China, and Cuba to show them what to do with the power they win. The Right, on the other hand, have no such models or plans that would take the place of models.

His career in fringe politics started after World War II out of a concern over extremism. Since then his frank opinions have outraged many of the extremist groups and their leaders in America.

He has, for instance, called Malcolm X "an over-inflated bag of wind-one of the most singularly ignorant men I've known." He has also called the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee "inexperienced, immature, and impatient." He also charges that SNCC makes statements as irresponsible and false as those uttered by the leaders of the Klu Klux Klan.

He is also critical of the press which he feels gives these groups much more publicity than they deserve. He cites the SNCC as a good example of this. According to Hall, SNCC has only 150 paid-up members, yet has received acres of newspaper space making it seem like a very big and important group to the average American.

In return Hall has, of course, received as much as he has given. At Berkeley he was hooted off the platform by Viet Cong sympathizers. Malcolm X, Robert Welsh, and the late George Lincoln Rockwell have all taken pot shots at him for his less than flattering remarks.

"The current era marks the third high-water mark of extremism in American history," Hall said, "the others being the Know-Nothing period after the Civil War and the leftist phase of the Great Depression."

JOHN BARTH, award winning author will present the "Menelaid", a selection from his latest book "Lost in the Funhouse" at 8 p.m. in Mahar Auditorium Wednesday.

D.U.P. To Present Barth, Multi-Media Author

John Barth, award winning author, will present the "Menelaid", a selection from his latest book, "Lost in the Funhouse", at 8 p.m., Wednesday, in Mahar Auditorium. He is being sponsored by the Distinguished Visitor Program.

The "Menelaid" is one of a series of short tales composed for a variety of media: print, tape, live voice and a combination of these modes, to be supplemented on occasion by graphic materials.

The tales in "Lost in the Funhouse" are experimental and explanatory to the extent that the different media are first incorporated into the narrative and the narrative is modified according to questions made obligatory by the media. Questions of voice are raised, and of point of view, of the author's authority, the nature of the story and the nature of the mind and reality.

"Menelaid" in particular is designed for live-voice-and-print. Its 14 parts contain seven levels of story-telling, which are distinguished by printed notation.

The story precedes from the perimeter of simple narrative to the point of its maximum complication, and then moves outward again to the line of narrative.

The mythical matter of the "Menelaid" derives primarily from Book Four of the "Odyssey". in which Odysseus' son, Telemachus, accompanied by Peisistratus, the son of Nestor, is entertained in Sparta at the court of King Menelaus.

Answering Telemachus' inquiry about the fate of his father, Melelaus tells stories of his own adventures during and following the Trojan War. These materials taken from the "Odyssey" are supplemented by information from Ovid, Appolodorus, Stesichorus and Herodotus.

In addition to the "Menelaid," Barth has also published four other novels, "The Floating Opera" (1956), "The End of the Road" (1958), "The Sot-Weed Factory" (1960), and "Giles Goat-Boy" (1966).

Barth has received numerous awards and honors, including the Brandeis University Citation in Fiction, a Rockefeller Foundation Grant and an award from the National Academy of Arts and Letters.

Federal Government Approves Funds For Medical School

The federal government has acted favorably on an application for funds for the UMass hospital in Worcester, Medical School Dean Dr. Lamar Soutter announced Saturday.

The granting agency, the Department of Health Manpower of the U.S. Office of Health, Education and Welfare, said the sum approved is about 70 per cent of the $23,000,000 sought for construction of the 400-bed teaching hospital for the medical school.

Approval at this point does not mean funding Dr. Soutter said. It means the project has been accepted for support, with funding to follow when appropriations are made.

Acceptance and funding already has been completed for the medical sciences building phase of the school. Federal funds totaling $18 million have been granted for the $45 million facility, to contain classrooms, laboratories, a library and administrative offices.

The hospital design is by Ritchie Associates of Chestnut Hill with Campbell, Aldrich and Nulty, medical sciences building architects, as associates, and Ellerbe Architects as consultants. Current estimates call for both buildings to be completed at the Worcester site in the fall of 1972.

University President John W. Lederle said, "During this tight fiscal period in Washington, it is pleasing to see this indication of the federal government's confidence" in the planning of Dean Soutter and medical school architects.

The Peace Flag Went Up and Down In Front of Whitmore Building

BY RICHARD LANE
Senior Reporter

University police yesterday removed a "Peace Flag" from atop a 110 foot flag pole in front of the Whitmore Administration Building.

A certain controversy seemed to have been raised concerning the flag's exact appearance and removal. There have been conflicting reports as to just when and how many times the flag was in fact raised and then removed.

The 110 foot flag pole involved is one of two built to hoist the American and state flags in front of the Whitmore building.

An article appearing in the Daily Hampshire Gazette Friday reported that the flag had been raised sometime during the week by an unidentified person or persons and that a professional steeplejack had been called for its removal. The article went on to say that the flag had probably been put up sometime during the night when there had been a 40 mph wind and extremely low temperatures. It quoted the steeplejack as saying that whoever had climbed or "shinnied" up the pole must have been either "drunk or crazy."

The Gazette stated that it would cost the University approximately $100 to take the flag down.

Some students reported seeing the flag flying Friday morning and again on Saturday.

University News Service Director Dan Melley told the DAILY COLLEGIAN, however, that he had no information of any flag appearing in front of Whitmore last week at all.

Nixon Reported To Have Picked Cabinet Members

NEW YORK (AP) - President-elect Richard M. Nixon was reported yesterday to have completed his selection of a Cabinet, including at least one Democrat, to serve as "a variety of voices speaking toward one goal."

"Basically, the posts are filled, all of them will be filled by this week," said Herbert G. Klein, director of communications for the incoming administration.

Nixon, at his Fifth Avenue apartment, conferred with his top aides. He was to meet privately with Sargent Shriver, now U. S. ambassador to France and formerly director of the poverty program.

Klein was interviewed in Washington on the NBC program, "Meet the Press."

University Police To Ticket Illegally Parked Vechiles

Starting today the campus Security Department will strictly enforce the regulations pertaining to parking. Unauthorized vehicles will be denied access to the controlled parking areas, and vehicles violating University regulations will be ticketed or towed as appropriate.

The presently authorized mobility for properly registered faculty and staff vehicles will be continued. Parking areas 1F, 3 and 4 will be limited to vehicles assigned to those areas, and vehicles bearing "X" decals. All other faculty and staff areas are accessible to all properly registered faculty and staff vehicles. Vehicles bearing "X" decals or displaying a multiple access card in the windshield will continue to have access to all areas.

Effective immediately, the Haigis Mall between Whitmore Hall and the School of Business Administration will be a No Parking zone. Vehicles will be permitted to enter this area only for the purpose of picking up or discharging passengers

Henderson and Smith Discuss Black Issues at UM

By Donna Wadsworth and Louis Dimonaco
Staff Reporters

The United Nations General Assembly has designated 1968 as the International Year for Human Rights. Robert Henderson and William Smith, leaders in the Afro-American Society and the CCENS program respectively, will speak tomorrow in connection with human rights here on campus. In an interview with the DAILY COLLEGIAN the two leaders spoke of the plans and purposes of the black organizations.

DAILY COLLEGIAN: What is your position in CCENS and the Afro-American Society, and how do you feel the programs are progressing?

SMITH: "I am a residential assistant for CCENS, and my purpose is to aid in communications between the student and the CCENS committee. I think that the program is doing well. We have learned a lot and expect a great deal of improvement next semester."

HENDERSON: "I myself am a student in the CCENS program. As far as functioning, it's going over the humps as smoothly as can be expected of any new program during its first semester. There are only positive signs, and many suggestions have already been made for next semester."

SMITH: "It's easy to be critical of CCENS. People who are do not understand the program."

HENDERSON: "What they don't understand is that they don't understand. When black people are negated from the University, it has a racist design. People here don't have any conception of black."

DAILY COLLEGIAN: Since many will criticize without knowledge, then, will you have to seek out support and distribute information?

SMITH: "The recent controversy over the demands helped to make people aware of the problems. There is a lot of responsibility being placed on the black people. They have to enlighten themselves and at the same time give white people information."

HENDERSON: "UMass is like a baby: you touch it and it cries, but it doesn't know why. Later it finds that it was being touched by the finger of need.

"In the beginning the reaction was negative as to whether or not the program would work. But as we went around to the dorms, we found that people were reacting positively and giving us support, because they now know that everyone will benefit. The main thing to remember is that the University wasn't prepared for this program. The black people here give the impression to the white community of accomodating the problems of the black people. One of the biggest mistakes was that the University was unprepared to irradicate misconceptions. There is a need for a general explanation to the whole university."

DAILY COLLEGIAN: What about the reactions to the demands?

SMITH: "The supply of awareness at the University hasn't been tapped. I think the demands helped in that they made the administration aware, and perhaps they made others aware also. I feel they had a positive relationship to the problem."

DAILY COLLEGIAN: May we have your opinion of the problem here at UMass?

SMITH: "The problems here are the same ones that are basic to our society. The University is racist in design as is white America. There has been progress here, but only in the realization of what has to be achieved."

HENDERSON: "We've found the oil. Now we have to drill, but the problem is where, and maybe even how."

DAILY COLLEGIAN: What are your plans for CCENS and Afro-Am?

SMITH: "I personally will continue to work within CCENS. Our goal is not just to produce 200 aware students, but to produce 200 leaders who know how to find the problems, and how to treat them."

HENDERSON: "There are a lot of intelligent blacks plucked from the ghetto only to be brainwashed in a university, and who are ready, after leaving, to live in a suburban white-American community. We want to avoid this, and to produce leaders."

DAILY COLLEGIAN: What about Tuesday's speech?

SMITH: "It may concerns human rights. Anybody involved with or concerned over the black-white issue by necessity is concerned with human rights. They are basic to the conflict. Civil rights are not human rights."

HENDERSON: "Everybody should make the set Tuesday. Especially those who hate should come to find out why they hate, and possibly how to irradicate that hatred. We are speaking to the University, and one of the purposes of the Afro-American Society is to create a cohesive community. Every individual must re-examine his goals, their positivism and negativism, and the direction those goals are taking."

DAILY COLLEGIAN: What is your opinion of the curriculum at the University?

HENDERSON: "Irrelevant and immaterial!"

SMITH: "And also boring, although one of my professors understood the problems of a young, awake black in a white institution."

HENDERSON: "The curriculum is not accomodating to the realities of our society. We have psychopaths, criminals, homosexuals, etc., and the University ignores the fact in the courses. To me Robert Frost is out of it. The atmosphere here is one of naivety and this is an atrocity."

SMITH: "I think the courses should have social relevance, and by this I am including science, technology, communicative skills. Someone has to know how to make an anti-hydrogen bomb. If someone did that I'd give him the real Nobel Peace Prize."

HENDERSON: "I'd give him....a kiss."

So. Vietnam's Delegates Arrive In Paris For Peace Negotiations

PARIS (AP) — Vice President Nguyen Cao Ky led South Vietnam's 80-member peace team into Paris yesterday proclaiming good will and ruling out demands for surrender by the other side. But within hours he also spoke of "liberating Hanoi."

The colorful ex-combat pilot warned, on the basis of intelligence reports, than the Communist-led Vietnamese "in days or weeks" may unleash new military and political troubles for his country.

And he told newsmen of "some misunderstandings" his government has had with U. S. Ambassador W. Averell Harriman, the chief of the American delegation. Those misunderstandings, which Ky attributed in part to the ambassador's hearing, have now been corrected, he said.

The landing of a special jet liner bearing the exuberant Saigon delegates signaled the end of South Vietnam's five-week boycott of the enlarged parley proposed under President Johnson's bomb-halt package.

They came down at Orly Airport with a pledge to seek peace-but not "peace at any price." With Ky standing by his side, Ambassador Pham Dang Lam set forth that view of the talks. Lam is the official head of the delegation. Ky has over-all supervision of Saigon's negotiating strategy.

Student Senate Works To Abolish Curfews For Second-Semester Freshman Women

BY ANNE LOUISE GIARDINA
Staff Reporter

The Student Senate took the initiative of abolishing freshman curfew when it passed a bill (S189) April 20, 1966, proposing, among other things, changes in curfew for all university women.

In the report it stated "There shall be no curfew for second semester freshman, sophomore, junior and senior women." After reviewing the bill, William F. Field, Dean of Students, sent a letter back to Student Life modifying certain recommendations, one of which was the retention of curfew for all freshman women. The bill with Dean Field's modifications was passed by the Board of Trustees in the summer of 1966.

The next action taken by the Student Senate appears in the form of a report submitted March 1967 by the Women's Affairs Committee on Rules and Regulations. This report reiterated the necessity of abilishing the second semester curfew.

In the report the reason given for eliminating second semester curfew was, "after one semester, the freshman women should be mature enough to know her responsibilities and the amount of time she can devote to other things besides studying." This proposal was amended into the Men's Affairs Report on the floor and was passed April 4, 1967, as S115.

This document was sent with other legislation to Dean Field, who acknowledged receipt of it on August 8. He explained that it was too late to act on the changes because the handbook had already gone to print but that the recommendations would be looked into in the fall of '67. There ends the documented communications between the Senate and the Administration on the subject of freshman curfews.

Action next proceeded through the endeavors of a few individuals. Monday, November 25, Susan Bacon, senator from Knowlton, presented a discussion of freshmen curfews on WMUA. Hosts were Senate president Paul Silverman and freshman class president Ernie Lepore. Several freshman women were invited to give their views on the curfew. The object of the program according to Lepore, was to awaken the campus and administration to the girls' side of the story.

Meanwhile through the efforts of Stafford Sheehan, senator from Gorman, a rationale on curfew was sent out to freshman women asking for their views and comments. His idea was to incorporate them into a report to be submitted to the Board of Trustees. This report would be an accumulation of reasons why there should be no second semester freshman women curfew. Eight-hundred and ninety-six rationales were chosen because of their explicit explanations: 83 for and 803 against curfew with 10 abstentions.

According to Sheehan, the report is to consist of three parts. The introduction is a history of what has been done on the question up to date. The main body consists of comments pro and con on curfew with excerpts taken from the rationales "to justify the conclusion". In an interview with Sheehan, he stated that the conclusion would probably be identical with S115 drawn up by Women's Affairs Committee on Rules and Regulations. These are: no second semester freshman women curfew and no curfew for first semester freshman women who are 20 years old or older or who have attained 11 credits or more.

This report will be reviewed by the subcommittee on freshman-women curfew of the Students Affairs committee as they assist Sheehan in his work. Sheehan hopes to have it in the hands of the Student Affairs Committee by next Monday. Pending their approval, the report should find its way to the Board of Trustees either just before Christmas vacation or early January. It will then be up to the Board to act on the report to eliminate second semester curfew.

If the Board hands down a negative decision, the Student Senate now has a bill pending action. Introduced by Senate vice-president Frederick Hartwell, the bill instructs the house judiciaries to follow the rules contained in the 1967 Women's Affairs Report on curfews (S115). At this time the bill is in Student Matters and will be recalled if second-semester freshman women curfew is not abolished by second semester.

Negro Performers Sought For Ossie Davis Comedy

The search for black actors and actresses for Ossie Davis's folk comedy, "Purlie Victorious," continues. In order to make this opportunity available to all those who were not able to attend the regularly scheduled readings, two additional tryout sessions have been scheduled. They will be held in Bartlett Hall, room 119, tonight, at 7:30.

Men, in particular, are needed for the two major roles that were played by Ossie Davis and Godfrey Cambridge in the original New York production.

Private auditions for anyone not able to attend either of these final readings may be arranged by calling the director, Daphne Reed, on or before today, at 253-7152. Mrs. Reed, a graduate student in theatre, is presenting the play in February as her master's thesis production.

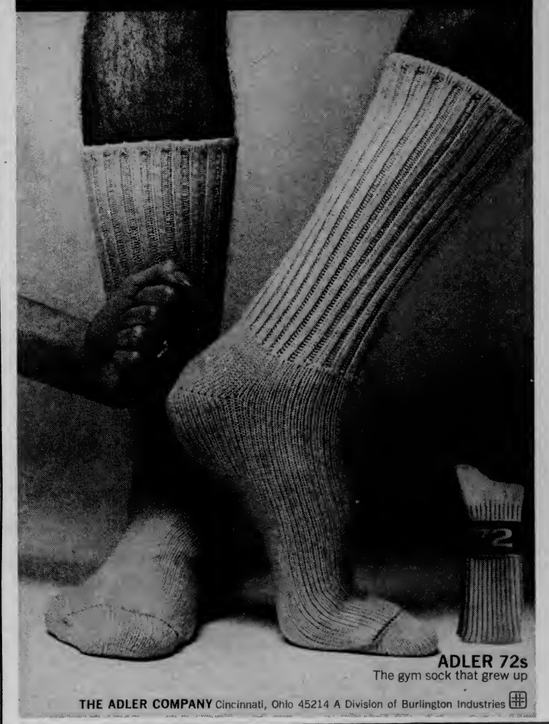
Amherst Faculty Supports Program For Disadvantaged High Schoolers



The proposed summer program for disadvantaged secondary school students at Amherst College has received the endorsement and support of the Amherst faculty.

The project consists of three parts: an ABC (A Better Chance) program for 60 promising ninth and tenth graders who will receive intensive instruction, particularly in English and mathematics, to prepare them for study in public and private schools in preparation for college; a joint summer tutorial program with Smith College for students in the Springfield-Holyoke-Chicopee area; and a training program for 30 to 35 English teachers now teaching in the Springfield schools.

The Amherst trustees appropriated $30,000 as "seed money" for the project and committees composed of students, teachers, and administrators are seeking to raise the balance of funds required.

In its resolution approving the summer project, the faculty recognized "that Amherst College will be considering programs of this kind for many years. In the long run they should not be regarded as a philanthropic enterprise ancillary to the chief purposes of the College, but should be judged in their relation to the overall quality of an Amherst education."

UMass Students Win Chem Awards

--Three UMass students have won recognition in the field of analytical chemistry.

Dan Waugh, senior from Storrs, Conn., and Alan J. Morrissey, graduate student from Danbury, Conn., both won 15-month subscriptions to the journal "Analytical Chemistry," given to outstanding students each year by the division of analytical chemistry of the American Chemical Society.

Graduate student L. R. Whitlock of State College, Pa., was awarded an expense-paid trip to the November meeting of the Eastern Analytical Symposium in New York City. The award was made by the symposium's sponsor.

Campus Comment

WOPE

To the editor:

I would like to comment on the article by Marsha Gallo appearing on Tuesday's Squaw Page.

Miss Gallo seems to be denouncing the University's re - quirements for two years of Physical Education. Her justification for the denouncement seems to be running along the wrong lines. It is not that the University requires too much physical education but, on the contrary, too little.

Not being a physical education major, I find the requirements put forth by the University to be scanty and ineffective. Was it not the great philosopher Plato who set aside ten years for physical activity to be practiced in his ideal state? I am not proposing six additional years at U. Mass to meet up to Plato's model. But, I am proposing enrollment in physical education for four years.

Two years of exposure to varied physical activity is hardly enough time to learn the basics of a sport, let along to attempt to master it.

Exposure to different activities for two years and specialization in one sport for the remaining two years would seem worth the effort of trudging to W.O.P.E. at 8 o'-clock in the morning.

ROTC Show

To the editor:

A few weeks ago, I sat in the Hatch, doing what most of my fellows do there, eating the dull food and eyeing the drab interior. Having some time to waste, I picked up a copy of the MDC. It had the same old thing; elections, Dean So-and-so commenting on the state of the grass, a meeting of the U. Mass Arachnid Society, and something about the merits and non-merits of an organization known as ROTC. Big deal.

Later that afternoon, glancing out the window of Bartlett Hall, a movement caught my eye. Yes, there were people gathering on the athletic field. They were forming themselves into interesting geometrical patterns. Then it hit me. These were the ROTCs talked about in the MDC. I watched more closely. They shifted their patterns around, they marched, they shouted, they performed intricate and complicated maneuvers. "Why this is terrific", I thought to myself, "These people are putting on a show for me, a parade." I went down to the field to take a closer look. They even had fancy uniforms with colored buttons and stickers and things. Who would ever want to do away with such wonderful entertainment!

I suggest that such shows must not only continue, but should be made better.

Little Words for Little Minds

By KONSTANTIN BERLANDT
College Press Service

(CPS) - A four-letter word - something you see or hear or use or do every day, a very expressive word that merges love and hate together at their most magnificent and frightening moment.

But Straight concepts are often narrow. They only understand one meaning for the word, and that meaning is obscene. It is something very dirty that Straight people don't want their wives and children to read.

They never realize, though, that if their wives and children can conceive of that dirty definition, then the concept is already in their heads and the words aren't going to corrupt them.

Their analysis of it is as blind as their endorsement of law 'n' order to solve our society's problems. It will all go away if we can just repress it. If the kids don't use the word, then they won't think it or feel it or do it and won't recognize it when it's being done to them. . .

We maintain that a word cannot be innately obscene. Perhaps in some contexts it is obscene. In others it may be simply a graphic metaphor, an exclamation, a poetic expression of bitterness.

But we all saw the word, not the dashes, as maybe it's getting through. Maybe we're beyond their power, so when they censor a word we can still hear it, when they censor a man we can still hear him, and when they censor a movement we can still feel it.

Speaking Out

Legalization of Marijuana

Last week a bill was proposed in the Student Senate which is much too relevant to go unnoticed by the student body. This bill, proposed by the Senate Executive Committee and sponsored by the Senate President Paul Silverman, deals with a recommendation to the Massachusetts General Court concerning the legalization of marijuana.

This is a cause for which many have been crusading for years, but the results have been relatively minor. A large scale campaign is needed to abolish this and all other archaic laws.

Doctors will readily admit that marijuana is no more harmful (and perhaps less) than alcohol. Their main argument against legalization is that one "evil" within the limits of society is enough. This may very well be true, but if this is the case, then just who has been delegated the authority to determine which "evil" is to be legal and which is not? In whose hands rests the power to outlaw certain forms of drugs and legalize others? Perhaps in the hands of the liquor lobbies in Congress, or the Mafia (whose members amass huge fortunes thru illegal drug traffic), or the members of the medical and psychiatric professions, who build complete practices around alcoholics.

This is a question of personal liberty involving the freedom of choice, to which each of us is supposedly entitled. You must not let this opportunity slip by. Get out and talk to your senator and tell him what you think, for this is the only way of insuring true representation. In this way we can be relatively sure that when the issue is voted on, each senator will be expressing the feelings of his constituency and not his own personal opinion.

The Relevancy of Requirements

There is presently much discussion about the relavancy of the university requirements. I would like to suggest that the time is ripe to confront those who make these requirements to literally get off our backs. There is some doubt as to who these requirement builders are in my mind. In any case this is not only in complaint of the vast number of requirements but also the hypocritical attitude toward the educational process of those involved in these requirements and what amounts to a very take it or leave it attitude of those who teach these course.

The above complaint centers around a Geology 101 choice of a science requirement. For those who have decided to major in a field that does not concern geology will feel as I do that it is a semester wasted. An English major will be just as helpless during an earthquake whether he has this semester or not. If you have made up your mind what you want to learn a smiling advisor will say, "well just think that a few years from you can really appreciate an earthquake." It does seem that our requirement builders have not realized that everything has gotten so involved that the name of the game is specialization.

But let us get back to Geology 101. My dissatisfaction with the course is not only that I am forced to take it but the way it is taught. The lectures and the text seems quite disorganized. However, there is one pattern. When the lectures seem to get boring our instructor immediately talks or shows movies about volcanoes. But this same carelessness shows up in the head instructors quickly giving us a period of notes so his lectures will match the hour test given that evening. Then there is the time the same misquided lecturer told us that mineral structures are not important only to spend the next three lectures on these unimportant structures. There is even the recent event of him telling us differently about room assignments for our last hour exam. Now we come to the clincher. A rumor has it that the man in charge of teaching Geology 101 does not have a degree in geology. I have met strangers who have taken this course under the same man and say the same thing. This rumor has never been refuted by anyone I have met, therefore it seems our instructor is a geologist by hobby.

These are the complains of myself and my fellow students against Geology 101 and requirements in general. What we have here at U. Mass is a system of unwanted parents. A suggestion is made to the student body to prove to the requirement builders that the students, who are the ones being educated, want choose the type of education they want as adults with a special interest. Those students who come here for other reasons besides learning will find that IBM doesn't hire basket-weavers. For these people a degree isn't learning but a job. However, it should be of interest of all students to be allowed the academic freedom of adult learners. Therefore I suggest a campus wide strike or something that will impress who ever enforces these requirements. To shrug this challenge off only means that a course like Geology 101 meets your expectations as a college student.

S.E.N.D.O.F.F. '68

The Weekend in Review

By BILL DICKINSON
Senior Reporter

Mathematically one-and-one-half out of two isn't a bad average. But as far as entertainment goes it's murder. And that's the way the two big concerts of Sendoff '68 went.

Friday night was a winner. There was the Butterfield Blues Band, which judging by the audience's reaction, was doing their thing to everybody's satisfaction.

Their performance was very lacadasical, but the sound was there. What it amounted to was a jam sessions which your paid to watch. But then I happen to like jam sessions.

When the Unifics were announced I sort of braced myself for a third-rate group brought in to stretch the concert out.

Then they came bouncing onto the stage in green brocade Edwardian jackets, white pants, white shoes and white gloves. Groan.

They launched into their first number. Shock. They're good. And as they moved through their act, it became apparent that they were enjoying themselves up there. As a result you really started to get caught up, in spite of some of the corniness of their numbers like their current "hit" called "Court of Love." Then there was "Beginning of my End" which, if you listened to the lyrics, reminded you of a black version of J. Frank Wilson's moldy oldie "Last Kiss."

Their choreography was great, almost camp, but you could tell that they weren't taking it too seriously themselves. However, it did prompt one spectator to comment, "The whole act is the lead singer (Al Johnson) an then there are the other three who translate for the deaf in the audience."

Then came Martha Reeves and the Vandellas. They put on a smooth, polished, professional performance that, as we heard so often over the weekend, "Socked it to ya." The high point was Martha doing "Light My Fire." And her playing up to a drunk in the front row during it. It took courage or something.

A good show.

Saturday night was a diffeent story.

Sam and Dave saved the evening from what could have been a disaster. For such good performers, you wonder how they picked such a bad road show.

It started out with the band. They came onto the stage and after some delay started to play, which is probably the best way to describe it since they certainly weren't working. They just sort of bopped along not really playing up a storm.

There was one conspicuous exception though and that was Julius Caesar who played lead sax and flute. His version of "Sittin' on the Dock of the Bay" momentarily lifted you above the general apathy of the band in spite of their dancing.

We were then treated to Johnny K. "from Miami Beach, Florida." He actually wasn't that bad, it was just that he was trying too hard and showing nothing for it.

He was followed by Margi Hendrix, who we were informed "was formerly with Ray Charles." I'm pretty sure I know why she isn't with him any longer. She tried to get the audience fired up by having them answer her with "ya" or "good." She's getting paid to do the work, not the audience.

Following an hour and half of this we were treated to the crowning of the SENDOFF queen, Linda Tarlow and her court of finalists, one of whom, we were told is "interested in small children - and people."

After intermission, Sam and Dave came out and turned the trick. They shook the band out of its slumber, along with the audience, and really started the show moving.

It was stylish, funny, sad, all the things that good performers are supposed to put across.

And it made up, almost, for the first half as they did such hits as "Hold On" and "Satisfaction."

The dancer was interesting. Hmmmmmmmmmm.

It was quite a feat to get that audience to its feet and clapping. Sam and Dave deserved it.

In the audience there were some complaints about the length of the both concerts. Many claimed that three hours is too long to sit and really enjoy a performance.

The theater in the round attempt wasn't very successful according to those who had to stare at the backs of the performers through most of the show. This was especially true Saturday night.

Another frequently heard criticism involved the lack of variety in types of music. Not everyone is a soul fan.

Handel's 'Messiah' Performed By Vassar and Amherst Choirs

By JAMES W. WADE
Fine Arts Staff

Sophomore Week 1968 concluded triumphantly yesterday with an inspiring performance of George Frederic Handel's "Messiah" at Curry Hicks Cage by the Vassar College Choir and the Amherst College Glee Club. The Christmas section of the Messiah was performed with the well-known Hallelujah Chorus as the finale. Professor Bruce G. McInnes, director of the Amherst Glee Club, conducted the combined chorus and orchestra.

Soloists were Phyllis Bryn-Julson, soprano; Blanche Porto, also; Richard Donohue, tenor, and David Laurent, bass. The music presented was certainly polished, even if the Cage failed to produce a celestial atmosphere worthy of such glorious sound.

Soloists for the Messiah were of dynamic quality. Most convincing performances were delivered by all. Handel style was never abandoned for any individual aspirations. Of radiant caliber were the tenor recitative and aria which opened the work. Bass David Laurent sang with profound strength as soprano Phyllis Bryn-Julson exhibited lilting quality. Alto soloist Blanche Porto produced soothing tones, although projection was sometimes lacking.

The orchestra's performance was one of mastery and sufficient musicianship. Intonation was always observed as was depth. Unextinguishable enthusiasm was ever-present from the combined choruses. Nothing could have been more conducive of the season than the massive brilliance of the final Hallelujah Chorus. Heavenly music burst through the air to produce an awesome conclusion to one of the most beautiful Christmas oratorios ever written.

Violin Recital To Be Given Tonight

Ruggiero Ricco, one of the world's foremost violin virtuosos, will perform in recital at UMass in Bowker Auditorium tonight at 8 p.m., with piano accompanist, Leon Pommers.

Ricci's program will include Johannes Brahms Sonata No. 3 for Violin and Piano, Op. 108; Sonata in G Minor for Violin Alone by Bela Bartok; Hindemith's Sonata No. 2 for Violin Alone; Sonata in G Minor for Violin and Piano by Claude Debussy and Paganini's "Nel cor piu non mi sento".

Tickets for this concert, sponsored by the Concert Association, are free of charge to UMass undergraduates. Reserved seats for the general public are available at $1.50. Tickets may be obtained by contacting the Student Union Ticket Office, however, due to a limited seating capacity, they are on a first come, first served basis.

The Beatles Newist Album: A Sub-Beatles Performance

By RAY TAYLOR
Fine Arts Editor

The Beatles have managed to do it again - to produce the unexpected. Their new album, cleverly entitled THE BEATLES, is housed in a jacket that will probably never become a collector's item. Instead of trying to outdo the garish covers of MAGICAL MYSTERY TOUR and SGT. PEPPERS, the new one boasts of nothing more than solid white - a return to simplicity?

Another feature of this production which immediately catches the eye (and the pocketbook) is the fact that one is not buying a single disc but two. Double the pleasure - right? Wrong. Some of the songs are far below what one might expect from these musical mentors. Granted, the good songs would make up more than one disc, however... Two immediate disappointments - "Hey, Jude" and "Revolution" are not part of the collection. There is a slower version of "Revolution" on side four which honestly is better than the pop single. As far as the charts, it is hard to evaluate. If you're looking for a worthy sequel to ST. PEPPERS or MAGICAL MYSTERY TOUR, forget it. If anything the album is a regression in musical inocation. Yet, it's new.

My immediate reaction to the album was that the 4 B's were being satirical. Opening with the Beach Boyish, "Back in the U.S.S.R.", spoofing on late 50's rock with "Happiness is a Warm Gun", and even ridiculing their younger years with "Let's do it in the Road", the foursome confess to be honest with the listener and themselves. They are being themselves, and I'm sure they had a great deal of fun doing it. It's worth the investment.

Two reasons for joining Du Pont, and three for quitting.

1 Du Pont offers open-end opportunity. You don't go into a training program. You go to work—in a series of growth jobs that broaden your base for professional progress and help you find the specific field you want to grow in. We call it "planned mobility."

2 Du Pont works at the outer limits. Sure, everybody claims they do the far-out research. But Du Pont is a world leader in research with the money and the engineering capability to translate ideas into commercial products. If you have a profitable idea, we have what it takes to make it work; and we have a special bonus plan to reward you for it. So Du Pont people grow, personally and professionally. Even men who leave Du Pont often do so because of the professional growth they experienced at Du Pont.

1 They go to universities, to teach—recognized authorities in their profession.

2 They go into space, or other government projects.

3 And they go to our competitors, who are smart enough to know where to look for the top men.

We don't like to lose men, and we don't lose many. But when you hire the best, then help them to get better, your people are bound to be sought after.

Matmen Pin Tufts, 34-11, Frosh 55 Jumbos, -0

by Bob Ganley
Staff Reporter

The UMass varsity wrestling team evened its record with its first victory of the year, a 34-11 win, over Tufts on Saturday afternoon at Beyden gymnasium. The matmen piled up a 29-3 lead in the light and middle weights to clinch the victory.

Tufts was handicapped by the fact that they forfeited three matches. Nick DiDemenico at 115, Earle McCartney at 137 and Parker Simonds at 160 won without having to take off their warmup suits.

Tufts collected three points early in the match when UMass' Dave Wade lost a 5-2 decision. The 123 lb. match ended in a 2-2 tie, but Wade's opponent got three points for riding time and the victory. At 130 lbs., Phil Davis collected a 6-2 decision for the Redmen. He got a takedown in the first period and then scored two reversals to one for his opponent to receive the victory.

Brian Urquhart was involved in a close match at 145 lbs. He led by only a 2-0 score in the third period before he scored a near pin to boost his winning total to 5-0.

Mike Brauner scored the first of two UMass falls in his 152 lb. match. He got the takedown and a reversal on his opponent before pinning him in the third period. He was leading 4-0 at the time with five minutes riding time. Tom Andrewes gave the Redmen a 29-3 lead with a 9-5 decision at 167 lbs. The match was very close at the end of the first period, but a takedown and a predicament for Andrewes in the second period gave him all the points he needed.

In the 177 lb. match, Bob Willman lost an 8-4 decision. He was leading after the second period, but his opponent scored a reversal and a near pin in the third to win the match. George Zguris ran into a very tough opponent and was losing 6-3 when he was pinned in the second period.

The last and most exciting match of the day was in the unlimited class. Tim Perkins was greatly outweighed by the wrestler from Tufts but came back from a 5-0 deficit to pin him in the second period.

Scoring the maximum number of points, the freshmen wrestling team won their initial match, 55-0 over Tufts. The Little Redmen picked 25 of those points on forfeits as Barry Godowsky (115), Sheldon Goldberg (130), David Richmond (145), Ken Mignocchi (167), and Rod Laiselle (177) were awarded victories.

In the matches that did take place, UMass won every one by a pin to completely demolish the Jumbos. David Reynolds was leading 5-0 in his 123 lb. match when he pinned his opponent in the second period. Clay Jester also scored a second period win in the 137 lb. match.

The quickest match of the day was in the 152 lb. class. Jim Godkin scored a takedown and a predicament before pinning his foe at 1:09 of the first period. Other first period wins were registered by Derwood James in the 191 lb. class and by Carl Dambman in the heavyweight division. Larry Piccielli was involved in the closest match as he was tied 12-12 in the third period when he finally put away his opponent.

The next match is Wednesday night at Amherst College with the freshmen starting at 6:30 and the varsity at 8:00.

Frosh Bury UConn, 16-4

BY STEVE SHAMBAN
Staff Reporter

Storrs, Conn. - A blistering 75 shot attach by the UMass frosh pucksters, tempered the 25 degree temperature at UConn's outdoor rink, and enabled them to overwhelm the Little Huskies 16-4 in a game played Friday night. The win brings coach Ben Smith's frosh record to 2-1 and drops UConn to 1-1.

The high-scoring Little Redmen broke things open very quickly, taking a 6-3 lead after one period. Right wing Jack Edwards scored at 0:44 to give UMass a 1-0 lead. Eric Scrafield, Jack Byrne, Scrafield again, Edwards again and Bob Bartholomew added five more for a 6-0 lead with just over four minutes left.

UConn was not to be denied however, and came as close as they would all night to make this game a contest. At 15:59, Dick Johnson tipped in a shot off the stick of Jerry McConnell to put the Little Huskies on the board. Then at 19:12 with UMass shorthanded, Rich Peck scored on a face off pass from McConnell and was followed 19 seconds later by Bill Daugay who scored on a screen shot.

These three goals were due in large part to the failure of the Little Redmen to clear the UConns out of the crease. The Little Huskies kept swinging at the puck and the three goals resulted.

If UConn showed any semblance of challenging in the first period, the last two period s were a completely different story as the defense stiffened and UMass outshot them 56-16 and out-scored them 10-1. It was an incredible display of offensive fire power and one can only hope that similar displays will occur against the likes of Harvard and BC.

In those last two periods, Bruce Winter picked up three tallies, Edwards two more for a total of four, with Bryan Sullivan, Bob Whaidon, Jack Byrne, Dennis Brewster and Mike Waldron each contributing single goals. Jerry McConnell had UConn's lone marker in this stretch.

MINI-ICE-CHIPS - The frosh have scored 30 times in three games. The 6-3 loss to Yale frosh was somewhat disappointing as the score was tied at two-all going into the last period...next game will be Tuesday night at Orr Rink against Salem State ...face-off will be at 6:15 p.m.

UMass, After Slow Start, Topples Vermont, 68-50

Ellerbrook Cans 22 Redmen Remain Unbeaten

By MIKE CURRAN
Sports Editor

BURLINGTON, VT - UMass, after playing a sloppy first half, which allowed its opponent to stay close, took control of the boards in the second twenty minutes and blew Vermont off the court, 68 - 50, before 2600 disappointed fans at Patrick Gymnasium Saturday night.

The victory gives Coach Jack Leaman's club a 3 - 0 mark but more importantly a 1 - 0 start in their defense of the Yankee Conference title. Vermont, playing with a squad of eight, suffered its first setback of the young season, leaving the Catamounts with a 2-1 record.

Five quick whistles, three against junior guard Ray Ellerbrook, threw a kink into any plans the visitors' had for disposing of the Catamounts early. With five minutes gone in the period, Vermont led 7 - 3.

A three-point play by Ellerbrook woke the Redmen out of a ball-handling trance. Seconds later a hook shot by Peter Gayeska, two free throws from the 6'10 center, and an Ellerbrook jump shot pulled UMass into a 12-3 lead.

An inside jumper by Dave Lapointe and a layup by Bob Hutton sandwiched around a Jack Gallagher foul shot, cut the margin to one. Vermont was working the ball very deliberately, trying desperately to solve the visitor's zone.

Gallagher and Gayeska cashed in again at the charity stripe then the Catamounts' patient offense paid off in a Ray Bueb layup.

UMass in between turnovers, finally put a string of seven points together, opening the score up at 22-14. Gayeska, Ellerbrook, and Gallagher were the contributors.

Hoops by Frank Marinuk and Lapointe kept the game, in reach, however. Another hook by Gayeska and a successful conversion of a one-and-one opportunity closed out the UMass first half scoring leaving the visitors with a 26-21 intermission edge.

Deep into the second half the Redmen still couldn't shake Vermont. Martiniuk threw in a couple of 20-footers to offset buckets by Joe DiSarcina and Gayeska.

With ten minutes to go it was still a close, low-scoring ballgame as UMass led 39 - 34. Finally, though, a long-awaited Redman offensive surge took shape.

The visitors began beating the Catamounts defenders downcourt. This resulted in fast break layups by Gallagher and Dennis Chapman with DiSarcina on the passing end. A three point play by Chapman made it 48-36.

Vermont went into a press, but this only resulted in more two on ones for the Redmen when they moved into the forecourt. UMass with Dick Samulson, Gallagher, Mathias and Chapman converging on the boards, pushed their lead higher.

When the 6'6 Bueb fouled out, followed closely by the disqualification of floor general Lapointe it was virtually all over for the home team. Free throws by Ellerbrook and Samulson put the game out of reach, 58-39.

The Catamounts struggled to get some points on the board fast, but they were totally inept at catchup ball. Their forced shots were picked off by UMass' frontline and turned into points by John Shckro, Chapman and Ellerbrook.

Dennis Chapman Picks Up Key Points

With two minutes remaining the game was out of reach, 66-43. The Vermont subs, all three of them, canned three hoops and a free throw around a 20 footer by Billy Greeley to close out the scoring with the Redmen on top, 68 - 50.

Double Dribbles-Ellerbrook led the scoring with 22 points, which included a perfect ten for ten from the foul line. . . The UMass zone had the Catamounts caged after the opening five minutes. . . Rebounding, Redmen 59 - Catamounts 40. . .Gayeska hit a perfect seven of seven from the floor, set out the last ten minutes with four fouls but still finished with

Ray Ellerbrook Leads All Scorers

17 points and 12 rebounds. . .His five perfect hook shots had Vermont fans talking to themselves. . Gallagher and Mathias came up with 11 and 10 rebounds respectively . . . .Coach Leaman battled the flu all Saturday and found victory to be the best cure.

Icemen Shoot More, But Score Less As Redmen Lose to Vermont, 6-3

Despite a strong offensive thrust led by junior center John Hartnett, the UMass varsity hockey team was defeated by Vermont, 6-3, in a game played at Orr Rink Saturday night.

It was the same old song for the Redmen as they fell the victom to several costly defensive errors which combined with their failure to finish off scoring plays spelled defeat.

Just five minutes after Vermont opened the scoring, Hartnett came back with a goal for the Redmen. It came at 14:38 of the first period after a flurry of passes between Jim O'Brian, Jeff Sanborn, and Hartnett.

The Redmen went behind again at 2:46 of the second period on a goal by Vermont's Bob Krebs. This time their lead held up till 16:40 of the same period when Charlie Hanifin scored unassisted.

The lead was short lived, however, as Vermont came back with two more goals before the end of the period. Vermont added two more goals in the third period with Hartnett adding his second goal for UMass. Sanborn had a goal and two assists against Amherst Thursday, got his second assist of the game.

The scoring was not indicative of the fact that UMass dominated play for most of the game. The Redmen had a total of 52 shots on goal which must have made Coach Jack Caniff wonder what it takes to put the puck in the net.

The line of Hartnett, Sanborn and O'Brian applied continual pressure to the Vermont goalie who played a fine game. There's no doubt where lies the primary UMass weakness. However, if the team can continue to get as many as 52 shots on the net as they did last night, they will win their share of games this year.

The next varsity game will be Friday afternoon at 2 p.m. against a Bowdoin College at Orr Rink.

Frosh Hoopsters Win Easily, 72-41

by Peter Pascarelli
Assistant Sports Editor

In what was an obvious mismatch from the start, the UMass freshmen basketball team easily defeated the hopelessly outclassed Westfield State Junior Varsity, 72-41, Friday evening at Westfield. It was the second win in succession for the undefeated Little Redmen.

The frosh took the lead early, built it up and maintained it throughout. UMass was never threatened by their opposition. The starting five of Rich Vogely, Julius Erving, Tom Austin, John Bettancourt amd Mike Pagliara had too much of everything for Westfield.

The Little Redmen took a 34-14 halftime lead, largely due to the scoring and rebounding of the forward combination of Vogely and Erving. Vogely scored ten points and took down 13 rebounds for the game while Erving scored 19 points, including nine field goals and also had 13 rebounds.

What with a big lead throughout and little worry from the opposition, UMass coach Peter Broaca had a chance to see some substitutes in game action.

Among those who handled themselves well were, guard Don Moore who scored five points, Warren Anton who had three field goals for six points and Spierdowis who also scored three from the field for six points.

It was a game that really did not tell much about the abilities of the frosh. They were playing a team that was not in their class. The Little Redmen have yet to be seriously tested, but should have their hands full meeting Rhode Island and Connecticut and also Chamberlayne Junior College, before taking a month and a half off.

After two games, Erving leads the frosh scoring, averaging 15 points, with Bettancourt and Pagliara close behind, averaging 14 each. Erving also leads rebounders with 14 a game.

Riflemen Shoot Brown

The varsity rifle team kept their perfect record on Saturday with a 1388 - 1188 win over Brown. This is the Redmen's second win over an Ivy League team this year and brings their overall record to 6-0.

The UMass men shot average, rather than good scores, but still managed an easy win due to their strong depth. Ten team members can shoot while only the top five score in the match. But the U.M. team were strong enough to have beaten Brown with their low 5 men.

The highlight of the Redmen's shooting was a perfect 100 in the prone position by ex-Stockbridge team member Dave Sears.

With only half the season completed, Capt. John Lacouture, Dudley Darling, and Dave Sears should be congratulated for having already qualified for their University Sweaters.

Gymnasts Lose 2nd Straight

By JAN CURLEY
Assistant Managing Editor

The varsity gymnastics team got their home season off on a glum note Saturday night in the Auxiliary Gymnasium at Boyden by losing to Temple, 155-150. It was the second loss in a week for Coach Eric Kjeldsen's boys, and also the second close loss.

Temple won four of the six events to two by UMass. Temple took the floor exercises, 26.7 to 25.9; side horse, 25.2 - 22.5; parallel bars, 26.4 - 25.0 and horizontal bars, 25.2 - 24.1.

The Redmen copped the rings, 26.1 - 25.85, and the long horse vaulting 26.08 - 25.63.

Individual winners for UMass were Dick DelGallo who tied with Barry Weiner of Temple for first place on the rings and Joe Reed, first on the long horse vault with Steve Cary, also of UMass, second in that event. Cary chalked up a second on the paralled bars with a score of 8.95 behind Temple's Weiner, 9.05.

Temple dominated the floor exercises as Weiner posted a 9.4 for first place. Peter DiFurio scored 9.1 in the side horse and Jay Geist of Temple won the horizontal bars, 8.95.

President-Elect Richard Nixon Will Announce Cabinet Members

NEW YORK (AP) - President-elect Richard M. Nixon will announce his cabinet selections Wednesday night, naming all 12 members in an appearance nationally televised from Washington.

Ronald L. Ziegler, Nixon's press assistant, announced the unprecedented format Monday. The Nixon announcement will be timed for television impact, at 10 p.m. from Washington's Shoreham Hotel.

It represents a new look in Cabinet announcements. Past presidents-elect have chosen to disclose their choices one or two names at a time.

Ziegler said the final decisions on the men who will make up the cabinet have now been made, but he refused to comment in any way on the names involved.

"I can neither confirm nor deny any personality with relation to the cabinet," Ziegler said. He said Wednesday's announcement may also include some major Nixon appointments outside the cabinet.

Ziegler disclosed that Nixon dispatched a personal message Sunday to President Charles de Gaulle of France. It was sent through U. S. Ambassador Sargent Shriver, who met with the president-elect for nearly two hours.

One man evidently destined for cabinet rank, Democrat Daniel P. Moynihan, conferred during the day with Nixon's top assistants, apparently preparing for an assignment in the administration. Moynihan, an expert on urban affairs, was expected to head either the Department of Labor or the Department of Housing and Urban Development.

Nixon met in his 39th-floor suite at the Hotel Pierre with Robert Anderson, former secretary of the Treasury and once assistant secretary of defense.

William McChesney Martin, chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, also was seeing Nixon.

Ziegler refused to discuss the substance of these conversations.

When a reporter asked whether Rep. Melvin R. Laird of Wisconsin might be named secretary of defense, Zleiger repeated his refusal to confirm or deny anything.

Ziegler said Nixon will fly to Washington Wednesday for his evening announcement of the cabinet. He said newsmen will make up the live audience, but Nixon clearly counted on a vast national television audience.

The cabinet members are to be present and Nixon plans to introduce them in a session Ziegler said would take at least 30 minutes.

UMass Board of Trustees May Add 5 Faculty Members

BY JOHN HICKEY
News Editor

Representative David Vigneault has submitted a bill for consideration by the state legislature which would add five faculty members to the UMass Board of Trustees.

Vigneault, a UMass grad student who represents the 17th Hampden District (Ward 8, Springfield and Wilbraham), prepared the bill in cooperation with Professor George Goodwin of the UMass-Boston Department of Political Science and Professor James Broderick of the UMB English Department. The measure was partially prompted by the recent decision of the Trustees to locate UMass-Boston at Columbia Point. The decision was opposed by the UMB faculty senate, which approved a resolution finding a Columbia Point side "unacceptable" in a 69-10 vote.

The proposed bill calls for five additional trustees, two from the UMass-Amherst campus, two from UMass-Boston, and one from the medical school in Worcestor. Vigneault stated that precedents for faculty membership on boards of trustees are ample among private educational institutions and the concept deserves consideration in the context of higher public education in Massachusetts. The support of the American Association of University Professors is now being sought for the measure.

The purpose of the bill, according to its sponsor, is primarily to "diffuse policy-making consistent with adequate functioning."

Temp. Zeroes Down Breaks '49 Record

The temperature at UMass fell to below zero early this morning and broke the 1949 record of 6 degrees. The official record, according to weathermen at Bradley Field in Hartford, was broken at 9:15 last night when the temperature in Amherst hit 5 degrees.

The weather forecast for today is sunny and cold with temperatures in the twenties. The probability of precipitation is zero today and tomorrow.

Violence Still Erupting At San Francisco State

san francisco 9ap0 - Rock-throwing strikers broke windows in two San Francisco State College buildings Monday but quickly marched off the campus when police reinforcements arrived.

The college has been torn by violence, vandalism and fights with police since the Black Students Union called a strike Nov. 6.

At the end of a rainy-day lunchtime rally in the main quadrangle, attended by about 300 strike supporters and 1,000 onlookers, a BSU speaker, Tom Williams, suddenly shouted, "Classes are going on in the BSS. Let's move over there and close it down."

The activists raced across the quadrangle and threw stones and bricks at windows in the Business and Social Sciences Building and what was left of the glass doors, shattered in battles last week.

They then surged over to the Administration Building, and broke several windows there.

As 200 police held in reserve off the campus, rushed in, the strikers marched across busy 19th Avenue to the Protestant Ecumenical House, a staging point for demonstrators.

Just as the rally exploded into violence, Nesbitt Crutchfield, another BSU leader, told the crowd, "We are involved in a war and we are going to close this . . . place down."

The Business and Social Sciences Building is a prime target because most students there have attended classes regularly since the campus was reopened Dec. 2 by Dr. S. I. Hayakawa, acting president. His predecessor had closed it Nov. 13 because of violence.

Most of the 18,000 students have attended classes under police protection.

Strikers demand an autonomous Black Studies Department under student control, an Ethnic Studies Department, promotion of some teachers and firing of others, admission of all non-white applicants, and reinstatement of Black Panther George Murray as a part-time instructor.

Oshkosh Ruling

Brown U. Blacks Say Univ. Pledge 'Racist in Nature

PROVIDENCE, R. I. (AP) - Negro students who boycotted Brown University for four days said Monday the school's pledge of $1.2 million to boost Negro enrollment was "racist in nature" but they would return to class to work within the framework of the concessions they won.

Kenneth H. McDaniel, a Norfolk, Va., senior who spoke for the 40 boycotting students, said the students felt they would be doing a disservice to other young Negroes if they did not accept the university's proposals.

Gordon Hall, self-made expert on extremist, will speak at 8:00 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom tonight in a DAILY COLLEGIAN and class of 1970 jointly sponsored lecture.

Laird Will Be Named Secretary of Defence

By Rowland Evans and Robert Novak

WASHINGTON - Representative Melvin R. Laird of Wisconsin will be secretary of defense in the Nixon cabinet - a wholly unexpected appointment of the most far-ranging importance.

Laird, who agreed Friday night to sacrifice his powerful position in Congress for the Pentagon post, will thus become a prime arbiter of the new administration's foreign-military policy and perhaps eventually strong man of the Nixon cabinet on a wide variety of issues. In particular, he will be a strong force for a quickly negotiated settlement of the Vietnam War.

Although he was an increasingly influential adviser to President-elect Nixon during the past campaign, Laird was not seriously considered for a cabinet post - at his own choosing. As the most powerful Republican in the House, he was reluctant to give up 16 years of seniority built up by the relatively early age of 46. Besides, Nixon wanted a Democrat in the Pentagon and appeared to have an impressive one in Senator Henry M. Jackson of Washington (who had Laird's strong endorsement).

But much to the surprise of Nixon insiders, Jackson last week rejected the offer - thereby heeding the pleas of several Democratic Senators who warned him Nixon would use him as the scapegoat for reduced domestic spending due to higher defense spending. Whether Jackson agreed with that view or not, he did feel - and so informed Nixon aides - that liberal Democrats in the Senate would make his life miserable as Secretary of Defense. With Jackson out, with Gov. John Connally of Texas (another Democratic possibility) al-

Provost Tippo Asks Faculty To Avoid Pre-vacation Exams

In a memo to faculty and administration personnel, Provost Oswald Tippo asked that faculty members abide by the published exam schedule and not attempt to schedule final exams before the Christmas vacation. The question of scheduling final exams before vacation arose this year because no regular class sessions are called for between the beginning of the Christmas vacation and the start of the final examination schedule.

Some professors and their classes had hoped to conduct their exams before the vacation period. The provost's directive states that should a pre-vacation exam be necessary, the professor must obtain the permission of his department head and have the unanimous consent of the class members involved.

Provost Tippo explained in his statement that the scheduling of exams in its present form is done to protect students from possible conflicts and to allow those students who wish to study during the vacation to do so.

Columbia Students Demand Hearings

NEW YORK (AP) - Student unrest seethed at Columbia Monday, but there was no violence.

Several hundred students demanded public disciplinary hearings for students accused of involvement in campus disorders. Specifically, they demanded opening of a hearing for Gus Reichbach, a junior law student accused of interfering with registration.

UM Symphony Band Opens Season With Interesting Performance

RAY TAYLOR FINE ARTS STAFF

The University of Massachusetts Symphony Band opened its 1968-69 season Sunday afternoon with the presentation of its first concert in Bowker Auditorium. The first selection, PROCESSION OF NOBLES by Rimsky-Korsakov, gave a hint of things to come. Meticulously executed, the number exhibited an extraordinary degree of section unity - a product of long hours of obvious hard practice. Followed by A SOLEMN MUSIC by Virgil Thomson, the band demonstrated its wide range of capabilities in producing various tonal modes. After a somewhat shaky start, the piece evolved into a series of warm dissonances climaxed by a very beautiful and emotional ending. The first third of the program was concluded by Shostakovich's A FESTIVE OVERTURE. Triggered by a fanfare, the band displayed an excitement unequalled anywhere else in the program. This number was the band's best offering.

After a short intermission, the audience was entertained by the Madrigal Singers, the Chamber Singers, and a Chamber Band. The two choral ensembles were of similar calibre although the Chamber Singers seemed to affect a more blended sound. The final group on the second third of the program, the Chamber Ensemble, added contrast to an otherwise musical afternoon. Displaying an intonation problem between the brasses and reeds supported by sloppy attacks, the Chamber Band waded through a boring rendition of Richard Strauss's SERENADE IN E FLAT MAJOR, OPUS 7, and provided an appropriate introduction to the second intermission of the afternoon.

Physics Dept. Begins Study Of Solar Radio Signals

UMass has begun what may be the most detailed study yet undertaken of the mysterious radio waves that come from the sun.

The UMass department of physics and astronomy will use new measuring techniques and department-designed instruments to gather data on the solar radio signals that sometimes disrupt man's radio communication, can affect space flights and may have other effects in the earth's atmosphere.

The project is supported by a $100,000 grant to the University by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration and is directed by UMass associate professor of physics and astronomy G. Richard Huguenin, who shares credit for that first American discovery of a new variety of stars that emit radio signals and are known as pulsars.

"The basic aim is to understand more about the sun," said Dr. Huguenin. Solar radio waves vary in frequency and intensity and sometimes reach the level of so-called "solar storms," he said. Such a storm late last month, for example, all but wiped out short-wave radio communication on earth for a week, the UMass astronomer added.

Solar storms can affect space travel, he said, and are thought to be the reason that a recent Soviet space flight was called back. More precise knowledge of solar radio emissions could cast new light on such solar phenomena as sun spots and high-energy particle radiation from the sun, Dr. Huguenin believes.

The UMass study will work in two main areas. It will gather precise, quantative data on dynamic spectra--how the intensity of waves varies as a function of frequency--of solar radio emissions in the 25 to 200 megacycle range. It will also make high time resolution and high sensitivity studies of solar radio on emissions between 20 and 400 megacycles. An 85-foot diameter tracking antenna will be used in the latter studies.

Appalachian Kids To Receive Toys

Starting today and ending Thursday, there will be a booth in the Student Union lobby to collect toys for children living in Appalachia. Those wishing to contribute new toys are asked to wrap them in a box and leave them at the booth. Each box should also be marked with the age of the children's group for which the toy is suitable. Collection boxes have also been placed in Adams Drug Store in Amherst and at McManus' in the Campus Shopping Plaza.

Ted Lee, a student at Amherst College, has already collected several packages of clothing.

The Special Events Committee of the Program Council will sponsor "Trim-a-Limb," an all-day decorating party in the Student Union on Wednesday. Helpers are needed to decorate two large Christmas trees and the Student Union Building for the holiday season. Refreshments will be available for those who join in the decorating.

Offices of the Daily Collegian are on the second floor of the Student Union on the University campus. Phones are 545-2550 (news), 545-0344 (sports), 545-031 (business and advertising), and 549-1311 (editor).

Entered as second class matter at the post office at Amherst, the Daily Collegian publishes five times weekly Monday through Friday during the academic year except during vacation and exam periods; three or four times a week following a vacation or exam period or when a holiday falls within a week. Accepted for mailing under the authority of the act of March 8, 1879, as amended by the act of June 11, 1943.

New Faculty Member Designs Costumes for UMass Theatre

A feature attraction of this week's production of "The Changeling" will be the costume designs by Elizabeth Weiss, new Assistant Professor and Resident Designer with the UMass Theatre. The theatre's entire collection of costumes was destroyed by fire two years ago, and so Miss Weiss faces a double challenge, the costuming of a large cast in elegant Italian renaissance court style for "The Changeling", and the development of a costuming program to create a significant collection.

Miss Weiss joined the University faculty after receiving her Master of Fine Arts degree from the University of Wisconsin, where she designed the costumes for numerous productions, among them "A Taste of Honey", "Finian's Rainbow," a series of one-acts by Ray Bradbury, "The Balcony", "The Importance of Being Ernest," and "Viet Rock". She has designed costumes during two summers of summer stock at Illinois Wesleyan.

The director of "The Changeling", Gary Stewart, is convinced that "the costumes for this production are among the most beautifully designed and executed costumes the University Theatre has ever had, and illuminate the play through a unified concept of design." "The Changeling" is scheduled for performance Wednesday, Dec. 11 through Saturday, Dec. 14 in Bartlett Auditorium. The Box Office, in Bartlett Hall, is open 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. on the days of performance. Telephone 545-2579.

Poor Must Take Part In Poverty Program Says VP-Elect Agnew

NEW ORLEANS (AP) - Vice President-elect Spiro T. Agnew said Monday the poor should participate in the federal poverty program "where they can make an effective contribution."

"But let us not confuse the disclosure of symptoms as a substitute for the wisdom of trained professionals."

His remarks indicated that the Nixon administration would back away from the "maximum feasible participation" aspect of the Johnson administration's War on Poverty."

Students Compose Questionaire To Measure Knowledge of Slums

By RICHARD LANE
Senior Reporter

Jackie Werner and 11 other UMass students have drawn up a questionnaire to "find out just how much students don't know about ghettos and slums" in order that a course dealing in those areas may be set up by the University next semester.

Miss Werner went on to say that 600 copies of the questionnaire have been printed and were made available in the Student Union to anyone interested in answering them last Friday. So far 150 have been received.

The questionnaire calls for the student to identify such initials as OEO, HEW, HUD, NAACP, KKK and others; to define such terms as "begging," "Honkie", "rat bite," "starvation", and "police brutality,"; and to answer various on the welfare system of the United States and opinions on the racial situation in America today.

Finally the questionnaire asks the student, "If a three credit course is offered which covers the above problems and programs, would you take it?"

Of the questionnaires received Miss Werner stated that most students "don't really know" about the problems which were covered. She continued, that most of those who had answered however, were interested in taking such a course with only four or five saying no.

Explaining the course itself, the UMass coed said that an attempt would be made to have the course conducted both on the campus itself and "on the spot", such as in Springfield, with access to slums, etc.

The subject matter would be presented by a panel representing both sides of an issue, for and against.

An attempt will be made to make the course an inter-departmental discipline among such areas as sociology, psychology, economics, history and government, according to Miss Werner. She said that she has already been in contact with the education department which is "quite involved in this area already."

Actress to Speak On Black Theatre

Cynthia Belgrave, black actress and New York co-producer of "The Trials of Brother Jero" and "The Strong Breed" by Nigerian playwright Wole Soyinka, will speak at UMass on Thursday, Dec. 12 at 4 p.m. in Room 120, SBA. Sponsored by the Theatre Area of the Department of Speech, Miss Belgrave will talk about her acting and directing experiences.

Miss Belgrave, a vivaciously attractive "first generation American, born of West Indian Negroes" is the mother of two, the director of two plays, and a distinguished actress.

The plays of Wole Soyinka, which Miss Belgrave and her husband have brought successfully to New York audiences, are beautifully wrought comic comments on subjects as varied as Elizabethan manners and contemporary African moods.

Miss Belgrave is uniquely prepared to interpret to the University community the work and potential of Black theatre artists.

most surely unavailable and with time running out, Nixon late last week turned to Laird. After much discussion, Laird's agreement came Friday night and his appointment is to be announced by Nixon Wednesday in New York.

In leaving Congress, Laird sacrifices the near-certainty that he would soon be promoted from Republican caucus chairman to floor leader and the chance of one day being Speaker of the House.

But Laird is exchanging a Capitol Hill barony for a central place on a less parochial stage. Filling a post once held by such giants as James Forrestal, George Marshall, and Robert Lovett, he becomes a national and international figure. Moreover, considering Laird's wide-ranging interests and energy, it is inconceivable he will not exert influence on non-defense and non-foreign policy matters such as social welfare schemes, the rebuilding of the cities, federal-state relations, fiscal policy, and Republican party politics.

Superficially, Republican Laird seems similar to Democrat Jackson: a hard-line anti-communist in foreign policy, highly regarded by the uniformed military and a sharp critic of Robert S. McNamara during his days as Secretary of Defense. Beneath the surface, however, Laird is considerably more subtle in his outlook.

In private conversation, for example, Laird tells friends he is neither a hawk nor a dove on Vietnam. Adding: "I am a pessimist." As such, he has long been anxious for quick negotiations and has acknowledged the probability of a coalition government in Saigon.

Similarly, Laird is not about to give the military a blank check for hardware spending and, indeed, is more cautious in that regard than the President-elect. In particular, he will move quite slowly in committing funds for the super-expensive anti-ballistic missile system (ABM).

McNamara privately considered Laird his toughest critic on Capitol Hill and his most difficult interrogator in Congressional hearings. For his part, Laird privately regarded McNamara as a brilliant Secretary of Defense in his first three years when he achieved civilian supremacy over the military.

But Laird felt McNamara blundered in insisting on a common Air Force-Navy plane in the TFX case, in spending money for deploying an ABM thin system instead of less expensive research for a full system and, most important, in his prosecution of the Vietnam War.

As the tenth Secretary of Defense and the first to come from Congress, Laird carries no administrative experience into one of the world's toughest administrative positions. But Governor Nelson Rockefeller (who wanted the post himself) advised Nixon in Palm Springs, Calif., last week, that a McNamara-type administrator would be a mistake in the Pentagon today and what was needed now was a student and practitioner of Geopolitics. In Mel Laird, Nixon has exactly what Rockefeller recommended.

The Sendoff Review

Doug Landry
Treasurer, Class of 1971

To the editor:

After Bill Dickinson's review of SENDOFF, I feel that a review of Bill Dickinson is in order.

Bill claimed he was reviewing the Sophomore Weekend. So why didn't he start with the Campus Shest Charity Drive. Why did he choose not to mention the fact that in previous years other classes have raised a maximum of $1600 whereas this year's Sophomore Class has raised over $3000 (could this be because Mr. Dickinson's class lost money?)

When he spoke of the Butterfield Blues Band, he said they were "lacadasical". Obviously Bill Dickinson has an acute lack of musical knowledge because blues is supposed to be lacadasical, it came up from the Soun and it is an expression of a feeling and not of a dancing mood. Bill Dickinson, while saying Butterfield was lacadasical, admitted they had "the sound"... confused? ---don't worry, so is Mr. Dickinson.

When Mr. Dickinson cited the delay perhaps he has forgotten last year's Homecoming when delays ranged up to 35 minutes. Our concerts were the first ones in 2 years to start both nights on time.

In Mr. Dickinson's own caustic way, he said one of the queens was "interested in people". What's so bad about that? Why didn't he mention the fact that some of them were going into the Peace Corps?

I extend my apologies to Mr. Dickinson for having the concert in the round, but you can speak to the Athletic Department about that. It was the only way that we could put on the concert due to the hoops and to the basketball practice, which, by the way, was held until 6:30 on Friday night.

Mr. Dickinson complained of the lack of variety in the shows. We had soul, blues, and Handel's Messiah. We didn't have hard rock because the Creme broke up, Jimi Hendrix is in Germany and the Doors refused $15,000 just to mention a few.

When one considers what the Sophomore Class had to work with I think they came up with a 2 plus 2 weekend.

1. $5 Friday night concert with date.
2. $5 Saturday night concert with date.

PLUS
1. Spaghetti dinner for charity.
2. Charity drive.

SPEAK OUT

An Outcast Writer

Little Willie was raised as a good junior capitalist, and by the time he was in the third grade he had sewed up the protection racket concession for his grammar school. As time went on, Little Willie graduated to bigger and better things, such as running the extortion booth in his hometown police station. He showed great potential, and seemed destined to win a high executive position in his local Mafia chapter.

But Little Willie had different ideas. One day he realized that the rackets were too much work, and decided to get rich quick the easy way. So Little Willie decided to become a writer.

Naturally, his family and friends were scandalized. Imagine the son of a great family, pillars of the community, giving up the life of polite society to become an outcast writer! But try as they could, his friends could not get Little Willie to give up the idea.

And so Little Willie wrote, filling pages and pages with cleverly worked puns, slang, and figures of speech that no one could understand. And everyone praised Little Willie, because he was such a FINE writer. And Little Willie sold many books, and earned money, and bought a printing company, and wrote more books, and printed them, and earned even more money. And Little Willie became rich and successful, almost as successful as the syndicate.

But Little Willie still was not satisfied. Here he was, already sixteen, and not yet a millionaire. Besides, writing was harder than he had thought, and he was losing his creative ability.

And then Little Willie hit on a plan. He would do something so simple any idiot could do it. He would do something that took no creative genius, and hardly any work. And best of all, he would be rich! So Little Willie wrote Notes for his stories, and sold them for one dollar all over the land.

And so it came to pass that a feeble-minded moron by the name of Little Willie Shakespeare pulled the greatest stunt on the education world since the Marquis de Sade invented Finals. Little Willie's books were made required reading in schools everywhere, and his Notes became famous.

With the money he made from his Notes, Little Willie Shakespeare bought a 400-room mansion, retired and moved to Argentina with Adolph Hitler, Pinkie Lee, Lenny Bruce, and all those other cats.

The moral of this story is:
See what you can learn from sophomore English?!?

The Glass House

The Weather is here again. That means that the temperatures sink to near zero degrees--that's if they don't go below zero. According to the weather man, the temperatures might very well do that. It's at this time of year that the students start to complain about the cold weather and wonder why they didn't go to the University of Hawaii or Miami State. But have you stopped to think what it is that makes it so cold on the UMass campus. It's quite obviously the architecture. The low buildings are surrounded by high buildings. That means that the wind gets trapped between the buildings. In layman's terms anyways, I'm sure any student of meterology will say otherwise, but the winds whipping between the buildings cause an unbearable king-size draft.

But we have a plan. Why not build a large glass dome around the campus, something like the Astrodome in Houston, Texas. It would prevent rain, wind, snow and the thermostate could always be set at comfortable temperature-like 60 degrees. Then when it rains, you wouldn't have to worry about wearing rubbers or raincoats. And when it gets really cold, you wouldn't have to worry about wearing scarves, mittens and bulky coats. Instead of being blown through the campus, you saunter across the astroturf, oblivious to the cold. That would mean green grass all year long as an added attraction. By glassing in the campus, it might also cut down on students cutting classes.

A student could never use the excuse of cutting a class because it was raining too hard or it was too cold and too far to walk from Southwest to Morrill or the Education building. We could call our big glass bubble, the Umiedome, or maybe the Board of Trustees could come up with a better name.

State Supreme Court to Decide On Baird Birth Control Case

BOSTON (CPS) - Bill Baird, who two years ago set out to deliberately challenge Massachusetts state laws against birth control, is almost at the end of the line this week in his fight against a possible ten-year prison sentence.

The Massachusetts Supreme Court is hearing his case this week. It is not entirely that the state's highest judicial bench will look kindly on a man who called it hypocritical and then proved it.

His two-year fight has been one against hypocrisy. Two years ago Baird was invited to Boston University by the NEWS, its students newspaper, to lecture on birth control and give out contraceptive devices. He lectured to an audience of more than 2,500 people, and displayed and explained the various methods of birth control.

He was immediately arrested (and subsequently convicted) on two counts that allegedly violate the state's provisions for "crimes against chastity." Each of them carries a maximum sentence of five years in prison.

One five-year penalty is for showing birth control pills on a stage; the other is for giving an unmarried 22-year-old woman a tube of vaginal foam (a non-prescriptive birth control device available at most drug stores in other states).

The 100-year-old law, entitled "Crimes Aginst Chastity," forbids the unmarried any access to birth control information of materials.

At Boston University, where the fight began, students heavily support Baird, and accuse the school of hypocrisy. President Arland Christ-Janer said the school "could not condone law-breaking," but, the students point out, the University bookstore sells birth control literature--also an illegal act under the state law.

Baird, one of the country's most aggressive voices for birth control and abortion reform, has for four years headed the Boston and New York-based Parents' Aid Society, which operates a clinic with volunteer workers in both cities. He says his battle began when, four years ago, he witnessed the death of a 29-year-old mother, who had rammed a wire coat hanger into her uterus in a pitiful attempt to abort her ninth child. The coat hanger punctured the wall of the uterus, and she died a tortured, agonizing death. Appalled by the needless tragedy, Baird gave up his job and founded the Parents' Aid Society under the motto: "To be wanted and loved is every child's birthright."

The Society operates a mobile clinic-on-wheels which goes into ghetto areas teaching women about birth control. It runs free instruction programs on sex education and drug addiction.

Baird is also a long-time crusader for more liberal abortion laws. At the nation's only free, open abortion consulting clinic, he has helped more than 5,000 women obtain abortions in the last year alone.

Often accused of "promoting promiscuity" through his emphasis on liberalized abortion and birth control laws, he cites statistics and opinions from the British National Health Service which show that this is not the case. (The British liberalized their laws long ago, and they maintain, to good effect.)

Birth control and abortion laws in this country, Baird is convinced, are enforced only against the poor, who cannot afford the high prices charged by doctors who routinely circumvent the law.

If the case before the Massachusetts Supreme Court were decided in Baird's favor, virtually all laws limiting birth control information and devices to married women throughout the country would be invalidated. If Baird loses there, he could take his case to the U.S. Supreme Court--except that he doesn't have the money for expensive legal proceedings.

Students in Boston and at other universities across the country have taken up fundraising for Baird's defense.

Student Health Council Formed To Discuss Needs and Problems

A small number of interested students met with Doctor Robert Gage, Director of the University Health Services, on Wednesday, December 4, to form the Student Health Council. This council, comprising representatives from each of the main residential areas, the fraternities, and the sororities, had been proposed as a means of gathering student opinion concerning health needs and suggesting the manner in which these needs could be met.

Topics discussed during the first meeting included the opening of a satellite clinic in the Southwest Area, transportation of ill students from outlying residential areas to the Infirmary, areas of unusual traffic hazard for pedestrians (notably North Pleasant Street), means for extending health education, use of residence hall kitchenettes, and visiting policies for inpatients at the Infirmary.

The next meeting of the Student Health Council will be on Wednesday, December 18, at 3 p.m. in the Worcester Room of the Student Union. All students interested in the activities of the Health Council are urged to attend.

(Following this meeting, it was agreed by the staff of the Health Services to modify present visiting policies by permitting inpatients to have visitors during the first 24-hours after admission.)

Higher Education for Negroes Is Subject of Commission Study

WASHINGTON (CPS) - Cornell University President James A. Perkins has called for the establishment of a national commission on higher education for the Negro.

Terming improved higher education for the black population "clearly a national problem," Perkins said "only a commission of the highest level, staffed by leading citizens both black and white in this country, can bring into focus the dimensions of the problem we face and can establish the priorities needed to examine ways of dealing with the questions of preparation, motivation, finance, access, admissions, counseling, and campus adjustment."

Speaking in Washington at a symposium jointly sponsored by the United Negro College Fund and The Saturday Review, Perkins said that, as recently as the beginning of this decade, "there were only a handful of black students in any of our major colleges and universities outside the predominantly Negro colleges in the South. In some cases, this was the result of either overt of covert discrimination, but in most cases it was more probably due to the belief that few black students were qualified to do high quality academic work."

"Some of us tried," he said, to find out why we really had so few black students. Once the question was raised, we discovered a series of six-foot high hurdles that were effectively preventing the young black student from seeking admission to our colleges and universities."

"A passive policy," Perkins said, "would only guarantee a continuation of de facto exclusion. We correctly concluded that, in order to increase the black student population, we would have to encourage blacks to apply, reexamine SAT scores as predictive of academic performance for the disadvantaged, find additional and special financial assistance provide guidance and academic counseling, and --most of all-- make them know that they were really wanted."

He called absence of "massive financial support" the major barrier to continued expansion of admission of black students.

Perkins also said, "I can conceive of a national commission of some 25 people, made up of both blacks and whites and perhaps sponsored by three or four of the large foundations. I can conceive of a commission that would make an annual report to the American people on the steps that have been taken to achieve the objectives of equal representation and equal quality of experience in higher and professional education. I can conceive of such a commission that would develop contacts with the research apparatus of the United States to see that the barriers to attaining these objectives are examined and programs are designed to break down these barriers."

School of Educ. Stages Education Marathon II

For two days next week - Tuesday, Dec. 17 and Wednesday, Dec. 18 - from noon until 10:00 p.m. a country fair atmosphere will pervade the School of Education as faculty, doctoral candidates and undergraduate students participate with members of the community in Education Marathon II. Billed as a follow-up to a one-day affair held in October (which attracted 4,200 people), this marathon will be a two-way street to find out what the community would like from the University, and what the University can offer the community.

Education Marathon II is a serious attempt to suggest and explore some of the variety, excitement and intellectual electricity that will be drawn upon in a year of major planning and reorganization of the School of Education.

Over 150 events - discussions, performances, seminars, films, panels, lectures and demonstrations - will be offered on the Tuesday and Wednesday dates, from noon 'til 10:00 p.m. Thursday, Dec. 19, will be an open day as far as planning is concerned.

The marathon has grown out of a conviction that schools of education must change to to meet the challenges and crises of modern living. This will be an attempt to find out what the University of Massachusetts, School of Education can offer to all members of the community that will be relevant, exciting, and provocative in terms of serving the educational needs of all kinds of people.

Most of the events will be organized around a variety of themes such as: What Does the Community Want from Education; What Can Community People Offer the Schools; Urban Education; New Directions in Teacher Education; Aesthetics in Education; Technology and Media; Experimental Institutions and New Directions in School Organization; International Education; Communications; Learning 2000; Human Initiatives in Education; and the like.

The outstanding quality of the new School of Education is the feeling of equal status between faculty, students, and clerical staff. This atmosphere will be manifest at the Marathon as professionals and neophytes unite in a common undertaking to reaffirm the importance of the University and to "bring the action into the classroom" to let everyone "tell it like it is" and to move from there.

Amherst College To Present Concert Of Chamber Music

The Collegium Musicum of Amherst College will present a concert of contemporary chamber music Dec. 11, 1968, at 8:30 p.m. in Buckley Recital Hall.

The program will consist of works by Hindemith, Milhaud, Ginastera, and Varese. Of special note is a new work for wind sextet by Emory Waters, '69, of Amherst College.

Also featured on the program is the Hampshire Wind Quintet: Loran Thompson, flute; Joel Bartlett, oboe; Robert Yamins, clarinet; Emory Waters, horn; and Stephen Walt, bassoon.

There is no admission charge.

Possible Compromise Reached Between Student Factions

NEW YORK (CPS) - City College of New York has come up with what it thinks is a compromise solution to the noisy and at times near-violent situation which erupted recently between campus radicals and a group of engineering students over the question of industrial recruiting at the college.

The interviews are no longer being conducted in the college's placement center to satisfy the radicals, but they have not been thrown completely off campus to satisfy the engineering students either. They are being held, to use the college's own carefully worded term, in a "college-owned, off-campus building."

That action, according to Placement Director Ernest Schnaebel, is "a sort of compromise between the two, but it's really not a compromise, it's, it's...it's just DIFFERENT from the way we normally do things here."

The only people with less enthusiasm for the solution than Mr. Schnaebel are the students themselves. While the interviews continue without the disruption that forced the college to suspend them for two days last week, the more basic question of the legitimacy of the campus recruiting process remains unanswered. Radicals are pressing for their removal all the way off campus, while the engineering students want them reinstated in the placement center.

And while Schnaebel appears to have a certain distance to a simple declarative statement, he did say that he expects the recruitment to return to "its rightful place - no, not rightful, its CUSTOMARY place" in the college's placement center shortly.

The confusion arose after disruptive sit-ins at the placement center Nov. 18 and 19, staged by student radicals protesting the recruiters' presence on campus. When the college suspended interviewing for those two days, engineering students presented the college administration with a petition, containing 795 signatures, demanding that the recruiting be resumed.

The protest of recruiting activities was one outgrowth of a week-long demonstration earlier in the month when a AWOL army private was given sanctuary in a college building. On the eighth day, college, city and federal officers made an early morning raid on the sanctuary, arresting the officer and 163 people who were supporting his protest.

One of the demands that emerged from that action was a request made of the administration that academic credit be removed from the college's Reserve Officers Training Corp (ROTC) program. So far a faculty committee has voted to approve the measure. Final approval, however, must come from the city's board of education.

Meanwhile, recruiting is continuing without interruption at the rate of 150 students a day. The radicals, however, say they will resume their protest after the Thanksgiving holidays.

Graduate to Work For VISTA in Iowa

Thomas G. Ripa, son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas F. Ripa, 190 Rock Valley Road, West Holyoke, Mass., was one of 35 trainees who were graduated recently from a VISTA training program at the University of Colorado in Denver.

As a Volunteer in Service to America, Ripa will spend one year working with the Black Hawk County Community Action Center in Waterloo, Iowa. His activities will include conducting employment programs, improving schools, housing, education and health, programs, and recruiting parttime volunteers.

Ripa attended Holyoke High School in Holyoke, Mass. He studied at Holyoke Junior College where he received his A.A. degree in 1963. He continued his studies in History at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst where he received his B.A. degree in 1967. He still furthered his study of History at Smith College in Northampton, Mass.

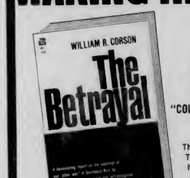
Drill Team Ends '68 Fall Season



The final performance this semester of the Precisionettes, the UMass Women's Drill Team, took place when they were the special guests at Norwich University's Regimental Ball Weekend.

The Team, after many weeks of intense drill practice, departed on Friday, November 22, from ROTC for the military academy, Norwich University, located in Northfield, Vt. They presented their two types of drill: a traditional football routine and a more intricate trick-drill routine.

Representing UMass were Capt. Kleb, the Team's advisor, Cadet Colonel Donald Legg, and Cadet Major Vincent Desilets, the drill-master. Commanding Officer is Reggie Shepard and the Executive Officer is Corky Hood, both of whom are seniors.

Redmen Seek 4th Straight, 8th Over Two Year Span

by Mike Curran
Sports Editor

Riding the crest of a seven game winning streak, 3-0 this season and four straight victories at the close of the 1967-1968 campaign, Coach Jack Leaman's Redmen play host to a floundering, but potentially excellent, Rhode Island, team. UMass, after taking the measure of Rider, AIC and Vermont, is up against the Ram squad that has surprised the experts so far. Action starts at 8 p.m. in the Cage.

Rhode Island, defending co-champions of the Yankee Conference, has been having its problems this year with nary a victory to show for these starts. The Rams have been upset by St. Michael's pounded by in-state rival Rhody's fine personnel have not gotten used to rookie coach Tom Carmody's methods.

Carmody, former freshman coach at Duke University, took over the URI helm from Ernie Calverly, who moved up to the position of Athletic Director.

Calverly is a legend in Rhode Island basketball annals both as a player, 1942-1946, and as a head coach, 1958-68. Carmody, an excellent recruiter, has big shoes to fill.

Leading Rhode Island at this point in scoring is 6'6 junior forward John Fultz, former Lincoln-Sudbury star and a resident of Natick. Claude "Snowflake" English, a 6'4 leaper, is another sure starter up front.

Bud Hayward, a 6'6 sophomore, and 6'8 junior Ron Louder, a JC transfer like English, will share the center duties. Hayward has looked better in the early going, but Louder may start to offset UMass' height.

MIKE SCHANNE-URI

JOHN FULTZ-URI

Probable starters in the backcourt are 6'4 senior Joe Zaranka, who will also move to forward on occasion, and 5'6 speedster Ed "The Flea" Molloy. "The Flea" averaged 22.1 points on last year's Rhode Island freshman team, but has been concentrating on playmaking duties as a sophomore.

Seniors Mike Schanne and Leon Mintschenko give Rhody valuable depth at the guard positions. Both stand 5'10, handle the ball well and have good outside shots.

Fred Kornblith, another JC transfer and junior Joe Vandenhove are URI's reserves in the forecourt.

The Rams are capable of much better ball than they have shown in their first threee contests. They looked decent against Manhattan and may have ironed out the kinks.

UMass is expecting its toughest battle of the early season. Coach Leaman recognized the importance of beating Rhode Island, which will be hard to beat at Kingston later on in the season. In that sense, it's a must game for the Redmen tonight.

Mini Redmen Still Unbeaten

Hot Frosh Hoopsters Meet Little Rams

by Peter Pascarelli
Assistant Sports Editor

After two easy wins, the UMass freshman basketball team faces its most difficult opponent to date when the Little Redmen meet the University of Rhode Island frosh tonight in the Cage at 6 p.m.

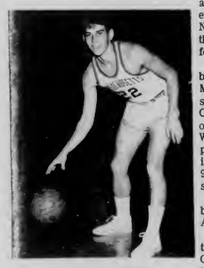
UMass has swept to two decisive victories in its initial contests. The frosh bombed A.I.C. 96-49 in their debut and routed Westfield State 72-41, but it shouldn't be that simple in this one.

Little Redman coach Peter Broaca, says of the Rams, "They are easily the finest team we will have faced thus far. It is supposed to be the biggest team they have ever had."

Big is a good word for them. At center will be 6'10 Marv Becker from Neptune, N. J. In one forward spot will be Kevin Smith, 6'3 from West Hempstead, N. Y.

But the big gun for Rhode Island is forward Phil Hickson. Hickson is a 6'4 leaper, who played at Weequiac High School in Newark, N. J. Hickson was sixth man in his junior year on a team that went 30-0 and won the New Jersey Group 4 title. Last season, as a senior, Hickson was chosen first team, all-state Group 4, the large school division in New Jersey.

Backing up the starting forecourt are 6'8 Jim O'Sullivan from Connecticut and 6'5 Ron Waustead from New Jersey. This height will be the first good test for the UMass forecourt which is equally as big.



At guard for Rhode Island will be a North Carolina, product, 6'0 Mike Beale. At the other guard spot will be either 5'10 Harry Cohn, from West Hempstead, N.Y. or Bobby Garfield from nearby Westfield. Garfield scored 16 points against Chamberlayne Junior College, a game the Rams lost, 97-86. Chamberlayne however, is supposed to be loaded this year.

Also seeing action at guard will be a New Jersey native, Tom Adams.

Rhode Island is 1-2 in its first three games. Besides, losing to Chamberlayne, the Rams lost to the Brown Freshman by one point in overtime and defeated Leichester Junior by 20 points.

UMass will be without highly regarded forward prospect Bill Kesgen until at least after semester break. Kesgen has had an ankle injury. UMass coach Broaca is expected to go with the same lineup he has used in the first two games, that being Julius Erving, Rich Vogeley and Tom Austin, with John Bettancourt and Mike Pagliara in the backcourt.

The Little Redmen looked sharp in their soggy Cage opener, and many fans are coming early, rain or shine. For if you miss this frosh team, you may be missing half the fun.

Women Gymnasts Beat N.J.

The woman's gymnastics team easily defeated the girls team from the Montclair, N.J., YMCA, in the Auxiliary Gym at Boyden. The score was 92.65-66.10.

Mrs. Eric Kjeldsen said that the Montclair team was a young team composed of mostly high school girls who lacked the maturity in their presentation to bring off the victory.

Margie Sims turned in a stellar show on the floor exercises, 8.8; the side horse vault, 8.65; balance beam, 8.8, and the uneven parallel bars, 8.9.

Linda Seikunas posted an 8.25 in the floor exercises, and Sue Clancy had an 8.25 in the side horse vault and 8.15 in the uneven parallel bars.

Next Saturday the girls will face their toughest meet of the season when they take on Springfield College. It will be a tri-meet with Towson State of Baltimore, Md., competing with UMass and Springfield. The UMass girls have yet to beat Springfield which is one of the best teams in the East.

The meet will take place in the Auxiliary Gym of Borden at 7:30 p.m.

Penn State Dominates ECAC

NEW YORK (AP) - Penn State's unbeaten football team placed three men on the Division 1 squad of the Eastern College Athletic Conference. Ted Kwalick, tight end, Charles Pittman, halfback, and Dennis Onkentz, a linebacker selected as a guard, were the Penn State men to make the squad.

Named with Pittman to the backfield were Yale's Brian Dowling at quarterback, Rutgers' Bryant Mitchell at half back and Army's Charles Jarvis as fullback.

George Burrell of Penn was named the defensive back of the year and Vice Clement's a Connecticut halfback, was named the sophomore of the year.

The ECAC Division 1 team:

End-Kwalick and Skip Orszulak, Pittsburgh.

Tackles-Arthur Thomas, Syracuse, Rich Moore, Villanova.

Guards-John Emery, Harvard and Onkotz.

Center-Richard Sandler, Princeton.

Backs-Dowling, Pittman, Mitchell and Jarvis.

Injured Bears Set Sights On Title

CHICAGO (AP) – Five weeks ago they put the Chicago Bears in a coffin when they lost the great Gale Sayers for the season. But they forgot to nail down the lid.

The Bears pulled off their greatest victory of the season Sunday by defeating the Rams in Los Angeles 17-16. It capped a comeback on a trail strewn with key injuries:

Quarterback Jack Concannon and Rudy Bukich both were lost in the Minnesota game Sept. 29.

Ace punter Bobby Joe Green later broke his leg.

Sayers, the National Football League's No. 1 rusher, tore his knee apart against San Francisco.

Virgil Carter, fresh from the taxi squad to No. 1 quarterback, guided the Bears on a four-game victory streak then was shelved with a broken ankle.

The Bears were playing for Carter, protecting him like a kid brother. When he was carried off the field against Atlanta Nov. 17, the Bears lost the game. It looked as if the coffin lid was going to close.

Then Concannon came back after missing seven games with a broken collarbone. The Bears lost to Dallas. Two weeks ago they defeated New Orleans, as expected, then came Los Angeles. They won as 14-point underdog.

Now they share the Central Division lead with the Minnesota Vikings each at 7-6.

The Vikings wind up Sunday against Philadelphia heavily favored.

The Bears are host to the dethroned Green Bay Packers in the 100th game of the ancient rivals. Victory would assure them the title and send them to Baltimore for the Western Conference championship.

If Chicago and Minnesota end in a tie, the Bears would take the crown because they have beaten the Vikings twice.

The beast came out in the Bears against the Rams.

"When we got to Los Angeles, everyone was talking about the Rams game with Baltimore a week away," said linebacker Dick Butkus, mainspring of a defense that otherwise has drawn ridicule much of the season.

"They looked at our game like it was just an exhibition. They made it sound like we were nothing.

"We really got riled up."

UNH Dumps BU

For those UMass hockey fans who think it would be ridiculous if the Redmen were to play B.U. this year. Conference rival UNH defeated the Terriers Saturday night in Durham, 6-3. UMass is scheduled to play the Wildcats at UNH February 27. There is also a possibility that the two will meet in the Yankee Conference Tournament this month.

Hall Defines Right Left Middle Labels

By JAN CURLEY
Assistant Managing Editor

Taking Clinton Rossiter's statement that "political labels in the United States are certainly very much in use today in the United States and should not be scrapped because they are used incorrectly, Gordon D. Hall, self-styled lecturer on extremism in the United States defined what he termed to be the left, right and middle before a crowd of about 150 in the Student Union Ballroom last night.

In defining these groups, Hall said that he "is a total libertarian and none of these groups lack the right to do what they are doing."

According to Hall, the middle consists of a "rough, loose consensus supported by major elections of the 1900's." Most Americans have the "inclination to vote for either the Republican or Democratic party." He went on to say that the only tradition is "the tradition of liberalism."

"Liberals support a tradition of reform brought about peacefully through legislative means," said Hall. He stressed the point that this in no way made liberalism synonymous with Communism.

Conservatives believe that "man at best is not inherently good," said Hall, "and the task of government is not to reform and experiment, but bind politics and limit government at all levels." Hall also said that conservatives believe that since man has contradictions within himself, he can become a tyrant. "The rise of totalitarianism results from putting too much power in the hands of a few. They (conservatives) want limited government because they expect contradictions in man," said Hall.

"I happen to be one that thinks they liberalism and conservatism serve the country well. They have bridged the gap between rich and poor" and have brought about a middle class.

Hall defended the middle and placed Marxism as an example on the left and authoritarianism, the John Birchers and Nazi party, on the right.

"The left is not part of the liberal reform tradition," said Hall. According to him they agree on just so much and then begin to fight. Although the left

Rogers, Laird To Hold Key Cabinet Posts

WASHINGTON (AP) - President-elect Nixon's Cabinet began to take firm shape Thursday with the word he has selected William P. Rogers as secretary of state.

Nixon himself confirmed that one man in the Cabinet will be Lt. Gov. Robert H. Finch of California. Presumably Finch will be secretary of health, education and welfare.

Another post nailed down, was that of secretary of housing and urban development, with Michigan Gov. George Romney the man.

The other key Cabinet post, secretary of defense, was earlier reported definitely going to Rep. Melvin R. Laird, R-Wis.

Nixon will formally make his choices known at 10 p.m. Wednesday.

With mystery still keeping the guessing game going on the full list, this is how the lineup appeared last night:

Secretary of the Treasury - David Kennedy, chairman of the Continental Illinois National Bank of Chicago, or Robert B. Anderson, a texas banker who served in the post during the Eisenhower administration.

Attorney General - John N. Mitchell, a Nixon aide and former mer law partner who served as his presidential campaign director.

Secretary of the Interior - Govs. Walter F. Hickel of Alaska or Tim Babcock of Montana, who was defeated for re-election in November.

Secretary of Agriculture - Clifford M. Hardin, University of Nebraska chancellor, a former dean of agriculture at Michigan State.

Secretary of Labor - James J. Reynolds, now undersecretary.

Secretary of Commerce - mystery with Romney lined up for Housing and Urban Development.

Secretary of Transportation - Gov. John A. Volpe of Massachusetts.

Postmaster General - William C. Blount, president of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce.

Black Awareness Marathon Includes Discussions, Plays Films, Concert

A 30-hour black awareness marathon, entitled "Liberation Through Awareness," will take place this weekend, Dec. 13-14, at UMass.

Under the co-sponsorship of the UMass Afro-American Organization and the University Fine Arts Council, the weekend program will consist of 13 events, including a poetry reading, jazz concert, theater presentation, films, seminars and discussions.

Steve Moore, chairman of the Black Awareness Coordinating Committee, will speak at the opening discussion in Thompson Tower Auditorium, Friday, Dec. 13, at 7:30 p.m.

A presentation of black images through musical media will be made at 8 p.m. by LeRoy Richardson, a graduate student in the UMass School of Education.

The film "Phyllis and Terry", contemporary document dealing with the lives of two adolescent black girls living in lower east side Manhattan, will be shown at 9:30 p.m.

The program of black awareness will resume at noon Saturday, Dec. 14, in room 116, SEA, with a seminar led by William Wilkinson, of the Holyoke Community College faculty. At this time there will also be a showing in Mahar of "Black Mood", filmed in Roxbury, by Steve Bowden of the UMass CCENS. At 2 p.m. there will be a repeat showing of "Phyllis and Terry."

"Black/White Student Power" will be the topic of discussion at 2:30 in Mahar. Participating on the panel will be Gil Salk of the Martin Luther King, Jr. Social Action Council; Robert Henderson, leader of the Afro-American Organization; John Wilson, chairman of Afro-Am at Holyoke Community College; and Paul Silverman, president of the UMass Student Senate.

Another panel discussion, "Black Identity--then What?", will follow under moderator William Smith, co-chairman of the UMass Afro-Am group. Included on the panel will be Sylvester TX Muslim, New York City; Frank Hughes of the Black Panther Party. Boston; McKinley Moore, former director of Black House, Springfield; Steve Moore of the Black Awareness Committee; and Mike Thelwell, graduate student at UMass.

A theater group from New Haven, Conn., the Black Reality, will present the play "New Haven Riots" at Bowker at 7:30 p.m. Saturday, followed by a Boston Contemporary Jazz Quartet concert at 9 p.m.

All programs, with the exception of Saturday night's play and Concert, are open to the public without charge. A limited number of tickets will be available to the public and may be purchased at the Student Union Ticket Office. There will be no charge for UMass undergraduates, although they must obtain a ticket.

The black awareness weekend marathon will conclude with a poetry reading at 10:30 p.m., Saturday, at Mahar.

Meideros vs. U.S.

Grad. Student Argues Vietnam War Illegal

by Mark Silverman
Friday Issue Editor

A UMass Graduate Student's motion that the United States is illegally involved in the war in Vietnam was taken under advisement by Judge Andrew A. Caffrey in a United States District Court Hearing in Boston Monday.

John M. Medeiros, a graduate student in Education who represented himself at the hearing, argued that the United States is fighting an illegal war because the President, and not Congress, authorized the conflict. If Medeiros is successful in the hearing, he will be able to seek an injunction which would, if granted, prevent any citizen from being sent to Vietnam.

Government Attorney Edward P. Harrington sought to have the case dismissed on the grounds that the complaint was based on a political rather than a legal question.

Medeiros originally filed the complaint against the United States last March, and has since filed a motion to ammend the original complaint, along with motions for a hearing and an injunction.

He was joined in Court Monday by a co-plaintif, UMass Undergraduate Stephen Fishman, who filed a similar complaint on Dec. 4. The two complaints are being taken as companion cases by the court.

UConn Students Hold Demonstration Against Job Recruiters, 67 Arrested

STORRS, Conn. (AP) - State troopers arrested 67 demonstrators Tuesday at the University of Connecticut when they committed a technical infraction to protest job recruitment by the Army, Navy and National Security Agency.

About 2 p.m. about 150 other demonstrators began a sit-in at a campus building and asked to meet with the university president. The sit-in group dwindled to about 90 by late afternoon.

The arrests were made in an atmosphere of calm discussion between state police officials and protestors, who said they wanted to be arrested - but also wanted their protest to be completely peaceful.

"We can't arrest you for not doing anything," State Police Co. Leslie Williams told the demonstrators as they sat down in a street near a building in an isolated corner of campus.

After discussing the situation with the demonstrators, Williams and another state police officer agreed to stand together and let the protestors push between them. As they did the demonstrators were arrested on breach of the peace charges, and placed in school buses to await transfer to the state police barracks at Stafford Springs.

All were released by early evening without bond in their own recognizance. Each person was charged with breach of the peace and failure to disperse. Court hearings for all 67 were set for Jan. 14.

A group totaling about 300 persons originally appeared outside the ice-skating warming hut being used for the interviews, Williams read the riot act to the group, telling them failure to disperse would be followed by arrests. About 200 persons then left.

Apparently angered by the reading of the riot act, some 150 of the original protest group began a sit-in at a campus building, Koons Hall, where the job placement division of the university has its offices. They indicated they would stay until University President Homer N. Babbidge Jr. explained to them why a reported pledge not to employ the riot act was violated.

The riot act was read at one previous campus demonstration Nov. 26. A total of 30 persons have been arrested on charges related to that violent protest in which demonstrators tried to force their way into another campus building being used for interviews.

$16.1 Million Authorized For UMass-Worcester Hospital

The Federal government has authorized $16.1 million toward construction of a 400-bed teaching hospital for the University of Massachusetts Medical School in Worcester.

The university had sought $23 million in Federal funds, and medical school dean Lamar Soutter stressed that 70 percent authorization does not necessarily mean funding.

"This means the project has been accepted for support, with funding to follow when appropriations are made," Dr. Soutter explained. Total cost of the hospital is expected to exceed $30 million.

This is the third and final segment of Federal funding for the $75 million state medical school. Previous Federal grants totaling $18 million were awarded toward construction of classrooms, laboratories, a library and administrative offices.

The first students will be admitted in the Fall of 1970 in temporary quarters. Classrooms and laboratories are expected to be ready for occupancy in the Fall of 1972.

Johnson Anxious to Reach Troop Withdrawal Agreement

WASHINGTON (AP) - Secretary of Defense Clark M. Clifford indicated Tuesday the Johnson administration is anxious to reach a mutual troop withdrawal agreement with North Vietnam before the Nixon administration takes power.

The defense chief said he would like to see substantive peace talks start this week, with measures to lower the level of combat in Vietnam high on the agenda.

"I would still like to see, in the next 40 days, the start of the return of American troops from South Vietnam," Clifford said, "and I think that there is an opportunity to agree with Hanoi upon the mutual withdrawal of troops in that period."

Whether there is such a troop withdrawal agreement, Clifford told the news conference, will have an impact on whether Congress will be asked for a supplemental appropriation to finance the war.

He indicated that, as things now stand, there is a likelihood that such a supplement will be required.

The defense spending total of this fiscal year which ends next June 30 has been estimated by the Johnson administration at about $72 billion.

On another matter of prime importance, Clifford made it clear that the outgoing Johnson administration wants to get nuclear arms control talks started before it goes out of office.

"Obviously, there wouldn't be any decisions within the next 40 days, but I think that if we get started now we can prevent a lag that would be a very natural one if they were delayed until the new administration came in."

You Better Not Cry, Better Not Pout The Hong Kong Flu Is Coming To Town

Two weeks ago, the Hong Kong flu hit the West Coast. The following week the virus hit the East Coast, with a concentration in New Jersey. It is possible that it will soon hit this state, as there is already some spread of it now.

Dr. McBride at the university infirmary said that there is little immunity to the flu. A new vaccine has come in, but because the vaccine takes about four weeks to take affect, it would do little good. By the end of four weeks, the virus would have hit here, so everyone is susceptible to the flu. There is little likelihood that a shot would do any good at this point.

The Hong Kong flu is similar to the Asian flu. The symptoms are fever, muscle aches, headaches, sore throat, a hacking cough, and a generally bad feeling. The symptoms only last about three days. The epidemic in 1959 was much more severe than the present one.

People who will have the most trouble with the virus are the elderly or those who have a lung or heart disease. But young people should ride out the disease easily.

Because influenza is a virus disease, there are no antibiotics. Anyone with the flu should remain in bed in isolation.

There is not much one can do to prevent the flu, and it is highly contagious. However, the virus is not very serious.

Hillel To Hold Its Annual Chanukah Party

Hillel will once again be sponsoring its annual Chanukah party on December 14 from 7 - 11 p.m. This holiday celebrates the rebellion of the Jews from the religious oppression of the Syrians in 186 B.C.E. Judah the Maccabee lead a small army of Jews and reestablished the independence of the Judean State.

After the war, Judah and his followers entered the desecrated Temple in Jerusalem and purified it. Tradition has it that when they went to kindle the eternal light, they discovered that there was only enough consecrated oil to last one day. Through a miracle the flame lasted eight days -- long enough to prepare more oil. Therefore we celebrate Chanukah eight days, to commerate this miracle.

At this celebration, Hillel will serve latkes (potato pancakes) and will present a program of Israeli dancing and folksinging. It will be held in Berkshire Dining Commons #9, U. Mass. All students, faculty and administration are invited.

Marijuana and the Senate

The Student Senate will consider tonight a bill proposed by President Paul J. Silverman on the legalization of marijuana in the Commonwealth. The text of the bill, S86, reads as follows: "Move that the Student Senate recommend to the Massachusetts General Court that all laws prohibiting and punishing marijuana possession be rescinded and that the State begin action on the granting of licenses for the sale of marijuana and quality controls."

This piece of legislation should not be passed by the Senate in its present form.

The current laws pertaining to marijuana in the state are archaic and need to be modified by the presentation of responsible legislation. However, until it is proven by medical authorities that the use of marijuana is in no way dangerous, any suggestion urging the abolishment of all laws pertaining to marijuana is premature.

In his bill, President Silverman calls for the Commonwealth to grant licenses for the same of marijuana, with "quality controls." We agree that if and when medical authorities conclude that the selling of marijuana is not detrimental to the public good, then the best way to control the sale of marijuana would be through the granting of licenses by the state. However, until the medical profession so decides, any recommendation from the University Student Senate would seem presumptuous and irrelevant.

If the current bill is passed by the Senate tonight and forwarded to the state legislature, the probable result would be a quick trip for S86 into the Beacon Hill circular file. Let's be realistic, what are the chances that the Massachusetts legislature will legalize marijuana?

A far more realistic proposal would be for the University Student Senate to recommend to the General Court that a committee from the medical profession be established to study the feasibility of changing the present laws pertaining to the use of marijuana.

We would like to see S86 amended to read: "Move that the Student Senate recommend to the Massachusetts General Court that all laws prohibiting and punishing marijuana possession be modified under guidelines established by a committee of doctors and that this committee study the feasibility of rescinding all laws pertaining to marijuana and possible steps towards legalization of marijuana." A bill of this nature would be received with far more respect on Beacon Hill than the present S86.

INSIDE REPORT:

The Mendel Method

By ROWLAND EVANS and ROBERT NOVAK

WASHINGTON--The forlorn effort to strip South Carolina's Rep. L. Mendel Rivers of his seniority and chairmanship of the House Armed Services Committee is doomed to defeat, but it has uncovered some Byzantine facts about Deep South politics today.

In their anxiety over Rivers's seniority, South Carolina Democrats are now admitting what they piously denied in September: collusive support for George Wallace's third-party Presidential bid in battleground Southern states in an effort (unsuccessful in South Carolina and most such states) to keep electoral votes away from Richard M. Nixon. In this way, they explain away Rivers's Wallaceite tendencies as a conscious part of Humphrey strategy.

Beyond that, Rivers's machinations this autumn enabled him to have the best of several worlds. Simultaneously, he kept on excellent terms with his Wallaceite constituents, turned back the burgeoning Republican party in his state, and kept loyal enough to the national Democratic party to save his precious seniority. Thus, the Mendel method may be a pattern for Southern Democrats seeking survival.

To the untrained Northern eye, it seemed during the campaign that Rivers had become an apostate for Wallace.

On Oct. 17 in a press conference, Rivers allowed that he was "not enthusiastic about the candidacy of Hubert Humphrey" and was more philosophically in tune with Wallace. Five days later in Charleston, Rivers conferred with and heaped praise on Gen. Curtis LeMay, Wallace's running-mate. In private Rivers told constituents to vote for Wallace.

Such apostasy has been dangerous business since 1965 when the House Democratic caucus stripped two Southerners of their seniority because they backed Barry Goldwater. Accordingly, Rep. Richard Bolling of Missouri, a guardian against Southern apostates, now asserts the caucus should act against Rivers.

Rivers's defenders quickly demurred. Robert B. Scarborough, a Democratic state executive committeeman from Charleston, wrote Bolling Nov. 19 insisting Rivers had said he would vote for Humphrey. Scarborough was dead right. Remembering the 1965 purges, Rivers shouted how much he liked Wallace but whispered he personally would vote for Humphrey.

More revealing was another letter of Nov. 19 to Bolling from Thomas W. Chadwick, who managed the South Carolina state campaign for Humphrey. When we reported in September that Southern Democrats were helping Wallace to keep conservatives away from Nixon, Chadwick indignantly denied it. But in his letter to Bolling, he confirmed it with details.

"One of the strategies in the campaign," Chadwick wrote, "was to keep an even balance of strength between the third party (Wallace) and Republican forces in the state in the hope that loyal white and Negro Democrats would give us a scant plurality." More likely, of course, this would keep South Carolina away from Nixon by carrying it for Wallace.

Thus, Rivers's virtual endorsement of Wallace-LeMay "was actually helping us in our tactic to contain the third party supporters in the third party column and not allow the Republican strength to build up." Moreover, Chadwick's letter suggests that Rivers's embrace of Gen. LeMay, Oct. 22, was part of Democratic strategy: "At that particular point in the campaign we had observed a distinct defection of voters away from Wallace and toward Nixon."

Moreover, South Carolina Republicans who would benefit from having Rivers purged on Capitol Hill admit Chadwick is telling the truth. What Chadwick did not reveal, however, is the end result of Rivers's machinations. Thanks to Sen. Strom Thurmond, Nixon carried South Carolina. But thanks mainly to Rivers, the election for offices below the Presidential level was a Republican disaster.

In personal campaigning, Rivers recommended votes for Wallace at the top but straight Democratic the rest of the way. So many voters agreed that Republians lost 16 of their 25 seats in the legislature as well as key county seat offices. Consequently, Mendel Rivers is a hero to South Carolina courthouse Democrats.

A NEW FLAG

To the editor:

I would like to take a few moments to deflate somewhat the "controversy" concerning the beloved peace flag that all-too-briefly flew in her majestic beauty from the flag pole in front of the Whitmore Administration Building. This flag constituted the patient, loving care of Heads for the Hell of It (HEFTHOI), a secret, non-profit, non-existent organization steadfastly devoted to doing its members' own thing. The exact physiology of the flag consisted of an opened-up pillow case generously magic-markered with a striking blue-brown peace symbol on a field of white, out of which radiated tranquil overtones of brotherhood and cotton fibers. The banner was affixed to the uppermost portion of the flagpole at four bells, Old Chapel Time, that Friday morning by one particular fellow who was not, despite allegations spouted to the contrary by a professional in this line of business, "drunk or crazy." He is alive and well upstairs, believe me! All day Friday and all day Saturday and through both nights did this dauntless, little patterned cloth flap and wave and beat the air, whip lashed by cruel, uncaring winds and bitten by the fierce cold long after the cows had come home. That Sunday morning, though, this helpless, innocent flag (which had always loved its mother dearly) could see the inevitable: numerous pitiless public servants swarming and craving for its downfall and its doom. Taking the only alternative, as frozen hands tugged at its cords, its tendons, and shedding a tear, the pretty banner self-destructed, giving its soul and its life into the hands of God. Farewell, pretty banner, nevermore shall we see your likes on this campus...nevermore, nevermore.

Nevertheless, many thanks must be extended to your friends and mine, the campus police, for those frightening moments as they drove by our intrepid hero - who was barely forty feet up the pole on the ascent at the time - and his trusty "accomplice", who was stretched out on the ground behind the other flagpole in a subtle attempt to escape detection. Fond memories go out to the numerous beeries screaming and stumbling along in the night, and to those three night owls who thought a flagpole was a nice place to stop and have a chat.

Peace, love, fortitude,
the Four Apostles

CANDIDATE

The time has come for me to take a stand. For two years, I have been a part time senator by attending senate meetings and joining the Public Relations Sub-committee of the Senate. It has finally occurred to me that I am not doing anything for anyone this way, least of all my dormitories. Since I know what the senate accomplishes every week, it is not quite fair for me not to inform other people as well. I feel that I do have the time to devote to the senate. With the knowledge and understanding of the senate that I have comes a great sense of belonging. On several occasions, I have been asked why I am not voting at the meetings. It is with these thoughts that I submit my nomination papers for the office of senator from the upperclassmen constituency of the co-ed government of Pierpont-Moore dormitories.

UNBIASED

Dear Editor:

Concerning the recent article by Senior Reporter Bill Dickinson, regarding S.E.N.D.O.F.F. '68, I would like to make a few "unbiased" comments!

I think the concerts were good, even though they didn't run with the general media of society.

I always understood that "young" newspapermen were supposedly schooled for impartiality in reporting the news. Certainly then, if Mr. Dickinson is to be a "young" reporter of tomorrow it is evident that miracles will have to be accomplished as far as journalistic education goes.

Respectfully,
Ella Howard

POOR TASTE

To the editor:

Raising the question of the relevancy of graduation requirements is good, but allowing a member of your staff to vent his personal feelings (which I and others consider completely unfounded) about a course and its instructor through your editorial page is in poor taste.

It's about time that you stopped getting the short end of the travel stick! Why should you get short-changed on a trip just because you're a 'kid'? Or be subject to the paternal arrogance of the agent who couldn't care less where you go, and gives you that damn thanks-a-lot-kid,-hope-you-can-find-the-airport smile when he hands you your tickets. And then there's the constant fear of being stuck in some 'trash can' two days journey from the action when you book a low cost 'student tour'. We don't think it has to be this way. So it is with great pride and pleasure that we announce the end of the bum deal, and the beginning of . . . STUDENTOURS, the student-run, student oriented arm of the Rogal/Colpitts Travel Corporation, one of the east's largest and finest. With us the emphasis is on good times, without spending a fortune. Like our FREEPORT FLING, 8 days of fun in (or out of) the sun during spring break. For only $175 plus 3% for tax and services you get round trip jet flight with champagne meals, and efficiency apartment at the fabulous FREEPORT INN, the center of all the action in the Bahamas, and an outstanding "Happy Hour" every night with bands and two hours of free open bar! I just couldn't identify with that car.

That's what you said about the Sidewinder Eight.
But a Python is something else. Four-on-the-floor, six-barrel carb, console tach . . . and what a steal!

4. Don't you think you ought to hold onto a car more than a month, Chet?
When you see a great buy coming your way, you have to grab it.

5. That's what I did yesterday—signed up for Living Insurance from Equitable. At my age the cost is low, and I get solid protection now that will continue to cover my family later when I get married. Plus a nice nest egg when I retire.

MLK Stages Teach-in On Curriculum Reform

The Martin Luther King, Jr. Social Action Council has announced that it is staging a teach-in on curriculum reform in Mahar Auditorium Thursday, December 12, at 8 p.m.

According to Ted Harrigan, chairman of the King Council's publicity committee, "November's Night of Inquiry turned on a number of people, but unfortunately left many of them dangling, their energies unspent. The purpose of this teach-in is to propose definite concrete goals in one facet of student involvement, academic change, and to give interested and willing individuals the means and encouragement necessary to work in small, dynamic task forces towards a specific end."

The program will consist of one or two panels moderated by Gil Salk, executive secretary of the King Council. Among other participants will be Dr. Ryan Drum of the Botany Department; Dr. C. M. Hunsberger, Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences; Dick Story, Senate Academic Affairs Committee Chairman; and Greg Speeter, a second-year VISTA volunteer in Springfield.

Harrigan stressed that the audience would figure even more prominently in this program than in Night of Inquiry. "It is the backbone of curriculum reform," he stated, "that the previously unchannelled ideas of individual students be allowed to expand naturally in courses of action which are planned by and meaningful to them."

There is a need for an open forum where the student body can learn in detail what is being done by other groups as well as what yet needs attention. The teach-in Thursday night is the King Council's attempt to bridge the gap.

All students employed by the University in any capacity (i.e., Work-Study, Counselors, etc.) must have a W-4 form and an M-4 form on file with the Placement and Financial Aid Services office by December 14, 1968. These forms may be obtained at the Placement and Financial Aid Services Office Room 239 Whitmore Administration Building.

"Stere-O-Matic"® Record Changers
Models 1576 and 1552
M-M's finest, most sensitive changers. Automatically handle stereo and monaural recordings of all speeds and sizes, even intermixed if they're the same speed. "Shadoweight"® tone arm is dynamically balanced, non-resonant, and carefully calibrated for pressure. It is designed to prevent distortion by changing stylus angle, and mounted to track with so little friction that groove wear ceases to be a problem. Flip-under ceramic cartridge retracts under excess pressure so that neither needle nor records can be seriously damaged when the head is accidentally dropped or "skated" across a recording. Automatic shut-off returns tone arm to rest post after stack of records or a single play. Turntables are covered in soft, lint-free mats. Patented spindle stops center hole wear. Entire unit is spring mounted.

Chairman of Hampshire College Founders' Fund Announces Million Dollar Grant, Puts Them Well Over Halfway Mark

Harry W. Knight, Chairman of the Hampshire College Founders' Fund announced yesterday a $1,000,000 grant from The Charles E. Merrill Trust, established under the will of Charles E. Merrill, founder of Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner and Smith, Incorporated. Mr. Knight, President and Chairman of Knight & Gladieux, said, "This generous grant has put Hampshire well over the halfway mark toward its $24,500,000 goal. We have raised more than $15,000,000 during the first two years of the Founders' Fund. The Merrill grant is an encouraging beginning for the completion of our founding effort."

The announcement was made at the first meeting of the Hampshire College National Advisory Council, at a luncheon in The Sky Club in New York. The National Advisory Council is a group of men and women, prominent in American life, who are advocates of the ideas Hampshire College proposes for reforming undergraduate education.

Speaking at the luncheon, Franklin Patterson, President of the College, said, "This fall has been a watershed in Hampshire's development. We have broken ground for our first buildings-- the Library, Academic Building, and Residential Building. And the Dean of the College with his Deans of the Schools of Natural Science, Social Science, and Humanities and Arts have begun the exhilarating but difficult task of creating Hampshire's curriculum. We could not have gone forward with these extensive activities without the promise of support from The Merrill Trust."

Hampshire College has been the recipient of substantial individual, foundation, and federal support since the chartering of the College in December, 1965, beginning with a $6,000,000 gift from Harold F. Johnson and a $3,000,000 challenge grant from The Ford Foundation. Development of Hampshire's science curriculum is supported by a $900,000 grant from the Sloan Foundation, and by gifts from an individual donor and the Research Corporation. The Carnegie Corporation gave $277,000 to designing a new approach to Admissions and student life. Planning and construction funds for the Library totalling $1,518,500 have come from the Avalon, Fleischmann, and Old Dominion Foundations, Educational Facilities Laboratories, the United States Office of Education, and the Department of Health, Education and Welfare. Other federal support in grants or loans totals $2,500,000 to date.

Hampshire College will open in 1970 with its first group of 250 students. The plan for Hampshire was originally proposed by Amherst, Mount Holyoke, and Smith Colleges, and the University of Massachusetts. Hampshire was founded to encourage cooperative activity among these institutions and to innovate with new solutions to the problems of undergraduate liberal arts education.

FroshSmash URI, 82-53

By PETER PASCARELLI
Assistant Sports Editor

With seven minutes gone in the first half, the UMass freshman basketball team led 16-4, and the Little Redmen were on their way to another easy win, as the frosh went on to crush the Rhode Island freshman, 82-53, last night at the Cage. They remain undefeated with a 3-0 record.

Leading the frosh out of the starting gate, were Mike Pagliara and Rich Vogeley. Pagliara, repeatedly hit medium range jumpers as the Ram defenders fell back to try and cope with the UMass big men. Vogeley, meanwhile, showed a fine outside touch while also getting his share of points from inside.

Rhode Island tried to get back into the game, but outside of the fine shooting of guard Mike Beale and the all-around excellence of Phil Hickson, the Rams were overmatched.

UMass meanwhile, getting balanced scoring from its five, steadily uppped its lead during the half. A Julius Erving hoop, but the Little Redmen ahead by 20, 36-16, at 2:23 of the half. Then substitute forward Chris Coffin, scored six points in the last minute and half, and with only one reply from the Rams, a tip in by 6'10 Marv Becker. The frosh led at the half, 44-20.

Another highlight of the half was a superb defensive performance by UMass center Tom Austin. The 6'8 thin man blocked at least a half dozen Ram shots, to throttle any inside Rhody attempts.

The second half was a duplicate of the first as UMass simply was too overpoweringly efficient for the Rams. Vogeley, Pagliara and Erving, who hit the boards with a vengeance in the second half, led the Little Redmen to an ever increasing margin.

The only Rhode Island semblance of attack was Hickson, who was hitting on short jumpers, while also displaying fine inside moves.

Hoops by Don Moore and Joe Landolfi gave the Little Redmen their high water mark lead, as the frosh led by 30 with minutes left, to take home an 82-53 triumph.

Pagliara and Hickson each had 21 points to lead all scorers. Vogeley had 16 for UMass, as did Beale for Rhody, while Erving had 15 points with a game high 12 rebounds for the Little Redmen. Austin blocked eight shots.

UMass next meets a tough Chamberlayne Junior College team Saturday night in the Cage at 5:30 p.m.

Fourth Straight Win, Chapman, Gayeska Star

BY MIKE CURRAN
Sports Editor

Some sparkling outside shooting by reserve forward Dennis Chapman and the clutch rebounding of center Pete Gayeska gave UMass a hard fought 65-60 victory over the Rhode Island Rams before 3,300 jubilant fans at the Cage last night.

The Redmen, minus floor general Joey DiSarcina due to a death in the senior co-captain's family, turned to Ray Ellerbrook's playmaking and the agressive forecourt play of Chapman and Gayeska. Down 32-29 at halftime, they rallied for the win, a superb team effort.

From the opening tap, it became apparent that UMass was in for their toughest battle to date. Rhody, though 0-3 entering the game, matched up well in muscle and shooting ability to the Redmen. A corner jumper by 6'4 guard Joe Zaranka drew first blood.

Gayeska countered with his patented hook, then hoops by Ken Mathias and John Schockro gave the home team an early 6-2 margin. URI, behind the shooting of Mike Schanne and Zaranka, hung on and notched the score at 11-11 with ten minutes left in the period.

Both teams then battled on even terms for the next six minutes which saw some rugged action under the boards. Ram leapers Claude English, Bud Havard, and Fultz were giving UMass' frontline all they could handle underneath.

With the score tied 21-all, Rhody suddenly broke into the lead on an outside shot by Schanne and two free throws by Fultz. They held on to the driver's seat for the remainder of the half despite three outside pops by Chapman and foul shots by Dick Samuelson and Mathias.

The Rams returned from the locker room with a 33-29 edge, but saw this margin quickly dissipate under Chapman's hot hands and a driving layup by Billy Greeley.

Each squad went up and down on the seesaw as hooks by Gayeska were matched by Fulty's outside shooting. Rhody finally forged ahead with a 44-41 lead with 14:44 to go as Schanne threw in a bomb.

UMass suddenly caught fire as the crowd chanted the Redmen on. Gayeska converted two free throw attempts, Chapman put in an offensive rebound and canned two jumpers, and Ellerbrook fed Gayeska for a layup.

The Redmen were on top 51-44 as the clock showed 10:18 left, but the stubborn victory starved Rams hung tough. Spirited board play by English and Havard kept the visitors in the game.

Gayeska was more than holding his own underneath, however. He teamed up with Chapman on numerous crucial rebounds.

As Rhody sliced away at the Redman margin on shots by Ed Molloy and Zaranka, Ellerbrook fired in two 15-footers to keep UMass on top 57-53.

Big Ron Louder's foul shot narrowed the gap to three points but free throws by Gayeska and another line drive jumper by Chapman put the Redmen up, 61-54, with 2:40 remaining.

Rhode Island, plagued by turnovers, did not have enough to rally. The UMass zone defense, which the visitors could never penetrate, forced the Rams into desperate outside shots.

Free throws by Ellerbrook and Greeley and a layup by Gayeska closed out the scoring for the Redmen. A rebound shot by Fultz made the final tally UMass, 65,

Rhode Island, 60.

Double Dribbles - Gayeska finished with 19 points, followed by the red-hot Chapman, 18, and Ellerbrook, 11...The rams were paced by Bay Stater John Fultz, 13, and Mike Schanne, 11...The battle of the boards ended as close as it looked - with UMass on top 40-39... Coach Jack Leaman was very pleased indeed with the win, especially considering the impact of DiSarcina's absence...Both quintets used zones which forced marksmanship from downtown which Chapman best provided...

Salem State Upsets Frosh Pucksters, 3-2

By STEVE SHAMBAN Sports Day Editor

Dave 'Thunder Thighs' Murphy's goal off a rebound at 5:44 of sudden death overtime gave Salem State a 3-2 upset victory over the UMass frosh in a hockey game played last night at Orr rink. This was a disappointing loss for the Little Redmen and dropped their record to 2-2.

Territorially speaking, it was a fairly close game with neither team enjoying a great edge. Salem won the shots on goal contest 39-38. Tom Livingston and John Foley played fine games for the Vikings at the blue line, both at clearing the puck and blocking shots.

Jack Edwards scored his fifth goal in two games, on the power play at 10:58 of the first to give UMass a 1-0 lead. The goal came on a wicked slap shot into the right corner after a pass from Dan Reidy.

This was all the scoring in the period although in the last few minutes, the Little Redmen seemed to be skating a little better. Their passes were connecting and they pressured Salem by constantly throwing the puck into the offensive zone.

As it turned out, the second period was crucial as the Vikings out-scored UMass 2-1. At 10:12, Mike Waldron scored on a zip-zip goal taking quick passes from Bruce Winter and Glen Hale before beating goalie Tom Voltero from right in front.

2-0 seemed a good lead in this defensive battle but, a combination of aggressive play by Salem and some sloppiness on the part of UMass saw the game become tied very quickly. At 13:10 on the power play, Foley cranked up his curved stick and scored from 20 feet out as his hard slap shot found an opening in the UMass net. 36 seconds later, villain Murphy took a pass from Bill McBrine, skated in front of the goal and forced the puck in for his first goal of the evening.

The third period was scoreless as neither team could capitalize on numerous chances. Both squads hit hard, passed well, skated briskly and forced play for certain stretches of time.

UMass had two great opportunities but was foiled each time. Winter found himself all alone with the puck about 10 feet from the goal but Voltero made a nice save on his high-rising shot. A few minutes later, Bob Bartholomew unleashed a low slap shot at an open corner but it was deflected by the pipe.

For Salem, Livingston and Foley had about six hard shots from the points in a space of two minutes, but couldn't put it in.

In the climactic overtime, UMass was forcing play but the Vikings always managed to come up with the save. Then came Murphy's unassisted goal. It was a real heart breaker.

The Little Redmen travel to The Heights Saturday for their biggest test of the young season. They'll face the Boston College Eaglets at McHugh Forum. Face-off is scheduled for 6:15 p.m.

Frazier Outpoints Bonavena

PHILADELPHIA (AP) - Unbeaten Joe Frazier retained his share of the world heavyweight title by hammering and chopping his way to a lopsided decision over awkward but bull strong Oscar Bonavena of Argentina in a foul-packed 15-rounder at the Spectrum Tuesday night.

The 3-1 favored Philadelphian hit the 26-year-old South American with everything he had throughout the scrap, but couldn't drop the strong-jawed, bloodied challenger who went the limit with Frazier for the second time.

Frazier, 203 pounds to Bonavena's 207, opened cuts over both of Bonavena's eyes, on the bridge of his nose and raised lumps on Oscar's face with his relentless pounding.

The fight was the second of a televised doubleheader in some cities. In the first Sonny Liston knocked out Ames Lincoln in the second round at Baltimore.

The officials all had Frazier the winner by the following points scores: Judge Nate Lopinson 74-64, Judge Dave Beloff 72-64, and referee Joe Sweeney, 70-67. The Associated Press had Frazier the winner 72-73 on the five-point must score system. In rounds the AP had Frazier ahead 11-4.

Bonavena fighting most of the way with his back to the ropes and his hands held high in a peek-a-boo defense, absorbed a fierce pounding to the head and the body as he apparently waited to get home one big bomb. He never came close.

General Court Enjoins Dwight Hsez From Violating Visitation Policy

By JOHN HICKEY
News Editor

The General Court of Justice issued a decision enjoining Dwight House from violating the Room Visitation Policy agreed upon by the Board of Trustees and the Student Senate until June of 1969, when the experimental room visitation program expires.

The action was taken at the Court's Tuesday night session in response to a petition for an injunction against Dwight House.

The Court recognized in its decision that basic corridor autonomy is permissable and legal by virtue of the fact that such decentralization is not expressly prohibited by the rules set forth in the UMass Student Handbook. The Court pointed out however, that there also exist rules in every society and that UMass is in and of itself a society governed by certain rules, which must be adhered to "in order that the efficacy of the society be insured," The injunction decision was reached on the basis of this position.

The decision may be appealed within five days to the University Discipline Board. If no appeal is made, failure to comply with the decision will be viewed as contempt.

The justices voted six to two in favor of granting the injunction.

Dissenting Opinion Hatwell v. Dwight House

In the recent hearing of "Hartwell vs. Dwight House," an important issue of student responsibility was brought before the General Court. As dissenting Justices from the majority opinion, we feel it our duty to present the substance of our dissent and the reasons for it.

We believe the primary responsibility of General Court is to the students of the University community. While this does not negate our responsibility to the Administration and the Board of Trustees, it expresses a belief that individual growth and development is the ultimate goal of a University education. This growth and development encompasses ALL aspects of an individual's life--be they academic, intellectual or moral.

It is our opinion that a true community, based on individual responsibility, is the best means to promote this growth and development. The stated goal of our University is to achieve this type of community; we agree in principle AND in practice.

Dwight House, in introducing the concept of corridor autonomy and of self-determination of visitation policy, took a significant step towards establishing a true community. This step was taken in the belief that the individuals of each corridor should be the final authority in determining the policies that would affect them.

This philosophy is basic to the fulfillment of the goal--a University Community. As individual students and members of the General Court, we feel that the concepts of community and individual responsibility should be the overriding factor in our deliberations. Furthermore, it is our right and duty to express along with our fellow students our disagreement with University rules and regulations when they prohibit the establishment of a true community--even if this action can be construed as civil disobedience.

Therefore, we do not feel an injunction can be issued.

Respectfully submitted,
Edward C. Tirrell

Nixon Announces Cabinet Posts

WASHINGTON (AP) - President-elect Nixon Wednesday night named former Atty. Gen. William P. Rogers his secretary of state and Rep. Melvin R. Laird of Wisconsin secretary of defense to fill the premier posts in a Republican Cabinet featuring old friends and familiar faces.

He chose David Kennedy, chairman of the Continental Illinois Bank of Chicago, to be secretary of the treasury.

It was a Cabinet of no surprises, with no Democrat, no Negro, no woman among its 12 members.

By the time Nixon announced his selections in a nationally broadcast and televised appearance from Washington's Shoreham Hotel, the lineup was an open secret. Headvised congressional leaders in advance, and his list swiftly became public knowledge.

His selections for the other jobs:

Attorney general: John N. Mitchell of New York, his campaign manager and former law partner.

Secretary of health, education and welfare: Lt. Gov. Robert H. Finch of California, who managed Nixon's first, losing campaign for the White House eight years ago.

Secretary of housing and urban development: Gov. George Romney of Michigan, the man Nixon pushed out of the 1968 presidential race with a drubbing in the public opinion polls prior to the New Hampshire primary.

Secretary of labor: George P. Schultz, dean of the graduate school of business at the University of Chicago.

Secretary of transportation: Gov. John A. Volpe of Massachusetts.

Secretary of the interior: Gov. Walter J. Hickel of Alaska.

Secretary of commerce: Maurice H. Stans, budget director to former President Dwight D. Eisenhower, and Nixon's campaign finance chairman.

Secretary of agriculture: Clifford M. Hardin, chancellor of the University of Nebraska.

Postmaster general: Winton M. Blount of Montgomery, Ala., president of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce.

Nixon, who had indicated during his campaign that there would be Democrats in his Cabinet, apparently sought to effect the lack by disclosing that he will soon name a Democrat to be U.S. ambassador to the United Nations.

Sargent Shriver, now U.S. ambassador to Paris, is reported to have been offered that assignment.

Nixon also announced plans to reappoint Commissioner Walter E. Washington to another term as mayor of the District of Columbia. Washington is a Negro whose term expires next Feb. 1.

Prior to the mass Cabinet announcement-without precedent in modern times-Nixon had appointed a Chicago banker to be his budget director.

That selection, announced in New York City, is Robert P. Mays, 52, vice president of the Continental Illinois National Bank and Trust Co. of Chicago, a veteran of 18 years in the Treasury Department.

Nixon and his staff scheduled a long and active day Thursday for the Cabinet members-designate. It begins with a private breakfast for appointees and their families, with the president-elect to address them.

Then there are to be briefings by Nixon's team of White House assistants and advisers. Nixon himself is to participate in some of these sessions. He has a late afternoon appointment at the White House, to see President Johnson for the second time since the election.

Then the Nixon selections plan to go to the White House for a reception with members of the Johnson Cabinet.

Of Maye, his new budget director Nixon said "I consider him a member of the Cabinet team and not in a subordinate position."

Afro-American Meeting Held For Informal Race Dialogue

Richard Lane - Senior Reporter

Afro-American Chairman Robert Henderson last night stated that the 20 demands presented to the administration by that group in November are "very important issues. Everybody should be ready to act upon them."

Henderson appeared along with Stanley Kinard also of Afro-Am., at Van Meter South to conduct an informal discussion and question-answer period of race relations at UMass. About 20 students were in attendance.

"The first and most important issue, and one that is a matter of life and death is the guns of the policeman," Henderson declared. He added that Afro-Am is "standing firm on this in its efforts to disarm the police."

Henderson pointed out that the need for the demand is that there has only been one incident since 1963 when a University police officer actually found just occassion to use his sidearm. Therefore, weapons are not needed by the police he added.

Stanley Kinard said that Afro-Am did not originally plan to issue the particular demands that it did, when it did, but that the alleged assault incident sparked the action, Kinard did add, however, that Afro-Am did eventually plan to bring some protest, before the administration and that the "revolution" was bound to happen.

"The demands were not made specifically for black students," Kinard continued, but for the benefit of the whole campus community, such as the proposed sensitivity programs which would attempt to end racial hostility by exposing students to it.

"There's a lot of racism on this campus on both sides," said Kinard. He termed the Afro-Am protest the "first stable example of student power on this campus." Henderson told the all white audience that the "White community has great potential (for similar protest and reform action) if only they realize it."

Student Senate Postpones Marijuana Question Debate

Senate President Paul J. Silverman's bill to recommend to the state legislature that all laws concerning marijuana be abolished in the state, was tabled last night until next week's senate meeting, after some debate on proposed amendments.

Vice-President Hartwell's motion to refer the entire matter for study to the University Health Council was defeated. During the debate on the Marijuana bill, it was brought up that Massachusetts Senate President Maurice Donahue will attend next week's Student Senate meeting. In the hope that Donahue will remain for the debate on the bill, a motion to adjourn was made and passed on a roll call vote, thus allowing the marijuana bill to be the first order of business at the next meeting.

In other action a bill sponsored by Treasurer Alan Gauther designating the "Daily Collegian" to return several thousand dollars from its specials fund was defeated. According to "Daily Colle-

Chairman Henderson also stated that the University should accomodate the students rather than its present set-up where the students are accomodating the University.

Speaking about Afro-Am itself, member Kinard told the audience that the organization is a "group of black students working for black freedom." White members are not allowed because "Its something we have to do ourselves" he emphasized.

Afro-Am is concerned with change more than "show" said Kinard, He believes that violence is not necessary to seek this change.

There is a dual system of education in this country according to Kinard, one inferior (for the blacks) and one superior (whites). The present CCENS for disadvantaged Negroes was established to help solve this problem, and disadvantaged whites will also take part in it next year he stated.

Profiles of New Cabinet Members

Many Old Nixon Supporters Appointed

Rogers, 55, a Washington and New York lawyer, has been a close friend of the president - elect since they served together in the Navy during World War II.

In hours of personal or public crisis, Nixon has turned since to his friend for counsel. Rogers was at his side 16 years ago during the political uproar over the Nixon fund, the contributions which jeopardized his place on the Eisenhower ticket in 1952.

When Eisenhower fell victim to a heart attack, it was Rogers whom the then-vice president summoned to his side.

Rogers became attorney general in 1957 and served in that post through the remainder of the Eisenhower administration. He has had only brief experience in foreign affairs, as a member of the U. S. delegation to the 1965 United Nations General Assembly.

Laird, 46, is rated the most shrewd and among the most influential of House Republicans. He is an expert on defense spending, a 10-year member of the House defease appropriations subcommittee.

Laird was a frequent Nixon companion during the presidential campaign, an untitled advisor on matters of defense. His voting record over 16 years in Congress shows Laird a man hawkish on foreign affairs, conservative on matters outside the defense arena.

Mitchell, 55, from Rye, N.Y., is an expert in state and municipal bonds. He joined the Nixon law firm some two years ago as a senior partner. Nixon and Mitchell quickly became close friends and, early this year, unnounced, the pipe-smoking Wall Street lawyer became director of Nixon's drive for the GOP presidential nomination.

Kennedy, 63, spent 16 years with the Federal Reserve System in Washington, served in the Treasury Department for a year during the Eisenhower administration.

He joined Continental Bank in 1946, rose swiftly to the top echelon of the nation's eighth largest-commercial banking institution.

Finch is 43, has known Nixon since 1947, served him as an administrative assistant during the vice presidential years. He was top man in the 1960 Nixon presidential campaign, an unofficial but frequent companion and advisor during the 1968 race.

Sources in the Nixon organization have disclosed that Finch was the president - elect's personal preference as a vice presidential nominee.

The assignment went to Vice President - elect Spiro T. Agnew, Finch and Nixon both were said to have decided it would have been impossible for them to team up on the ticket, because of their long association and their common California backgrounds.

Stans, too, has long been a Nixon associate. He is 60, and a New York investment banker. He was Nixon's top fund raiser during the 1968 campaign, both before and after the Republican convention, presiding over an effort which raised more than $20 million.

Romney, at 61, has been governor of Michigan for six years. His smashing re-election in 1966 propelled him to the front rank of GOP presidential contenders, but the luster faded quickly and he withdrew in the face of a gigantic Nixon lead in public opinion polls prior to New Hampshire's leadoff presidential primary.

He campaigned vigorously for Nixon after the president-elect was nominated.

Hickel, 49, went to Alaska 28 years ago, virtually broke. He became a millionaire in real estate and construction, and the state's first Republican governor two years ago.

Volpe is a construction man, too, and has three times been elected governor of Massachusetts. Federal highway commissioner during the Eisenhower years, Volpe had courted the vice presidential nomination, and was said to have been in the running until Nixon settled on Agnew.

Schultz, 48, dean of the graduate school of business at the University of Chicago, is an economist and has been teaching for 22 years.

Blout is 47, comes from Montgomery, Ala., and is president and board chairman of his own contracting firm there.

Hardin has been chancellor of the University of Nebraska since 1954. He is 53, once was a professor of agricultural economics.

Klein said Nixon talked personally with each member of the Cabinet before selecting him.

gian" managing editor Don Epstein, who argued against the bill, the remaining funds in the category are necessary for the publication of several specials in the coming semester.

Senator Brenner, with an amendment by Senator Hartwell, moved to direct the services committee to review the present student hourly pay rates and report back to the Senate with a "recommendation on what action the committee deems necessary." Senator Olken and Taylor charged the Ways and Committees with a thorough investigation of The University's band and chorale society, i.e. if R.S.O. status is withdrawn from these groups, what will happen to equipment bought by the Senate and funds allocated by that body.

A bill was passed unanimously which charged the Activities Committee with investigating the possibility of setting up a service competition on campus. This competition would be open to all groups on a point system for the type and quality of the socially oriented service. This bill, introduced by Senator Davenport and Hayes would encourage participation by students in worthwhile social activities such as big brother programs and would draw attention to those active in such fields.

The Student Senate also passed a bill calling for the use by senators of a mimeograph machine without charge. Bruce Balboni, chairman of the public relations committee to which the bill was committed previously for investigation, answered questions regarding the feasibility, cost, and function of such an arrangement and stated that this if passed, would greatly improve needed communications between senators and their constituents. According to the bill as passed after several amendments, each senator will be allowed to print one newsletter per month per student in his constituency, with certain modifications for sororities, fraternities, and commuters. Because of this bill senators will be able to communicate with their constituencies in a meaningful and efficient manner.

A bill presented by Senator Cochrane was defeated which means now that only full committee members, appointed by the Senate, in Senate subcommittees can vote in that subcommittee or that members who are not full committee members may vote only by permission of the Senate. Senator Klimartin stated that if non-committee members were allowed to vote, the Student Senate and its committee structure would be significantly weakened. Hopefully by only allowing full committee members to vote, the Senate will have faith in committee decisions and will be more willing to accept their recommendations.

Graduate Senate To Hold Meeting Monday Night

Arthur Gentile, acting dean of the Graduate School, will answer questions from the floor at the next meeting of the Graduate Student Senate scheduled for Monday night at 8:30 p.m. in the Nantucket Room of the Student Union.

An extensive report from the parking committee and a report on the new School of Education course entitled "The Fire Next Time" from the committee on academic affairs and the procedural code are also expected at the meeting according to Thomas Minogue, president of the GSS. Further discussion of administration efforts to arrange for a study of the university security set up is also expected by Minogue.

Nonmembers as well as members of the Graduate Student Senate will be recognized during the period for questioning Dean Gentile, Minogue announced. The meeting is open to the public.

Further information on the Graduate Student Senate is available during office hours at its office in room 216 of the Student Union. The office will be open and staffed between 12 noon and 5 p.m. for the rest of the semester.

School of Education To Present Marathon II To Demonstrate New Happenings in Education

An educational supermarket titled Marathon II will be presented by the University of Massachusetts School of Education Tuesday and Wednesday, Dec. 17 and 18.

Offered will be over 150 events-discussions, demonstrations, performances, films, seminars, panels, taped TV programs, talks, and others. All are open to the public. The events will be held at various points in the School of Education each of the two days from 12 noon to 10 p.m.

"The basic idea is to communicate to the University community the Massachusetts educational community and others in the state some of the new and imaginative things that are going on now in education," said marathon chairman Robert Woodbury.

The UMass School of Education originated the marathon format with a one-day session this past Oct. 3. The first marathon was designed as an in-school informational program but before it ended had drawn people from all over the Five-College area and as far away as Hartford, Conn.

Marathon II is a sampling of some of the directions the UMass School of education is exploring this year under its new dean, Dwight W. Allen. The school is in the midst of a year of planning and change designed to relate what happens in the school more closely to the challenge of American life today.

There will be talks, demonstrations and panels on such new educational techniques as micro - teaching, flexible scheduling, experimental education and new directions in school organization.

An extensive section on urban education will feature taped material made on the scene by UMass field teams during the New York City teachers strike.

Many presentations will be given by students who have designed their own educational projects, including Education 2000, a demonstration by a student group that is studying the training of teachers in all fields solely through theatre.

A section on what the community can offer to education will include talks by professional people and others from the community; another will offer via closed-circuit TV the opinions of students and parents on the generation gap. Video taped "man on the street" comments on education by Amherst people will be shown.

Electronic music and live performances will be presented as part of the section on aesthetics in education. Special events will include an international "taste-in" and dinner, experimental and other films, a coffee house and folk singers and other music.

Infirmary to Get New Addition

by Virginia Murdock

By the Fall of 1971, the UMass infirmary will have a much needed addition, according to Dr. Robert Gage, director of health services.

The 80-bed infirmary has sufficient in-patient facilities but inadequate out-patient facilities and services. Therefore, the new addition will be primarily for out-patients, he said.

It will contain out-patient labs and facilities for mental and dental services. Because of lack of space, mental health services are presently in Brooks House and dental services are not offered.

Allocated for plans if $100,000. Construction should begin in the Spring of 1970 and be completed by the Fall of 1971, said Dr. Gage.

The addition makes it clear that centralized hospital facilities will be continued at UMass. An infirmary in the Southwest complex is not likely, Dr. Gage said. It would be very expensive and the facilities would not be adequate, he explained. In addition, this would lead to bad judgments, inferior care, waste of equipment and a problem of staffing such a center, he believes.

However, there is a possibility that the University may provide transportation for students from the different dormitory areas to the infirmary on a daily schedule. Until then, all students must find their own ways to the infirmary.

The infirmary now has a total staff of 110, including secretaries. There are 10 full-time physicians, a psychiatrist, orthopedist, physical therapist, x-ray specialist, social worker, four psychologists and 37 nurses.

Miami - Bound Flight Hijacked, 19th Forced to Cuba This Year

MIAMI, FLA. (AP) - A Trans World Jetliner inaugurating nonstop service from Nashville to Miami was diverted at gunpoint Wednesday to a nonscheduled stop in Cuba with 39 persons aboard.

When the plane touched down at Havana's Jose Marti Airport, Cuban security police escorted a young Negro couple, apparently the hijackers, off the plane.

Responding to speculation that the hijackers might be the fugitive Black Panther leader Eldridge Cleaver and his wife, Kathlene, an FBI spokesman in Miami said the possibility would be investigated.

The 33-old-Cleaver, sought as a parole violator, has sworn he will never return to prison. The FBI said Tuesday his wife withdrew $33,000 from Cleaver's San Francisco bank account and flew last Sunday to New York. Her later whereabouts were unreported.

"A guy is holding a gun at my back," Capt. Dennis Maloney radioed shortly after the Boeing 727, with 32 passengers and seven crewmen aboard, took off from Nashville following an airport celebration.

"He is forcing us to go to Havana. We are proceeding there."

The plane, 19th U.S. commercial airliner forced into Cuba during this year's unprecedented wave of skyjackings, landed at Jose Marti airport at 12:27 p.m. EST.

If Cuban authorities followed their usual procedure, the crew would be returned with the plane Wednesday and the passengers bussed 80 miles to the Varadero airport to be picked up by a special plane from Miami Thursday.

Aboard the plane when it took off from Nashville at 9:04 a.m. were Mason Rudolph, veteran of the professional golf tour from Clarksville, Tenn., and Tex Ritter, country and Western singing star of Grand Ole Opry fame.

San Francisco State after the Bloodbath

Mixed Emotional Reactions Result from Hayakawa Action

SAN FRANCISCO (CPS)--The hard-line policy of San Francisco State College's new Acting President, Samuel I. Hayakawa, has turned the campus into a bloody battlefield.

On Nov. 30, three days after he was appointed Acting President to replace Robert R. Smith, who resigned, Hayakawa announced that the campus would be opened and police would be called in as necessary to keep it open.

What followed was a week-long battle between students and police. Police were on the campus from the very beginning of the week, patrolling classroom buildings or waiting just off-campus. At the height of the confrontation there were 600 police from half a dozen law enforcement agencies on the campus.

They herded striking students around and often lost control, attacking students with their clubs, beating students who had been knocked down, and making random arrests from the 3-5,000 students who massed on the campus every afternoon throughout the week. They made 76 arrests during the first four days the campus was open.

The bloody confrontation brought leaders of San Francisco's black community onto the campus in force on Wednesday. The black leaders, including several clergymen and a state legislator, called for Hayakawa's resignation, demanded that police be kept off the campus, and offered full support for the demands of the black students who are leading the student strike.

Leaders of other non-white communities in San Francisco, which has sizable groups of Chinese, Japanese, and Mexican-Americans, also supported the student demands. The main student demands are for a Black Studies Department, admission of more minority group students to the college, and reinstatement of George Murray, a Black Panther, to his position as an English instructor.

Both Hayakawa and Mayor Joseph Alioto held meetings with the minority groups leaders during the week but the sessions were not fruitful.

On Friday Hayakawa did announce that the Black Studies Department would be established immediately with 11 faculty positions, fulfilling some of the students' demands. He also agreed to admit more minority group students this spring and next fall, although his offer fell short of the students' demands. He also agreed to admit more minority group students this spring and next fall, although his offer fell short of the students' demand, which is to admit all third-world students who apply next fall.

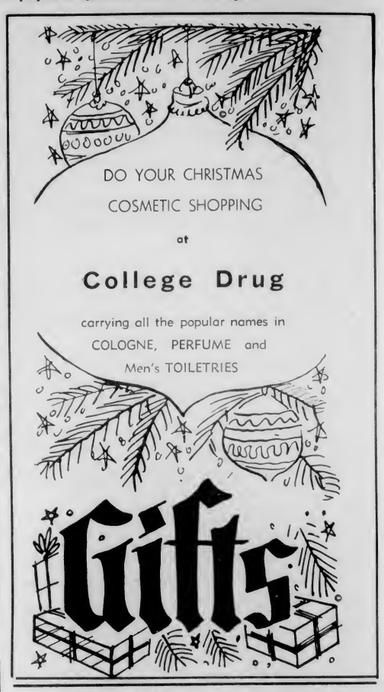
A number of other demands including reinstatement of Murray, amnesty for strikers, and autonomous control of the Black Studies Department by its faculty and students, were rejected, subject to possible negotiation and study later.

As expected, the strike leaders rejected Hayakawa's proposals. They reiterated that their demands are not negotiable and all of them must be fulfilled.

Hayakawa says class attendance has been excellent. It does appear that many students are attending classes in the morning but attendance seems to be dropping off in the afternoon, when all the major confrontations have taken place.

Besides calling in the police, Hayakawa has begun moving against student leaders of the strike and against left wing faculty members. He has suspended 13 students, most of them well-known leaders of the strike.

He denied tenure to William Stanton, an economics professor who has been a strong supporter of the strike, and Patrick Gleeson, an English professor who brought Murray into his department and fought to keep him there when the appointment came under attack by Gov. Ronald Reagan and the trustees of California's State College System. Both will have to leave the college by June of 1970. Hayakawa refused to say why he denied the two professors tenure, despite the recommendations of their departments.



Hayakawa has strong support from both Reagan, a republican and Alioto, a democrat. Reagan said he was "very pleased" classes had been resumed and that "we have found the right man" in Hayakawa. Alioto commended Hayakawa and blamed the campus's troubles on "100 or so troublemakers."

But the Acting President's support is not so strong among faculty and students. Immediately after he was appointed, 150 faculty members formed a group called the Faculty Organization for Responsibility in College Education (FORCE) calling for his removal and a number of other steps to give the college more autonomy from the trustees, who appointed Hayakawa without consulting with the faculty. The AFT local has asked union sanction for a strike.

The faculty senate was planning to propose compromises to try to resolve the issues and end the confrontations. A motion for a vote of confidence in Hayakawa was withdrawn.

The student government, which has been supporting the strike, has also called for Hayakawa's resignation and is planning to ask for a court injunction to keep police off the campus.

Hello Friend To Perform at North Commons

University of Massachusetts Choirs To Present Annual Winter Concert in Bowker Aud.

The Northeast quad will host the Hello Friend Folk Society for their sixth on campus performance this semester from 7:30 - 11:30 p.m., Saturday, December 14, at the North Dining Commons.

Entertainment will be provided by participating Hello Friend performers, from the four college area and beyond, consisting of poetry, jugband and bluegrass music as well as popular traditional and original folksinging in the familiar candlelit coffee and cider Hello Friend atmosphere.

There is no admission fee. Hello Friend performers feel that they can best give an audience that which they do give freely. All are invited to come over to the North Commons Saturday evening at 7:30 and help us conclude what has thus far been a very successful semester.

The University of Massachusetts Chorale, Chorus, and Women's Choir will present a joint Winter Concert at 4:00 p.m. Sunday, December 15, at Bowker Auditorium, University of Massachusetts.

The groups will feature a well-balanced program of fine music, ranging from twelfth century English carols to works by Benjamin Britten and Francis Poulenc of this century.

The University Chorale, an a cappella group directed by Dr. Richard duBois, will sing two sixteenth century pieces, "O Magnum Mysterium" by Victoria, and the breathtaking "Gaudete Omnes" by Sweelinck. The Chorale, which was highly praised in such cities as Chicago, Cincinnati, Philadelphia, and others in its last tour, will also sing Howell's "Spotless Rose," and Poulenc's incredible "Mass in G."

The University Women's Choir is performing two unusual carols, "Lullay my child," an English twelfth century carol, and a fourteenth century "Alleluia!" These works will be accompanied by a recorder trio. Britten's "Missa Brevis in D" will conclude the program for the Women's Choir.

Vivaldi's Gloria will highlight the program. Mr. Alan Harler will direct the University Chorus and orchestra. Featured soloists in this monumental work are soprano Dorothy Ornest, contralto Calliope Shenas of Mt. Holyoke, and Dr. Charles Lehrer, oboist.

This concert is open to the public, free of charge. Following the concert, the public is also invited to a reception in the Commonwealth Room of the Student Union.

The UMass Chorale, Chorus and Women's Choir will combine to present its Annual Winter Concert consisting of works from various centuries from the Twelfth to the Twentieth in the Christmas spirit.

Smith College to Present Plays from Theater of Absurd

The Smith College theatre department graduate students will present a trio of plays from the theatre of the absurd in Sage Hall 2 at 8 p.m. on December 13 and 14 and at 3 p.m. on December 15.

The trio consists of "The Sandbox" by Edward Albee, "Krapp's Last Tape" by Samuel Beckett, and "The Bald Soprano" by Eugene Ionesco. The plays will be directed by Smith graduate assistant, Gregory Jones.

This is the second in a series of graduate student productions.

Two short improvisational scenes by graduate assistant William Cwikowski and "Muzeeka" by John Guare were performed at Smith in October.

The productions are directed by graduate students and the casts are made up of Smith graduate and undergraduate students.

There will be an admission charge of 50¢. Tickets will be sold at the theatre box office, Center for the Performing Arts from 3 to 6 p.m., December 11 through 13.

"Down The Chimney Dick Nixolas Came With A Bound"

BIAFRA - FORGOTTEN

WASHINGTON (CPS) - The news media, after giving the Nigerian war some attention during the summer and early fall, have by now more or less let the matter drop. The stories that do turn up tend to be about minor military encounters or the latest estimates of the number of Biafrans starving each week. Gone are the multi-page, color photo spreads that brought home to Americans what starving children really look like.

Among politicians interest in the Nigerian war, never very high, seems to have fallen to a new low. Even those thought of as enlightened aren't talking about it anymore. Neither Nixon nor Humphrey so much as raised the subject of Biafra during the campaign. Of other major political figures only Ted Kennedy, who made a fine speech about the plight of the Biafrans in September and has made a study of the refugee problem created by the war, has tried to keep the issue alive. Recently he sent letters to Nixon and Johnson urging them to assist relief operations in Biafra.

It would be nice to suppose that the indifference of politicians and news merchants is a reflection of their callousness and corruption, but that is clearly not the case. The fact is that most Americans just plain don't give a s--- about what's happening to the Biafrans. As it is, the small minority of Americans who care very deeply about the Biafrans find themselves unable to have any influence on U.S. policy because their numbers are so few.

The war, however, continues unabated and, in fact, shows every prospect of grinding on until there have been massive new waves of starvation in Biafra. Very likely it will end when the will of the Biafrans has been so broken by the lack of food that those who are still alive will be physically incapable of fighting.

This may be the probable outcome of the war, but opinions vary about what a desirable outcome would be. One opinion is that the sooner the Nigerian federal government achieves a victory, the better. This position is the one held, for example, by African specialists in the U.S. State Department. In the absence of a Nigerian victory, these officials say, they can't recommend U.S. assistance for the Biafrans unless they get the approval of the Nigerian government in Lagos.

Such approval is about as likely as the Kingdom of God on earth, as the State Department people well know. They're committed, however, to the concept of a unified Nigeria, and apparently aren't willing to permit the reality of mass starvations in Biafra to interfere with that particular illusion.

The government did recently set up a special task force, headed by Under Secretary of State Nicholas Katzenbach, to deal with the Biafran problem. This is important, especially since it may make Biafra the subject of public discussion again. Preliminary reports about the task force, though, indicate that it won't be doing anything to relieve the suffering in Biafra until there has been a Nigerian victory. In other words, the task force is a way of making the government appear to be concerned without its having to take the steps that must be taken immediately if the Biafrans are to have any chance of survival.

INSIDE REPORT:

KENNEDY AT TREASURY?

by Rowland Evans and Robert Novak

WASHINGTON--Chicago banker David Kennedy, a politically inactive Republican deeply concerned with providing private capital for rebuilding the Negro ghettoes, has moved past better known names to the top of the list of possibilities for Secretary of the Treasury.

Although no firm decision has been made at President-elect Nixon's headquarters in Manhattan's Hotel Pierre, Kennedy is today the strongest possibility for what may be the most critical post in the Nixon Cabinet. What's more, he has quiet but influential support from Capitol Hill and the financial community.

Kennedy, 63, chief executive officer of Chicago's Continental Illinois National Bank since 1959, is considered a moderate with special interest in low-cost housing and black capitalism. Although his overall economic views are not clearly enunciated, he is by no means one of the banking community's rigid budget balancers and is even a liberal by bankers' standards.

Thus, the mere fact that Kennedy has entered the final days of Nixon's Cabinet considerations may pose deep disappointment for Republican Bourbons who had been hoping for the return of a latter-day Mellon to the Treasury even at the price of recession and unemployment.

On Monday, for instance, a leading right-wing Republican, Rep. John Ashbrook of Ohio, chairman of the American conservative union, suggested Nixon choose from two men for the Treasury post: George Champion, just retired as head of the Chase Manhattan Bank, or financier Maurice Stans, President Eisenhower's last budget director and most tenacious budget balancer. Both practice super-orthodox Republican economics.

In fact, however, neither Champion nor Stans has ever had much chance for the Treasury spot (though Stans' Herculean campaign fund-raising efforts for Nixon almost surely will win him some Cabinet post). Nor is Peter Flanigan, New York businessman and veteran Nixon political lieutenant, likely to realize his ambition of becoming Secretary of the Treasury though he may end up as Under Secretary.

Rather, Nixon talent scouts have been looking for a prestige appointment who is liberal enough to satisfy proponents of the New Economics and conservative enough to reassure Wall Street--a description perfectly filled by New York banker David Rockefeller. But because of indications that Rockefeller may not want to leave Chase Manhattan now that he has succeeded Champion as top man there, Nixon is looking elsewhere. Accordingly, David Kennedy has come into the picture.

His credentials are impressive. After spending 16 years in Washington on the staff of the Federal Reserve Board, Kennedy went to Chicago in 1946 to begin his association with Continental Illinois. He returned for two years early in the Eisenhower administration to serve as assistant to the Secretary of the Treasury with responsibility for funding the debt.

Inactive in politics, Kennedy was considered among the possibilities to be President Johnson's Secretary of the Treasury in early 1965 but was not approached. However, Mr. Johnson did tap him last year as chairman of a special commission on reforming the Federal Budget. It was from that experience that Kennedy's present high reputation in Washington is principally derived.

Although Federal bureaucrats first regarded him with suspicion, they came to respect Kennedy's leadership. Specifically, he was able to win approval of the commission report by commission members ranging from Rep. Frank Bow of Ohio on the right to then Budget Director Charles Schultze on the left. Congressmen were particularly impressed by Kennedy's toughness in standing up to the Treasury against gimmickry in the reformed budget.

What is known is his total commitment to siphoning private capital into the center cities. Indeed, Continental Illinois has been a pioneer of the private economy in attacking the nation's top domestic problem.

Christmas Sing

To the Editor:

As a member of the Class of '72, I would like to personally invite the University community to participate in the Christmas Sing being sponsored by my class on Sunday, December 15.

People have traditionally celebrated Christmas by congregating in various activities, meaningful to the spirit of the holiday. Friendship is a part of Christmas spirit, and caroling has long been one such activity in which friends have come together to celebrate Christmas.

In sponsoring this event, the Class of '72 is giving all of us the chance to participate in the tradition of caroling; a tradition of friendship. And, as the freshman are emphasizing the theme of "inter-religious and inter-racial" participation, it is truly an occasion for ALL of us to take part.

Actually, the Christmas Sing is only part of a whole Sunday afternoon and evening of Christmas celebration. At four-thirty, the Christmas Concert will be presented in Bowker Auditorium. The Christmas Sing follows at six-thirty and that evening at seven-thirty the freshman are also sponsoring a campus-wide Talent Show, featuring a door prize, free refreshment, and a "novel" idea in free admission.

Again I would like to say that Christmas Sing offers the University community an excellent opportunity to get with the spirit of Christmas.

Come and Sing!

Pitiful Prose

To the Editor:

The editorial in Monday's COLLEGIAN condemning the Geology 101 course contained some of the worst English prose I have ever read. Evidently, there is something wrong with the basic courses in the English department. Perhaps many departments besides Geology have skeletons in their closets, and are presenting sub-standard courses to students in the name of a "liberal education".

Don Birkholz

Prof Who Cares

To the Editor:

This is a reply to Ernest Reis' editorial of December 9, on "The Relevancy of Requirements".

Mr. Reis' general statement about course requirements seems to have gotten lost in his criticism of Geology 101. No one is required to take Geology 101, except those in Geology or related fields such as Landscape Architecture or Wildlife & Fisheries Biology. Most departments have several alternatives to fulfill requirements.

Mr. Reis uses the word, hobby, in regard to this teacher's career. I do not feel this term applies and in fact is used in poor taste. But isn't it true that people are usually more interested in and enthusiastic about a hobby than something they are required to do. Unfortunately, not everyone is able to express his enthusiasm to others. I have had this instructor, both as a lecturer and as a lab instructor and I have seen how enthusiastic he is about his subject. Furthermore, I do not believe the University would have an instructor teach a subject he was not qualified to teach.

I think Mr. Reis would have profited more by facing his instructor with constructive criticism rather than writing with irrational anger and/or frustration in a newspaper.

By the way, I'm not a Geology major. Geology 101 fulfilled one of my science requirements. I'm glad I took Geology 101 because it introduced me to one of the few teachers I have had who has shown some genuine interest in his course.

A Former Geology 101 Student

WANTS FRANK MUSIC REVIEWS

To the Editor:

In his recent reviews of two campus musical events, James Wade has demonstrated an inability to say anything perceptive about a performance. Both of his reviews were inflated with tired cliches, meaningless drivel, and half-hearted attempts at inoffensive criticism. One review opens with the following cryptic sentence: "Brahms and Berg were the two most musically represented composers in last Tuesday night's faculty recital." If this means anything, I apologize; but Mr. Wade did not bother to explain the remark.

We are then told that the audience was "enthusiastically large." Come again?! Or, how about this one: the work was "colored with typical Bernstein genius." Are we all supposed to know what "typical Bernstein genius" is? "The overall sound was one of concentrated communication with both the audience and the composer's intentions." How does one communicate with an intention? The playing of the Brahms trio was "Compassionate." Compassion for whom? In the Handel MESSIAH, we are told, "the orchestra's playing was one of mastery and sufficient musicianship. Intonation was always observed as was depth." I have found no one who has the slightest idea as to what the last two sentences mean.

Furthermore, we are treated to such expressions as "sculptured phrases," "heavenly music burst through the air," and, worst of all, "the trio was celestial in the slow movements of the Brahms." Such drivel might have been written by any hack who once studied under a pupil of Bennett Cerf, and is certainly not appropriate to an article which purports to be a responsible criticism.

Perhaps more serious than the preceding offenses is the fact that Mr. Wade said practically nothing about the performances. If Mr. Wade is a music major, we can understand that he might be reluctant to say anything bad about one of his teachers. He fails to mention the clarinetist's intonation or tone (which was, unfortunately, inappropriately bland during much of the performance.) Although Mr. Wade does admit the "clarinet was at times overshadowed," the fact is that during three-fourths of the Brahms Trio, the clarinet was almost inaudible.

Further offenses and half-truths (and there are more) will not be listed here. If Mr. Wade wants to criticize, let him do so frankly and honestly or not at all.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP)– Twenty Negro girl students at Radcliffe College demonstrated Tuesday to back up demands for more consideration for Negroes at the female adjunct to Harvard College.

Sophomore Rita Fletcher of Washington, D.C., a spokesman for the Ad Hoc Committee of Black Students, said the group wants at least 30 Negro girls admitted next year, a black admissions officer, and other pledges from President Mary A. Bunting.

Mrs. Bunting was away at a conference in Durham, N.C., and will reply to the demands later, a school spokesman said.

UMass Professor Retires After 38 Years Service

A 38 year career of service to the University of Massachusetts ended recently with the retirement of Dr. Emmett Bennett, research professor of biochemistry in the department of forestry and wildlife management.

DR. EMMETT BENNETT

Professor Emeritus Bennett's last two years were spent with the UMass-U.S. Agency for International Development (AID) team in Malawi. He was assigned to Malawi's new Bunda Agricultural College as a chemistry teacher and found himself serving also as volunteer librarian and track coach.

An Ohio native who graduated from Ohio State University in 1929, Prof. Bennett joined the UMass staff in 1930 as a researcher with the Massachusetts Agricultural Experiment Station. He received his M.S. in chemistry from the University in 1934 and his Ph.D. in agricultural and biological chemistry from Pennsylvania State University in 1950.

Prof. Bennett has been active in chemical and professional societies and is a member of the honoraries Sigma Xi and Phi Lambda Upsilon. He is the author of many publications on a variety of topics in agricultural biochemistry. He has been a Hampshire-Franklin County Boy Scout district commissioner, a member of the UMass Graduate School Council, and president of UMass chapter of Sigma Xi.

Christmas Comes to Prague Dispite Recent Soviet Invasion

PRAGUE (AP) - The struggle is continuing in czechoslovakia between old guard, Soviet-model communism and "socialism with a human face," but Christmas seems here to stay.

And it is a Western-style Christmas rather than the "Red Christmas" the proletarian winter holiday that leaders tried to sell almost a generation of Czechs and Slovaks.

Decorated Christmas trees and bells have replaced portraits of government and party figures in smart show windows on Wonceslas Square and Narodni Boulevard in downtown Prague. Snowflake designs, angels and the words of old Christmas carols appear in places that had political slogans a few months back, when Soviet troops were still in the cities.

For the first time in two decades, major cities have tall community Christmas trees.

Wives of top Communist leaders were invited to the tree lighting at Republic Square and to participate in collections for an orphanage. This was unthinkable in the Stalinist days, when charity collections were discouraged as an admission of social problems.

"I am not so religious but I think references to the Bible and religion are good signs of normalization in our country," a woman said.

In the cities perhaps one person in 10 is regarded as a regular churchgoer but Christmas services bring throngs of people to the Protestant and Roman Catholic churches.

Area police officers attending Breathalyzer course being run at University of Massachusetts' Boyden Building under a federal program administered by state police are shown observing operation of device which measures percentage of alcohol in a driver's breath. Left to right: Patrolmen Edwin M. Padeck, Robert J. Torpey and Leonard J. Helems Jr., all of the Northampton Police Department; State Police Sgt. John D. Ashe of Troop B, and Sgt. Philip J. Cavanaugh and Officer Francis X. Mazzei of the UMass police force.

Police Throughout State Take "Breathalyzer" Courses at UM

The 11th in a series of "Breathalyzer" training courses for police throughout the state, with officers from several area communities, state troopers and University of Massachusetts police enrolled, ends today at the university's Boyden Building.

The 40-hour course, conducted by state police officers under a federal grant and known as the Massachusetts Alcohol Project, is designed to instruct police officers in all communities of the state with populations of over 2,000 in the operation of the Breathalyzer, a chemical-electronic device which measures the percentage of alcohol in a person's breath.

Eventually, under the same federal grant, all such communities which have at least six police officers trained to operate the Breathalyzer will receive one of the machines and be equipped to analyze, scientifically, the sobriety (or lack of it) of suspected drunken drivers.

The course, like the other 10 conducted under the project, is being directed by Sgt. Robert J. Fountain of Quincy, who is stationed at Department of Public Safety headquarters, 100 Commonwealth Ave., Boston. He is being assisted in the present course by Sgt. Wallace J. Jefferson of Hanover, also stationed at State Police headquarters.

The 30 plus officers attending the current course, which began Monday, are receiving complete instructions on the Breathalyzer, its mechanics, chemistry theory and operation, as well as talks by guest lecturers in medicine and law and by Dr. Arthur McBay, state chemist.

The courses, which will eventually train between 550 and 600 police officers, began last August and will be concluded about June 1, according to Sgt. Fountain. Massachusetts is one of 11 states taking part in the federal project. Six state police officers are involved as instructors in the courses.

The Breathalyzer electronically measures color changes in a chemical solution through which a person's breath is blown, and a meter indicates the result in percentage of alcohol. Any amount over 15/100ths of one per cent means that the person is "presumed to be under the influence," according to the state law which established breath testing as a long-awaited substitute for former standards of judging drivers' sobriety-staggering, slurred speech, etc.

In this area Chicopee, Holyoke, Westfield, Northampton, Greenfield, and West Springfield will have six officers trained in use of the Breathalyzer if all the men taking the present course complete it satisfactorily. Springfield will have 12 men trained in use of the device, and other communities in Western Mass. which have three trained officers include South Hadley, Wilbraham and Agawam. The University of Massachusetts has four of its campus police now capable of operating the devices, and 11 state troopers from Troop B, with headquarters in Northampton, have completed the course.

The federal government, on completion of the present Alcohol Project, may repeat the program for communities with under 20,000 population, so that eventually all towns in the state will have their own Breathalyzers and men trained to operate them.

Violinist Julian Olevsky Featured In Mount Holyoke Orchestra Concert

Concert violinist Julian Olevsky will be the featured soloist and Ronald Steele the conductor at the University of Massachusetts-Mount Holyoke Symphony Orchestra concert Wednesday, Dec. 18, at 8:15 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium, open to the public without charge.

An internationally-acclaimed violin virtuoso, Mr. Olevsky has appeared with most of the major U.S. symphony orchestras. The former pupil of famed violinist and teacher Alexander Petschnikoff has also performed with the leading orchestras in Europe and has toured the Orient twice for concert appearances. He joined the UMass faculty in 1967 as a resident artist.

Conductor Steele, UMass assistant professor of music, started the orchestra in 1963 as a 27-piece string ensemble. He has conducted the Michigan All-State Orchestra, sponsored by the University of Michigan, for the past two summers at the National Music Camp at Interlochen. Mr. Steele had previously appeared there as guest conductor during the winter season with the Interlochen Arts Academy Orchestra and recently was guest conductor of the Lansing (Michigan) Symphony.

Mr. Steele will also conduct two symphony orchestras and three bands at the Midwestern Music Festival this summer at the University of Kansas. His name appears in the 1969 editions of "Who's Who in the East" and "Who's Who in Music."

Mr. Olevsky will join with the 90-piece orchestra to perform three movements from Tchaikowsky's Concerto in D Major for Violin and Orchestra, Opus 35, at the UMass concert.

The concert will be the first appearance of the University-Mount Holyoke Symphony Orchestra. Formerly called the University of Massachusetts Symphony Orchestra, the new name represents a merger with musicians from Mount Holyoke that took place this fall. Musicians from Amherst and Smith Colleges as well as residents of the area cummunities also perform with the group.

Northeast Coordinator To Present Marathon

The Counselors of the Northeast Area have been invited to participate in a "Human Awareness Training Marathon", according to Michael West, Northeast Area Coordinator.

The Marathon, presented by the Area Coordinator's office, the Advisory Committee on Counselor Training, and the counselor trainers from the Northeast Area, is an attempt to give counselors an opportunity to participate in, and experience first hand, problems in human communication, counseling, advising, and interpreting some of the University's regulations and policies. "In addition to this," West said, "it's an attempt to explore new methods of counselor and staff training, and selection of new counselors.

Each counselor attending the Marathon will have an opportunity to be involved in a communications problem, a micro-corridor meeting, and a micro-counseling session. "The latter two," according to Jim Collins, Assistant Area Coordinator, "are similar to the micro-teaching concept developed by the School of Education. It's the micro-teaching idea applied to the situations that counselors face daily in their residence halls."

Of interest to those attending the Marathon will be an opportunity for immediate feedback, in all of the problems, from resource personnel, and closed circuit video tape equipment.

Randy Trost, Wisconsin '67

"I never feel like a rookie"

"Sure it's my first year with B&W, but I've been too busy to think about that. I've been working in my field all along, and the training sort of blends right in."

If Randy Trost sounds like a B&W booster, you should hear what his supervisor says about him.

We're looking for aggressive, talented young engineers like Randy. We want you if you want significant responsibility from the start. In fact, we need more engineers than ever before. That's because we're growing faster. Sales were $560 million last year. Up 17 per cent.

That's how it's been from the beginning. We started out making steam generation equipment. That led to atomic power stations, nuclear marine propulsion equipment, refractories, specialty steel, machine tools, computers, and closed-circuit TV. (And we still make the best boiler in America.)

If you'd like to talk with Randy Trost about B&W, call him collect at our facility in Lynchburg, Virginia, AC 703 846-7361.

In the meantime, be on the lookout for the B&W recruiter when he visits your campus.

Dr. Menz Awarded Dramatics Prizes

One of the most distinguished literature awards in Germany has been awarded to University of Massachusetts Professor Egon Menz at a recent ceremony in Berlin, Germany.

Dr. Menz, an assistant professor in the department of Germanic languages and literature received one of two Gerhart Hauptmann Prizes awarded for 1968 to outstanding dramatists. The prize will be shared with another dramatist yet to be named.

Earlier this year, Prof. Menz received the Schiller Memorial Prize for his first play "Die Tubinger Mahlzeit" at a public ceremony in Stuttgart, Germany. That prize consisted of an award of 7,500 German marks (or about $1500).

Dr. Menz joined the UMass staff this fall as an assistant professor and teaches German language courses. He was graduated from the University of Tubingen (Germany) with a B.A. degree. He received his Ph. D. degree last summer. He taught in Germany for 15 months before coming to the United States.

Food Festival Will be Held At School of Ed.

The annual presentation of National dishes by the International Club will be held at the School of Education Cafeteria on the occasion of "MARATHON 2".

Foreign and American students, national clubs, host families and the people of the community have been invited to present their national dishes. With the Club's purpose of promoting cultural understanding among Foreign and American students, the "Food Festival" will carry out such purpose through the different dishes being presented. Students are requested to wear their National costumes that will highlight the affair.

Everyone is cordially invited to attend the "Food Festival" on the 17th of December at 6:00 or 7:00 p.m. (2 sittings). In conjunction with this dinner, there will be an all day sample snack from around the world in the International "Taste-In", School of Education "Taste-In" room.

UMass Joins Notre Dame In Deep Sea Exploration

Deep sea exploration and technology will be spotlighted by the University of Massachusetts and University of Notre Dame engineers and scientiests Friday and Saturday (Dec. 13-14) at Notre Dame's Center for Continuing Education in a symposium on "Engineering for the Deep Ocean."

Jointly sponsored by UMass and Notre Dame and under the technical supervision of the Undersea Programs of the Office of Naval Research, the symposium will focus on Project Themis, an interdisciplinary study of deep sea submersibles.

The two universities were among 41 institutions in the nation to receive Project Themis contracts from the U. S. Department of Defense last year.

The UMass contract, totaling $540,000 for three years, deals with an interdisciplinary study of deep sea submersibles, and involves 14 faculty members from the School of Engineering. They are working in research areas such as propulsion and energy conversion, materials and materials processing, navigation and control, submersible structures, hydrodynamics, physical oceanography, and information management and systems optimization.

The University of Notre Dame received a Themis contract similar in nature to the UMass project. The purpose of the joint conference is to exchange information among faculty members at the two institutions and to acquaint leaders of outside agencies as to the progress of the work at the two universities.

The program is managed at U-Mass by Dr. Kenneth G. Picha, Dean of the School of Engineering, and Dr. Charles E. Carver Jr., professor of civil engineering. Program managers at Notre Dame are Dr. Joseph C. Hogan, Dean of the College of Engineering, and Dr. Harry C. Saxe, chairman of the department of engineering.

Ten UMass engineers will meet with their counterparts at Notre Dame to exchange research information and to review and explain the work being done on Project Themis before Navy Department officials and representatives from Westinghouse, Grumman, Lockheed and Electric Boat Division of General Dynamics.

Keynote speaker for the symposium is underwater explorer Dr. Jacques Piccard, designer and operator of the first deep sea underwater vessel, the "Bathyscaph," and its famous successor, the "Trieste." He will discuss his newly designed submersible, the "Benjamin Franklin," that was built by the Grumman Aircraft Engineering Corp., for whom he is special consultant in advanced oceans systems. Dr. Piccard will soon board the vessel with six other engineers and scientists to drift for six months from Florida to Cape Cod in an effort to study the Gulf Stream.

Other speakers will also discuss various phases of submergent vehicles and underwater research during the two-day symposium. The conference is expected to become an annual event with next year's meeting to be held at UMass.

Prof. Seligman Elected To '69 IRRA Exec Board

Professor Ben B. Seligman, Director of the Labor Relations and Research Center at the University of Massachusetts, has been elected to the Executive Board of the Industrial Relations Research Association for the three year period of 1969 - 1971.

The IRRA is the major professional association in the industrial relations field, counting among its members academic persons, arbitrators, business representatives and trade union personnel. It meets twice annually to discuss current issues in the field of labor and industrial relations.

Prof. Seligman, who is also a professor of economics at UMass, played a major role in the First World Congress of the International Industrial Relations Association in Geneva, Switzerland in 1967, and this past summer was on assignment in South America for the Organization of American States.

A 1934 graduate of Brooklyn College, Prof. Seligman was awarded one of four Citations of Honor from that institution last June. He has published four books on subjects dealing with poverty and economics this year.

A New Jersey native, Prof. Seligman was director of the Retail Clerks International Association, AFL-CIO and was a lecturer at Brooklyn College before being appointed to the University of Massachusetts in 1965.

Ofer to Speak On Mid-East

The Honorable Moshe Ofer, Consul General of Israel in Boston, will address a meeting sponsored by the Five-College Chapter of the American Professors for Peace in the Middle East and Hillel Foundations.

The event, open to the public, will be held at 8 p.m. Thursday, in room 120 of the School of Business Administration at the University of Massachusetts. His topic will be "Middle East Realities: 1968."

Ofer assumed his post of Consul General of Israel in Boston after a four-year term of office in Zurich as Consul General of Israel in Switzerland. He joined the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Israel in 1949. He served for a term as personal assistant to Ambassador Abba Eban at the Israeli Embassy in Washington. During the War of Independence, Ofer served as a pilot with the rank of captain with the Israeli air force.

The Five-College Chaper of the American Porfessors for Peace in the Middle East, a group of some 120 faculty members in the Five-College area, was formed last November to disseminate objective information on the Middle East situation and to contribute to the quest for peace in that troubled area.

UMass Physics Dept. Holds Lecture Series

The University of Massachusetts department of physics and astronomy has announced its third Commonwealth Lecture Series, to be given on Dec. 10, 11, 17, 18 at 4 p.m. in room 126 of Hasbrouck Laboratory by Norman F. Ramsey, Higgins Professor of Physics at Harvard University.

The four lectures will deal with molecular beam resonance experiments, atomic hydrogen maser, hunting the neutron electric dipole moment and the 200 BeV accelerator.

Prof. Ramsey has been identified with many experiments of fundamental significance over the past 30 years. He has made contributions in the area of atomic and molecular beam spectroscopy and is the author of a textbook on the subject. His research on stored atom techniques resulted in the atomic hydrogen maser, a frequency standard of unprecedented stability.

Prof. Ramsey has also played important roles in the programs of the Harvard 150 MeV cyclotron and the 6 BeV Cambridge Electron Accelerator. He guided the formation of the National Accelerator Laboratory at Westo, Ill., which will be the site of the largest accelerator in the world. In this connection, Prof. Ramsey serves as President of the Universities Research Association, which manages the organization for this laboratory.

In addition, Prof. Ramsey served as Science Advisor to NATO, and as Chairman of a Presidential Science Board to recommend priorities for the long range support of high energy physics. He is a member of the National Academy of Sciences.

Leaman Ponders Starting Five For UNH

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
Sports
VOL. XCVII NO. 65
THURSDAY, DECEMBER 12, 1968

DiSareiner Questionable Chapman Could Get Nod

by STEVE ROSS
Day Editor

For the first time in more than a month, Jack Leaman gave his crew a day off. After Tuesday's hard-earned win against URI most Redmen fan's agreed it was agood move. Leaman took advantage of the off-day and scouted the UConn-UNH clash at Durham, N.H. UNH is at the Cage on Saturday, and the Redmen travel to Storrs, to meet the Huskies next Tuesday.

Tuesday's win put the UMass five in to first place in the Yankee Conference. The Redmen boast a 2-0 mark in the loop. If they can get through the next week unscathed, they will have a 5-0 conference mark and be tough to catch. Maine will be the third opponent at Oreno, a week from tonight.

Leaman doesn't know whether star playmaker Joe DiSarcina will be available for Saturday's game. DiSarcina had to return to his Burlington home because of the death of his father.

"The game Tuesday was dedicated to Joey", Leaman remarked, "Our slow start may have been caused by the fact that we were pressing too hard in an effort to do our best." He added, "We still haven't put together an entire game. Except for the AIC game we've only been sharp in the second half." Against the Aces, UMass built up a 16 point lead at intermission, and won by eight.

A toughdecision the UMass coach will have to make between now and Saturday is his starting forwards. Sub Dennis Chapman came off the bench to pour in 18 points to pace the win. Without Chapman's spectacular outside shooting, it is doubtful that the Redmen could have pulled out the win.

Chapman also did a spectacular job definsively. He played URI star John Fultz so tightly in the second half, the 6'6 forward could manage only four points. Leaman must think seriously before leaving the 6'4 junior on the bench at the start of the UNH game.

Thus far, the Redmen are undefeated, Rhode Island, Connecticut, and Vermont, the three teams that figure to give them a tough time for the Conference title, have looked anything but impressive. Slowly, but surely, the feeling grows that the Redmen may make a joke out of the Conference race. It may not happen, but it sure is a nice think to dream about.

TWO FROM DOWNTOWN - UMass star forward Dennis Chapman pops in two of his 18 points. URI's Joe Zaranka attempts to block the shot. (MDC photo by John Kelly)

Matmen Pin Lord Jeffs

The UMass wrestling team ran their record to 2-1 with a convincing 44-5 win at Amherst last night. Coach Homer Barr called the win, "The finest meet we've had thus far this year. I was really satisfied."

No less than six Redmen pinned their Lord Jeffrey opponents. Dave Wade (123), Phil Davis (130), Tom Andrews (167), Bob Wilman (177), Tim Perkins (191) and T o m Callahan (unlimited) did the trick. Perkins won in 74 seconds.

Brian Urquhart (145), M i k e Brauner (152), and Tom Young (160) all won their matches by decision.

In the preliminary, the Little Redmen won their second straight, to remain undefeated by a lopsided 43-8 score. SR DE VICTORIOUS GRAPPLER - Tom Young, star wrestler in the 160 pound division, removed his glasses and whaled his opponent. Young, however, was not the only winner for the Redmen in last night's meet at Amherst.

1968 UMASS CROSS COUNTRY TEAM - Bottom row: Dave Eiben, Ron Wayne, Bill Donaldson, Charlie Lang, Lee Duart, Tom Derderian, Marc Gelinas. Junior Co-Captains For Cross Country Team

Duart And Wayne To Lead Harriers During 69

On Tuesday, the varsity cross country team officially closed their 1968 season with the team's annual banquet.

The team members at the banquet view films taken throughout the season by coach Ken O'Brien. The films showed the team as they moved through an eight win two loss dual meet season, a second place in the conference meet, a third in the New England champfonships, 16th in the IC4A, and 20th in the NCAA. Although comprised mostly of sophomores, the team ran down its opposition after being topped by Harvard in the season opener and being stopped by UConn in the fourth meet. From this 2-2 record the team jelled and scored six straight wins. The sophs joined the experienced seniors Paul Hoss, Charlie Lang, Marc Gelinas, and Diego Gonzalez to produce a winning combination.

Two of the seniors, Paul Hoss and Charlie Lang, led the team as co-captains. Both turned out to be good leaders a s well as top performers. Hoss was lost to the team early in the season due to a knee injury but he still added inspirational leadership during the season. Lang, coming back from a severe case of mono last spring, fought his way back into shape and proved a top team leader on and off the field.

At the banquet, Coach O'Brien presented the Llewelyn Derby Award to the man considered by his teammates as a top runner and hard worker. This year's recipient was senior Marc Gelinas. In presenting the award the coach explained, "He really came through when we found Paul (Hoss) was lost for the season." Gelinas ran as third man on the team most of the season and ran real well in the big races.

Outgoing captain Charlie Lang then announced that sophs Ron Wayne and Leo Duart would lead the team as co-captains next year. Wayne and Duart supplied the Redmen harriers with their one-two punch this season, as the two sophs ranked with the top runners around. Wayne won the conference meet with Duart getting sixth. In the New Englands Wayne placed second and Duart seventh. As Lang siad these two runners "will be good leaders" for the team next season.

The coach concluded the banquet by thanking the team for a good season. He had special thanks for his new assistant coach Gary Schwartz, team manager Chuck Schultz, and Dale Toohey who has helped the team during the season. The team would probably also thank Coach O'Brien for the commendable record he amassed in his first season as head coach for cross country at UMass.

Cabinet Members to Have Freedom in Choosing Staffs

William Scranton, passed over for a cabinet post, has just completed a fact finding tour for the President-elect.

WASHINGTON (AP) - President-elect Nixon gave the members of his Republican Cabinet broad authority Thursday to seek and select their own top assistants-but indicated he will retain vote power.

"The final approval would have to be given by the president," said Herbert G. Klein, Nixon's director of communications.

But Klein said Nixon told the 12 Cabinet officers they can select their own deputy and assistant secretaries and other top aides.

The president-elect, his chosen White House assistants, and the Cabinet team met in the Board Room of Washington's Shoreham Hotel.

Late in the day, Nixon, his wife and daughter Tricia, were to go to the White House for a call on President Johnson.

It was an eight-hour day of lectures, briefings, questions and answers.

About 75 people were on hand for the hotel session, among them the wives of the president-elect and the Cabinet choices.

Klein said Nixon opened the meeting by urging that the Cabinet "follow up heavily on his concept that this be an open government."

He said the president-elect then urged that, as Cabinet officers select their deputies and assistants, they look not for the immediate impact of an appointment but for men who "would be hailed for their work six months or a year from now."

William P. Rogers, Nixon's secretary of state-designate, brought to the conference the best wishes of former President Dwight D. Eisenhower.

Klein said Rogers met with Eisenhower recently at Walter Reed Army Hospital and the former president "made himself available to confer with other Cabinet officers.

Nixon plans to return to Washington Monday for a meeting with Republican legislative leaders. He is to receive a report from former Pennsylvania Gov. William W. Scranton Friday on a fact-finding mission to the trouble Middle East, also plans to meet at his New York headquarters with John W. Gardner and other leaders of the Urban Coalition.
